The NHS must take a disciplined approach toward deciding what its priorities are and then use the resources available to it to deliver those priorities. The Secretary of State has to give a lead in that process, but it must involve the whole service. There will always be those doctors who say, "That is a matter for politicians. You set up a committee to decide what we should or should not prescribe," but the fact is that the process has to involve the whole service, including the Secretary of State. I commend the Secretary of State on his work on developing ideas for improved assessment of quality and effectiveness in the delivery of health care. I think it fair to say that that work develops some of the ideas in "A Service with Ambitions"—to pick up the point made by the hon. Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Gunnell) about the ambitions for the health service. One of the purposes of "A Service with Ambitions" was to encourage development of new ideas on the measurement and monitoring of quality through the NHS, which is something that we sought to develop when we were in office.

The Secretary of State was kind enough to refer to the development of paediatric intensive care units as being one of the differences of nuance between me and my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Surrey. I take the strong view that it is hard to think of a higher priority in the delivery of health care than the provision of high-quality intensive care treatment to very sick children. I said that I thought that such care ought to have a very high priority.

It is also necessary to make decisions that are less popular than others. At the end of the previous Parliament, I was responsible for confirming the screening committee's decision that we should not run a national prostate cancer screening programme because the case for that was not as strong as the equivalent case for women on breast cancer screening and it would not have represented a good use of NHS resources on a properly prioritised basis.

Those are two examples of decisions that I made. I am prepared to acknowledge that I left behind unfinished business. One example is in vitro fertilisation. An orthodoxy developed that IVF is a luxury. I never shared that view. If we take the view that health care ought to be available to people on the basis of clinical need, not ability to pay, I do not understand the argument that an infertile couple should be able to have a baby if they can afford private IVF treatment but the infertile couple who cannot afford IVF, but whose clinical status is such that it has a reasonable chance of success, cannot have a baby. I do not agree with that argument. Deciding such priorities is one of the remaining challenges for the health service.

Another example that is increasingly covered in the literature is access to kidney dialysis. Historically, the priority attached by the health service to the development of easy-access dialysis units is not, in my view, as high as the clinical priority would justify. I have offered the Minister of State two less comfortable examples of difficult questions that the Government must face. They must ensure that questions of priority and clinical standards are decided.

I conclude my remarks about priority by underlining the point that we cannot leave the medical profession out of those decisions. We cannot allow to develop the frame of mind that such decisions are for politicians and managers, and that the health authorities must simply provide lists of what resources are available. Of course, guidance can be given and an emphasis suggested, and I have said that that is what the Secretary of State should do, but in the end the judgment of the clinical priority of one patient against that of another must involve the patients' clinicians, particularly their doctors. The overwhelming majority of doctors want to work in a tax-funded service where clinical priorities determine the use of resources, so they must be involved in making those decisions.

Finally, I come to the issue that is critical to the efficient use of resources in the health service: the importance of ensuring that decisions are made as locally as possible. As I have said, I have read the White Paper and I agree with much of its content, but there is some with which I disagree. It builds on the approach that we adopted in government, and I do not deny that some changes still needed to be made when we left office.

I am particularly pleased, since I was given such stick at the time, that the Secretary of State is wholly unpersuaded by the Labour party's rhetoric about the two-tier service. If different primary care groups are making different decisions about their priorities, it is, of course, inevitable that some groups will be more successful than others. Inevitably, the care available to the patients of one group will be, in some respects, different from the care available to those of another group. That is the purpose of having different groups. People in the health service can then find new means of delivering care and order their priorities to reflect those of their patients.

I regret that fundholding is to end. Primary care groups would have been more successful if membership of them had been voluntary, but I certainly do not disagree with the idea behind such groups. I could hardly do so because they were made possible by the National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997, for which I was responsible. If those ideas are to work, the Secretary of State must allow different groups of local managers in different parts of the health service to reach different conclusions. Otherwise, it is all a sham. There will be local variety in priorities and ideas, and that must be reflected.

My central argument is that if we continue to develop the health service on the path that has proven successful in its first 50 years, that success story should be supported on both sides of the House. There are those who say that the problems that have existed since the day the health service was founded have suddenly become insoluble, and I fear that those people are in danger of proving yet again the truth of the old adage that to every difficult problem there is a solution that is simple, obvious and wrong.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): The right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) is genuine Front-Bench material and I am sure that he will have every chance of replacing the lady of the night if he keeps up his form. I was interested in his notion, with which I broadly agree, that infertile people have a right to treatment because infertility is an illness. I wonder what he thinks about the similar problem of impotence and whether impotent people should have the right to take Viagra. Perhaps he can tell us about that on another occasion.

It is a genuine privilege to participate in this historic debate to celebrate 50 years of the people's national health service, which was set up by the people's party—old Labour. The last time I intervened in the House on the subject of health, I was accused of being a new Labour crawler when I praised the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Health for their heroic decision to save St. Bartholomew's hospital and suggested that the Secretary of State would find himself in the pantheon of the gods when the definitive history of the world came to be written. It is not my fault that we have a wildly popular and hugely effective Secretary of State.

A few weeks ago, the Secretary of State went to a dinner given by the alumni of St. Bartholomew's hospital and the medical college. He told us that his son had said to him, "Come on, Dad, tell the truth. By the time you retire, what will you have done that you could tell people had affected the world and done some good?" My right hon. Friend said that he had thought long and hard and eventually said, "I have saved St. Bartholomew's hospital." Even as he spoke, all the alumni, professors and consultants leapt from their seats, as though an electric charge had gone around the room, and cheered and cheered. That is the kind of popularity that we want our Ministers to have. Old Labour or new Labour: this is our health service and today we rejoice.

The hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) claimed that Beveridge had thought of and created the health service. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman has many good features—he is probably kind to animals and, for all I know, he loves children—but he is a rotten historian. I have here what is probably the definitive biography of William Beveridge by José Harris, which concentrates for most of its 500 pages on the Beveridge report of 1942 and all its complexities. Its main source is no fewer than 500 boxes of Beveridge's personal papers, which were deposited in the British library of political science.

Harris's conclusion about the argument that we are having tonight is that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is right and the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey and the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) are wrong. On page 459—this is the definitive judgment—he says:

"He"—

Beveridge—

"was rather embarrassed by his reputation as 'father of the welfare state' . . . He was even more embarrassed when people referred to him as creator of the National Health Service—insisting that this term could only be applied to the Labour Minister of Health, Aneurin Bevan."

Mr. Simon Hughes: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Sedgemore: No, the hon. Gentleman has had his say. Beveridge knows his own views better than the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Hughes: If the hon. Gentleman has read all that book and all the other books about Beveridge, he will know perfectly well that Beveridge, because he was modest, was clearly saying that he was happy to be associated with the report, which dealt with many other things, but that, because the detail of the NHS legislation was left to Bevan and others at the beginning of the Government, the model proposed was a Labour creation. He was clearly never embarrassed about the idea.

Mr. Sedgemore: I honestly do not think that the hon. Gentleman understands the complexity of Beveridge's political beliefs. At some times, he was a pure free marketeer; at others, a statist. But on the NHS he was clear—the credit went to Bevan, not to himself. It had nothing to do with modesty; it was due to the fact that he constantly changed his mind about what kind of programme he wanted after he had produced the Beveridge report of 1942. If the hon. Gentleman is claiming that he has read it, I suggest that he re-read it and try to understand words in their ordinary and natural meaning. That is what we lawyers were taught to do, and that is what politicians should try to do.

It is a shame that we will not be having a vote in the House tonight whereby we can condemn Conservative Members for seeking to destroy the NHS with their internal market reforms, which showed that, while they know the price of everything, they understand the value of nothing.

Tory opposition to the creation of the NHS was writ large in the debates in 1946 in the House. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave some examples—I can understand why the right hon. Member for Charnwood does not want to talk about such things—but perhaps I can mention a couple that my right hon. Friend did not mention.

On 1 May 1946, Sir Harold Webbe, Conservative Member for Westminster Abbey, completely lost his marbles, referring to the "deplorable, reactionary, and destructive proposals . . . now before us."

He then had the temerity to compare Nye Bevan to Adolf Hitler when he described the creation of the NHS as a

"hotchpotch of political prejudice . . . and a very large measure of intuition . . . I do not want to remind the Minister that the last leader of men who relied on his intuition is dead and his country in ruins."—[Official Report, 1 May 1946; Vol. 422, c. 271–74.]

Sir Harold, a knight who in argument regularly moved from false premises to false conclusions by way of faulty logic, was unfit to lick Nye Bevan's boots.

Two months later, on Third Reading on 26 July, Mr. Linstead, Conservative Member for Putney, where I used to live, set out to reinvent the Conservative party in its 19th-century image as the Stupid party, when he said

"We find this Bill remote in principle, in practice and in spirit from those conceptions of what a health service should be."—[Official Report, 26 July 1946; Vol. 426, c. 400.]

We have just heard the right hon. Member for Charnwood say that the NHS is the best thing that the world has ever known. That is because those conceptions that were damned by the Tory party in the House in 1946 have survived for 50 years intact and, while Labour stays in power, they will live unto eternity.

Bizarrely—I am sorry that the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald has left the Chamber—the Conservative health team today is led by a person who admits that she is unfit to be Secretary of State for Health. The right hon. Lady is now here, so perhaps I can repeat that. Bizarrely, the Conservative health team today is led by a person who admits that she is unfit to be Secretary of State for Health. Her unfitness stems from shrivelled and irresponsible attitudes based on trashy theology towards sex education in schools, the use of condoms and abortion.

The right hon. Lady's views on condoms stem from an apparent belief that God has ordained that every sperm should have an equal chance of impregnating the egg. I imagine that she goes around from church to church and climbs into the pulpit holding up a placard on which is written, "God believes in equality for sperms. Do you?" My answer is that I do not believe that, and nor can any Secretary of State for Health who is concerned for the health of the nation.

Any Secretary of State for Health has to accept not only that sex is fun, sex is cool, sex is hot, but also that unwanted pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases can destroy people's lives. Those problems, like sex, may be a foreign country in the minds of chilling theologians, but they have to be understood and dealt with by Secretaries of State for Health.

As a member of London Brook, I wonder how the shadow Secretary of State for Health will approach the summer of love project for holidaymakers which the Brook advisory centres intend to run in July and August by giving free advice and condoms to holidaymakers. [Laughter.] The project—not at all laughable actually—is aimed at preventing teenagers from catching sexually transmitted diseases while on holiday and arises out of a recent survey which showed that 24 per cent. of young adults had sex with one or more new partners on holiday, yet most did not use condoms.

I very much hope that, before the next century begins, services that are related to women's rights and that are readily available through the NHS and Government support in England, Wales and Scotland will be made available in Northern Ireland. It is disgraceful that there is little or no sex education in schools in Northern Ireland, and less sex education than in schools in the Irish Republic, and that there is rabid opposition to organisations, such as Belfast Brook, that encourage safe sex through the use of contraceptives. It is equally deplorable that abortion is illegal in that part of the United Kingdom, and that, if Sinn Fein comes out in favour of abortion, as apparently is forecast—that is what we were told when I sat on some adolescent hearings a few weeks ago—it will be the first political party in Northern Ireland to do so. Good luck to Sinn Fein if it has the courage to do that.

[Mr. Sedgemore]

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may, like his forebears, consider Ireland to be a upas tree of woe in this respect, but I would hope that he will have a word with Northern Ireland Ministers, who have been just a little reticent on these subjects.

I end my brief contribution not by ingratiating myself with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, but by congratulating him on the galaxy of good works that he has initiated. They include the establishment of a health action zone in east London—local Members of Parliament, including me, will meet tomorrow morning to discuss future action on that subject with the East London and the City health authority—extra funds for the Homerton hospital in my constituency; the promise of a new hospital in Whitechapel, although there are concerns about the way in which the private finance initiative will work here and elsewhere; steps to improve primary health care; and, of course, saving Bart's.

Next week, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be coming up with extra billions and billions of pounds for the NHS—

Mr. Skinner: Twelve billion pounds.

Mr. Sedgemore: I have no inside knowledge, but my guess is £10 billion.

The future of the people's NHS is safe not only in our hands, but in the hands of its brilliant, dedicated and hard-working staff.

Mrs. Marion Roe (Broxbourne): I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for calling me in today's debate to mark the 50th anniversary of the NHS.

Not only as an NHS patient, but as a former governor of the St. Peter's group of hospitals in London, a former member of the South East Thames regional health authority and chairman of the Select Committee on Health for five years, I have always taken a special interest in health matters.

The NHS is the largest employer in Europe and I first place on record my personal tribute to the doctors, nurses and all personnel involved in delivering health services. Nor should we forget those undertaking research and the voluntary organisations such as the hospice movement. For the past 50 years, that dedicated band has made the national health service what it is today: an institution of which the whole country should be proud.

Secondly, however, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) said, one should acknowledge that, for 35 of its 50 years, the health service has been supported by Conservative Governments. More important, the health service has received real increases in funding in excess of inflation in all but three of those 50 years—and the three years in which there was a real reduction were the Labour-administered years of 1976, 1977 and 1979.

Undoubtedly, the Labour Government's funding for the NHS still does not match Conservative spending policies, and will not be sufficient to enable them to deliver on the promises that they made to the public of reducing the length of NHS waiting lists and spending more money on patient care. All the evidence is that, for real health benefits, it is the Conservatives on whom the country and the sick can rely. The facts show that to be the case.

Today, however, is not a day purely to dwell on party politics; we are also here to celebrate the national health service and its successes. The service is admired throughout the world, providing guaranteed, comprehensive, 24-hour care irrespective of colour, creed or wealth. Its hospitals meet the demands of acute illness, medicine, surgery, paediatrics, gynaecology and a host of other specialties.

Enormous strides have been made in the management of mental illness and disability. Far more health care is being moved to the community, so that patients who, as recently as 20 or 30 years ago, would have stayed days or weeks in hospital need be in hospital for their treatment for only a matter of hours, and can then be supported by nursing and other staff at home.

In 1948, if a child was admitted to hospital, he or she commonly stayed weeks, months or even years. Children with major disabilities often spent their whole childhood in an institution, and those with a learning disability their whole lives. Hospitals usually forbade visitors, so opportunities for contact with family or with the local community—and even facilities for play or education—were rare. Even health care professionals rarely had specific training in children's needs. The NHS has radically changed all that.

Nowhere is the service more popular and more effective than in primary care. I believe that the general practitioners are the jewel in the crown of the NHS. The service has undergone dramatic changes as medical knowledge has improved. Many of us well remember the GP of the 1950s, resplendent in his three-piece suit, working from his house, supported by his wife, who worked as his nurse and receptionist. He—in the 1950s it was almost invariably "he"—offered a basic sickness consultation service, with little in the way of outcome other than a prescription or referral. General practice has changed out of all recognition. It has become primary care, offering a comprehensive diagnostic and preventive service, meeting ever-increasing expectations from an increasingly demanding population.

During the past 15 years, consultations have increased by 60 per cent. I am glad to say that GPs have risen to the challenge. Doctors now work in groups, from well-equipped, purpose-built premises providing a host of additional services—family planning, maternity services, immunisations, minor surgery, health screening and child surveillance. Many of those GPs are now women, increasingly highly trained and with additional skills. The total number of GPs increased from 28,000 in 1982 to more than 32,500 by 1995 and, during that time, the average number of names on a GP's list decreased from 2,100 to 1,800 per doctor.

I have been proud to support and encourage a range of excellent developments during the past 15 years. My constituency has the first surgery to provide a purpose-built preventive care unit, the first surgery to open a fully equipped operating theatre with recovery beds, the first surgery to sign up to the fundholding scheme. I have witnessed the wonders of cardiotocography—the technique whereby information about the heart and circulation of an infant developing in a pregnant woman can be recorded and sent down a telephone line to a consultant in a hospital miles away. In short, I have witnessed an explosion in the range and complexity of care provided locally for patients by what is now known as the primary health care team.

Let us give credit where it is due. Those successes have been due to the visionary and progressive health policies operated by the Conservative Government since 1979, including the provision of funds for new buildings, the encouragement of schemes to encourage practice staff and programmes to finance computers. The changes in the GP contract have resulted in considerable improvements in service provision as a consequence of the introduction of a range of item-of-service and target payments, as well as capitation payments and allowances.

What has been the outcome? Immunisation rates for diphtheria, tetanus and polio increased from 82 per cent. in 1981 to more than 95 per cent. by 1995, and, even more spectacularly, those for whooping cough increased from 46 per cent. to more than 93 per cent. during the same period.

Healthy children are much more likely to become healthy adults, and we must always ensure that we invest in the future. Let us not forget that our NHS provides services for all children while, in 1998, 14 per cent. of children in the United States of America lack state or private health insurance. For women, cervical screening rates now exceed 70 per cent. in most practices. What a success for the GPs. I believe that we should acknowledge that success.

Our primary care is the envy of the world. It provides a cost-effective, high-quality service. It has been able to develop more quickly than ever before as a result of the previous Conservative Government's policies, which placed the general medical practice at the heart of medical care and made the GP the gatekeeper.

What are the challenges of the future? Good practice is not always implemented for children. They are still admitted to adult wards. They still remain in hospital rather than leave, because only 50 per cent. of the country has community children's nursing services, although I am delighted by the recent announcement of community children's nursing services specially for children with a life-threatening or life-limiting condition, as a memorial to Diana, Princess of Wales. Too often, staff have not received specific training in children's needs; too often the service is fragmented, and too often it is based on traditional custom and practice.

We know that respiratory conditions, especially asthma, are increasing and now affect 70 in every 1,000 of the population. Although death rates are decreasing, chronic illness as a whole is increasing. Fifteen per cent. of under-fives now suffer from a chronic illness, as do 60 per cent. of 70-year-olds. Mental health services are coming under increasing and intense pressure as a result of the inexorable increase in mental illness. Much work is still to be done in those areas.

During the next five years, there will be a serious shortage of doctors and nurses because of retirement. There are 1,000 GP vacancies at the moment. The Labour Government have not honoured their pledge to reduce waiting lists, which have lengthened by 133,000 in a year. In any case, as I said in the Chamber previously, I believe that the Government should be concentrating on reducing waiting times. That is where the focus should be. GPs are concerned that, with the new arrangements for primary care groups, all their achievements under the previous Conservative Government might be undermined.

The 50th anniversary of the NHS is an important landmark in health care in Britain. We have seen tremendous successes in improving the quality of life of our population over the past 50 years. Our goal must be to make sure that those achievements are not undermined, but enhanced—high-quality, effective health care matched by value for money. Let there be no mistake. All Governments will face the problem of infinite demand to be met by a finite budget.

Mr. Peter L. Pike (Burnley): I am glad to have an opportunity of speaking in the debate. I was born in the constituency of the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), 11 years before the national health service was formed. She described a pregnancy in modern-day Broxbourne, but I am sure it was not like that in 1937. The hon. Lady also reminded me of the concern shared by many women that automatic recall for breast and cervical screening stops at 65. At least omen who have a history of cancer should be identified and called back for regular checks.

I recall the birth of the NHS and recognise the significance of the debate today. Whether or not Beveridge was responsible—I do not dismiss the importance of the Beveridge report—I thank Nye Bevan, Clem Attlee and that Labour Government for having the guts to go ahead and implement the national health service. I have been an in-patient, as have my wife and two daughters. I thank the NHS, as do millions of others who depend on it for their GPs and primary care, and for hospital care. We depend on the NHS for the service that it provides, and we thank it for being there when we need it.

I recall that during the 1992 general election campaign, I was suffering from a shoulder that had been broken in five places, and my wife was having a major operation for cancer. Ironically, although I did very little in the election because of that, my majority increased.

Two former Secretaries of State have spoken in the debate. The right hon. Member for South-West Surrey (Mrs. Bottomley) suggested that we were appointing cronies. That is outrageous when one considers what the Conservative Government did for 18 years. In my area, Miss Muriel Jebling was well respected as a person who fought for the health service. I do not know her politics. She is active in the hospice movement and elsewhere, but because she did not implement the Tory Government policy speedily enough, she was removed overnight and replaced by Mr. James Rawson, who later had to resign. Hon. Members may remember that Burnley NHS trust had a major problem when for a few days, we had no manager, chief executive or chairman because for various reasons, they all had to disappear.

Mr. Rawson was typical of the Tory party's appointments. He was seen canvassing in the next constituency with John Lee, the Tory candidate. When challenged, he said that he was Mr. Lee's national health service adviser. I pointed out that he did not come out canvassing with me, as my national health service adviser.

I welcome the fact that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made it clear that the three main criteria for appointments to trusts and health authorities are, in addition to ability, that candidates should live in the area and use the NHS. I congratulate him on that. We are already beginning to see a major improvement in the people serving on those bodies.

The second former Secretary of State who spoke, the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell), made an extremely good contribution to the debate. I do not agree with everything that he said, but I hope that he is asked to design the Tory party's health policy. However, I also hope that he remains on the Opposition Benches for the rest of his political career.

The hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) spoke about the private finance initiative. I recognise the benefits of the PFI in the short term, but we must consider the long-term implications. I acknowledge the short-term advantages that a capital fund could deliver now, but I am worried that if we are not careful, there will be revenue and other implications in years ahead that could squeeze the budget. I respect what my right hon. Friend is doing for the NHS and I know that he will fight for resources. It is important that we get the funding issue right.

If we look at the way in which health authorities and trusts are operating now, after 14 months of a Labour Government, it is clear that they are much more open and honest. That encouraging change is partly due to the new people serving on those bodies, but more importantly, they recognise that there is a new agenda and that the Government have a positive approach.

I shall quote from the response by the East Lancashire health authority to the Green Paper, "Our Healthier Nation". It stated:

"The East Lancashire Health Authority welcomes the publication of this Green Paper on people's living conditions and public health. We are pleased to have the opportunity to respond to it.

The Green Paper is strong on analysis, including a clear recognition of the interplay between many factors, operating at a range of levels, on the health of populations and subgroups. There is a strong case made for investing in health for the benefit of the whole country, in the same way as we might invest in education or research.

East Lancashire is an area of generally poor health and we welcome this analysis. Among the main wider influences on local health are a legacy of industrial manufacturing; a preponderance of low skill based and low paid employment; a large proportion of pre-1919 housing, much of which fails the housing fitness definition".

My right hon. Friend has persuaded his Cabinet colleagues that the health service cannot be compartmentalised and judged in isolation from social issues such as housing and poverty. My area has a tremendous amount of poor housing. I lived in it for many years, and it has improved, but there is still much substandard housing. Local people worked in the coal mining industry, where the working conditions were obviously bad for their health. Others worked in the textile industry. Steam was pumped into the cotton mills for the benefit of the cotton, but not for the benefit of the workers. They, too, suffer health problems in their old age, which we must still deal with.

Burnley has a high rate of premature deaths, particularly in the urban areas. The most common causes of death are heart disease, stroke, respiratory diseases and lung cancer. There are also high levels of self-reported, limiting, long-term illness—in other words, people who cannot lead a full life because the state of their health restricts what they can do. Again, the greatest prevalence is in the urban areas.

Burnley also has major problems in respect of dental health. Burnley's children have the worst dental health in east Lancashire, and east Lancashire has the worst dental record in the country. I had some difficulty myself a few weeks ago. I had been a national health service patient with the same practice since it opened in 1963, but my original dentist had retired and I had been put with someone else. She was changing to part-time work because she had a young child. She was a good dentist and I fully understood her reasons, but because I wanted to be seen on a Friday, she transferred me to another dentist. The first time that I went to see him, he had transferred to another practice and I had to be seen by someone else.

These days, many people cannot get a national health dentist. Indeed, in some places, it is absolutely impossible to do so. The previous Government virtually destroyed the NHS dental service. The Secretary of State and his team need to look at re-creating the dental service.

Dr. Ladyman: I was wondering whether my hon. Friend would be interested in my experience. I had a very good national health service dentist until a few weeks ago when he committed the crime of becoming 65. Under the current rules, he must now either go into private practice or work for somebody else. I have thus lost my NHS dentist for no good reason.

Mr. Pike: My hon. Friend makes a valid point.

A number of issues need to be looked at. For example, why do dental practitioners have one of the highest suicide rates in the country? The pay system for dentists is wrong and needs to be completely reviewed, which may require a major rethink.

People are entitled to a national health dental service. I must admit that, when I was given my bill after my last visit, I said, "I am a national health service patient," and I was told, "That is a national health service bill." It seemed very high to me.

I wish to outline a point that the Multiple Sclerosis Society put to me on the availability of treatments. It says:

"The Government has now provided more information about its plans to give more central guidance on the effectiveness of treatments. The new National Institute for Clinical Excellence will give guidance about the effectiveness of new treatments.

Ministers have said that they expect the guidelines to be implemented consistently across the NHS and have said they will monitor compliance with this guidance.

Ministers have hinted that purchasers may be forced to comply with this guidance if variations in health care persist. The MS Society believes that the Government should make an unequivocal commitment to ensure that guidance is implemented across the UK.

The history of beta interferon's introduction to the NHS shows that health authorities have systematically refused to comply with national guidance and have disputed judgements made by specialists at a national level."

I hope that my right hon. Friend will give a commitment to ensure that there is compliance in that respect. I accept that it is fair enough if it is determined that a treatment is not appropriate in a specific case, but it must be a medical decision. Moreover, the medical decision must be the same in Burnley as it is in Broxtowe, South-West Surrey and Wakefield. We need consistency across the board, not simply in respect of beta interferon and MS.

Incidentally, Burnley health care trust welcomes the additional moneys that have been made available to reduce waiting lists, which have allowed it to appoint new consultants in a number of areas and ensure continuity in that respect. We are all waiting to see what the spending review will yield.

The Labour Government have made a good start on the national health service. My right hon. Friend has spoken many times about the ship moving in one direction and having to change direction. As the captain of the ship, he is doing a good job. The national health service is much safer in the Labour party's hands. I hope that we remain in control of it so that, in another 50 years' time, we can celebrate its centenary.

8.4 pm

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate and to follow the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike), who referred to aspects of improved health care. The Southern health board lost a distinguished director of social services because, when the health board was regrouped, the role of the social services directorate was restricted and he felt that that was limiting its work. He returned to a position here in England where he had responsibility, among other things, for housing, which is an important factor if we are to have good health care.

I was trying to remember whether I was ever at a 50th birthday party at which people raked over the stories of the birth. When women look back to childbirth—men do not do so—they usually pay tribute to the midwives, but rarely say anything about the obstetricians. The humorous aspect of tonight's debate is that we have spent some time raking over who did it. Perhaps there is a lesson to be learnt from that.

I was privileged to be at a thanksgiving service for the 50th anniversary of the NHS on Sunday in St. Anne's cathedral in Belfast. Incidentally, no Minister was able to be there and I was the only politician, apart from the deputy lord mayor of the city. I have a commitment to the health service. For 19 years, I ministered in a Belfast congregation. The first Minister of Health in Northern Ireland, the late William Grant, who introduced the health service in Northern Ireland, had been a member of that congregation, and I had contacts with members of his family. For four years, I was an assistant chaplain in a hospital and I have done some 25 years of regular pastoral work in hospitals. At a personal level, I have always been committed to the national health service.

I join those hon. Members who have paid tribute to developments in the health service. The hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) referred to the availability of the 24-hour service. In one sense, there has always been a 24-hour service through the emergency services. His remarks reminded me of a doctor in a village in Northern Ireland who said that he was always glad when Tuesday and Thursday nights came because the local cinema was open and that reduced the number of people who came to his surgery. Many came just for company and a chat, but they wanted something from the doctor as well. I wondered about the staffing of the 24-hour service.

We must examine the use of the language of accessibility. The White Paper says that one of the main points about the service is that it should be "prompt and accessible" right across the country. If accessibility has been defined as medical help being available to everyone at the point of need free of charge, that is one thing, but in rural areas of Northern Ireland, people think of accessibility as being the possibility to get to hospital in the shortest possible time. As hospitals in rural areas have been closed, people are not terribly happy. We must at least use language that does not mislead people into thinking that they will receive something that cannot be delivered.

I agree completely with the concept of local responsibility for implementing national standards, and I look forward to those standards being set. I have a word of caution, however, arising especially from recent debates about the tragedies in Bristol. I received a letter from a specialist in my constituency who felt, first and foremost, that, at times, the media highlight the issues but do not give the whole story. In the light of debates in this place, I was equally concerned, because I am mindful that there are people in the medical and surgical profession who protect their reputations rather than serve their patients.

I have in mind a surgeon who gave dedicated service over many years. He had realised that he was gifted and had skills, and he had to evaluate whether he could help his patients. Anyone who has been treated by a doctor or who knows someone who is being treated by a specialist will be aware that individuals hear what they want to hear and, quite often, may misunderstand what the specialist is saying. In this modern world, we have almost deified doctors and think that they have a cure for virtually everything.

The surgeon whom I have in mind always did his best to explain things to patients, and many people were cured, made recoveries and had three, four, five or even 10 extra years of quality of life, but there were more casualties in his surgery than in others. Some patients decided, "It's too risky, I'm not taking it. I'll die anyway, so there is no point in doing anything." Doctors are evaluated by their peers, who have to judge them, but we should be careful of condemning specialists, because they have difficult tasks to perform in making diagnoses and prescribing medicines.

The White Paper refers to cutting bureaucracy. I have no difficulty with efficiency, but how are we to cut bureaucracy? When I was a member of the Health Committee, there were those in the early days of programmes for changing NHS care who shouted about too many managers. I noticed a significant change, and in one of our investigations, I challenged a specialist in the care of children about the concept of management. He was honest and said, "We don't want fewer managers. We want more money." The average doctor does not consider himself or herself to be a manager. Doctors believe that their time should be spent mainly in clinical services.

We need good managers—people who know what is going on and can keep a grip on things—but how will we cut bureaucracy? When we were reducing the number of health boards in Northern Ireland and developing trusts, GP fundholders and multiple fundholders, there was a subtle exodus from the boards into funds and trusts. Job protectionism is found in most areas of life, and we must be careful about how we cut bureaucracy and have an efficient health service at the same time.

Although we have a good service in Northern Ireland—tribute has been paid to the combination of health and social services, and I recognise that health boards in Northern Ireland have more functions than health boards here—I still find it difficult to accept that for 1,700,000 people, we need a Department of Health and Social Services, a health management executive, four area boards and 20-odd trusts. That seems to be out of kilter. We have to examine that structure and cut it down to size, without moving that bureaucracy into other areas.

I could make a lengthy contribution, like some hon. Members, but others want to speak. I shall, therefore, simply issue a word of caution. The White Paper says that "management costs will be capped in health authorities and Primary Care Groups and the Government will continue to bear down on NHS Trust costs. Transaction costs will be cut."

I remember rows in this place about the capping of local authorities. What happened when local authorities did not have the money that they thought was needed to provide even social services? We should be careful when we talk about capping management costs, because management will find ways in which to keep their budgets going and someone else may suffer. Usually, the people who suffer most are in the front line or at the coal face.

I shall curtail my comments, but I must refer to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore). It was fascinating to discover that the Government do not propose to delegate powers over abortion within the devolution of powers to Scotland. The hon. Gentleman referred to that, and also referred to poor sex education. I do not know how many schools he has visited in Northern Ireland, but I believe that there has been a tremendous improvement, as there has in other places. I have noticed that, even where there are Brook clinics which, supposedly, cut the number of unwanted pregnancies, the number continues to grow.

Here in England, no one should kid themselves that such clinics are the answer to the problem. The people of Northern Ireland have not gone down the road of social abortion, so to suggest that they should have such clinics imposed on them against their will hits at a basic concept of democracy. I was fascinated when the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch cheered on Sinn Fein. He may have been unaware that, although that party supported the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland, its supporters largely did not like it. Sinn Fein had to turn the legislation down, and tone down its position dramatically.

In debates such as this, we think about the disposal of innocents with potential for development, so perhaps there is something to be said about the fact that credence was paid to Sinn Fein, the masters in disposing of people.

Ms Joan Ryan (Enfield, North): I make my contribution on behalf of my constituents in Enfield, North, who have had first-hand experience of the differing approaches to the national health service of the Labour Government and their Conservative predecessors.

I shall elaborate on those differences, but I should first congratulate my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on two major achievements. The first is his programme for the future of the NHS, focusing provision on patient need, and delivering for that need through primary care commissioning. I am proud to tell hon. Members that that approach has been pursued for some time by dedicated and far-sighted GPs and primary care professionals through the total care project in my constituency.

The second achievement is that the Secretary of State has managed to restore the public's faith in the national health service. Their faith has been sorely tested by the policies of the previous Government, who are now consigned to the Opposition Benches as a consequence, among other things, of their policies.

The people of Enfield, particularly those in Enfield, North, depend for their acute health care provision on Chase Farm, North Middlesex, the Whittington, and Barnet general hospitals. Several hon. Members will be well aware of the recent histories of those hospitals. Other hon. Members may find the experiences of north London residents illuminating.

Under the last two Conservative Governments, each of those hospitals and their services were either threatened or seriously undermined. The people who were dependent on them and their services were faced with an ever-changing landscape of secondary health care provision, which destroyed the morale of national health service staff and the confidence of the public.

The threat to the accident and emergency department of the North Middlesex hospital was fought off through the campaigning of local people and on the strength of their arguments. The threat not just to the accident and emergency department of Chase Farm hospital but to its very existence in any shape or form was also fought off by local campaigning, which was strongly supported by our local newspaper, the Enfield Advertiser.

The threat to Barnet general hospital was lifted, only for the neighbouring Edgware hospital to be identified for closure. The previous Government closed Edgware hospital as we approached the 1997 general election. The Labour Government have since established a community hospital at Edgware. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) and all those locally who resisted the closure of Edgware hospital and fought for and achieved the community hospital.

There is a pattern to this history. It is a pattern of arrogant disregard for the opinions of health service professionals; of disdain for the people who are dependent on the Government to provide a decent health service; and of incompetence. The decisions taken by the previous Government were frequently reversed, only to be reintroduced somewhere else. Each time—with the unfortunate exception of Edgware—the Tory Government were forced to back down when their misjudgments were exposed. The history of the NHS may record that those hospitals survived the Tory years, although scarred, but it will not record the consequences of their bungling on the day-to-day management of those hospitals.

Chase Farm hospital in my constituency is an excellent facility. It engenders a sense of loyalty in the local community that it serves so well, which is not uncommon among good hospitals across the country. What is also not uncommon is the fact that it has more than once faced the threat of closure despite a remarkable performance record. It has managed to survive the years of illogical planning under the previous Government. It has managed to survive in a climate of uncertainty about its future and in an environment in which its neighbouring facilities were constantly in fear of closure. It has managed to survive the folly of the internal market through skilful management of tight budgets and by tailoring its services to the people it serves. It has drawn on that invaluable resource in the NHS: the commitment, dedication and professionalism of its staff.

As we stand here today in the glow of the 50th anniversary celebrations of the founding of the national health service, I am proud to be associated with a Government who see their tenure of office as a chance not just to rebuild the NHS, but to develop it for the future. The Government have rejected the Tory approach of conflict before consultation and destruction before design. I am sure that this is a matter of relief throughout the country, but we in London have particular reason to feel relieved about the change of Government and the change of approach.

The Tories commissioned the flawed Tomlinson report, which claimed that London's acute health facilities were over-bedded. That report has been superseded by the Turnberg report, which painted a picture that was much more readily identifiable by Londoners. It was apparent to all that London was not over-bedded, and that, in particular, the care of the elderly and those with mental illness was falling far short of what was required.

However, it is not right merely to blame the Tomlinson report. It is the Government's responsibility to make decisions. It is their responsibility to make the right decisions.

What should we have expected from the Tories? While we are celebrating the creation of the national health service 50 years ago, it is appropriate to reflect further on the contributions of some of the Members of the House during that incredible post-war period and the debates that set the course for the NHS. It is an enjoyable subject for Labour Members, who should feel proud to follow in the traditions of the great Nye Bevan and his colleagues. However, I suspect that a few Conservative Members will know enough about the Tories' behaviour in those debates to hope that their shameful contributions are left hidden on the pages of Hansard in the Library, away from the scrutiny of the public, but I am sorry to disappoint them.

The record of the debates exposes the Tories' contempt for the national health service even then, as they fought to prevent it from ever coming into existence. As the Secretary of State said, they voted 51 times against the National Health Service Bill of 1946. Next year, perhaps the NHS could celebrate a year for each one of those votes: 51 times. What were they voting against? What was it that they so feared? It is hard to ascertain from the transcript of the debates whether they knew that themselves.

My hon. Friend the Member for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths) told us about Henry Willink, who claimed that the Bill threatened "the patient's right to an independent family doctor".

He said that the Bill would "destroy so much in this country that we value."—[Official Report, 1 May 1946; Vol. 422, c. 223-32.]

He may have had a point if we value poor health, inequality and injustice.

Richard Law, quite shockingly, said:

"the doctors of the future will not be as good as the doctors of today."—[Official Report, 30 April 1946; Vol. 422, c. 81.]

How would he explain that comment in the light of the fact that, since the foundation of the NHS, life expectancy for men has risen from 66 to 74 years, and for women from 71 to 79 years? I accept that that is not the only factor, but it is a significant one.

I, too, read with some disgust the comments of Viscountess Davidson, who predicted "civil war". That was a bit strong, although there was something of an uprising in her constituency of Hemel Hempstead on 1 May last year, because that seat is now held by Labour. The constituents of Pudsey reacted the same way last year, although I am sure that it was not simply a late reaction to Colonel Stoddart-Scot, who held the seat in the Conservative cause in 1946. He thought that the Bill

"does nothing for positive health, and gives no assurance to the people that the hospitals will generally reach a higher standard."—[Official Report, 2 May 1946; Vol. 422, c. 365.]

Given what future generations of Tory Health Ministers have got up to, he should have been congratulated on his foresight.

I could make the same point about the constituents of Putney—who famously returned a Labour Member—and others, but my point has been made. Each of the seats I have mentioned was held by a Conservative before the last election, and they all came to Labour. The ever-present threats in the past 10 years to north London, especially the Enfield-based hospitals, was a strong factor in Enfield returning three Labour Members in place of three Conservatives. The British people, who cherish our national health service, trust Labour. That is because the Labour Government have embraced and reaffirmed the values of the NHS: the simple values of equality in health care, and the commitment to prevent ill health as much as to cure it.

Labour's programme is firmly rooted in the prevention of ill health. Prevention is possible only by pursuing the Government's broad approach to defeating the causes of ill health. We have already seen some of their measures to combat poverty, poor housing and unemployment: structural issues that cause and promote poor health. That approach is reinforced by the development of primary care, and has already been recognised in my constituency.

The family doctor—the GP—is the foundation of the national health service. That is as true today as it was in 1946, whatever Mr. Willink may have claimed. The scrapping of the abominable internal market and the move to primary care commissioning recognises that. As an aside, while we are on the subject of the internal market, I can tell the House that the other day I heard some non-executive members of a local hospital trust having a little chat, and they referred to the Secretary of State who introduced the internal market as a "regular kind of guy". I could not quite agree with that, until I realised that they probably meant "regular" in the medical sense.

In Enfield, North, there are exciting developments for our primary health care, with the establishment of modern facilities in the constituency. I recently attended the opening of some of those facilities, and was impressed by what I saw. In particular, the new Eagle house centre in Ponders End is continuing its marvellous tradition in modern premises and facilities. Dating from 1729, Eagle house has played a central part in the history of the area, having sheltered local residents from everything from religious persecution to first and second world war air raids.

In large new premises, the centre will be a base for health visitors and district nurses, and will provide a wider variety of services than ever before. There will be enhanced teaching and education facilities, better capacity and equipment for minor surgery and individual consulting rooms for general practitioners. The practice will serve a relatively deprived population from a range of ethnic backgrounds, in an area where the unemployment rate is about 14 per cent. The practice and its team have been key players in the delivery of primary care in Enfield, and I am delighted to say that my hon. Friend the Minister of State will formally open the facility later this month.

I have also visited the medical team from the Riley house surgery, who recently held an "asthma care day" in a local community hall. They are taking care to the community, involving people, and being accessible. On the day of the anniversary of the introduction of the NHS—last Sunday—I was asked to open the new Jephcott suite at the White Lodge medical practice in Enfield town. That is another new primary care facility in my constituency that is developing better conditions for patients and their families.

Finally, let me return to the benefits of Labour's approach for acute health care in Enfield. After the years of uncertainty and gloom, there is a new spirit of partnership in north London. That is evident in the preferred partner working arrangements between Chase Farm and Wellhouse NHS trust at Barnet general hospital.

The two hospitals have been working together since January—two hospitals, six miles apart, serving the same population with the aim of delivering the very best health care, in which quality and meeting patient needs come first. Those two hospitals are no longer pitted against each other in competition, but are able to work together. We look forward to the progress of their partnership, and recognise the good sense of arrangements that will benefit our local population.

Given the improvements in life expectancy I mentioned if the Government continue with the same level of success, perhaps many of us who are here today will be back in the Chamber celebrating the centenary of the NHS in another 50 years.

8.32 pm

Dr. Evan Harris (Oxford, West and Abingdon): I am delighted to speak for the first time in a major NHS debate. Because of the paucity of NHS debates, there have been few long enough for two Liberal Democrats to speak.

I am particularly pleased to follow an enjoyable, interesting and powerful speech from the hon. Member for Enfield, North (Ms Ryan), who gave a history lesson for the Conservative party; but I intend to deal with the present situation, and to ask the Minister a number of questions relating to how we deal with quality in the NHS, how we deal with the distortion of clinical priorities by politicians, and how we deal with rationing. The Government have now admitted what is obvious to everyone in the NHS—that, to a certain extent, rationing takes place, both in itself and on the basis of postcodes. I also want to give the Minister some advice—as I would give advice to any potential Treasury Minister—about how to save money in the NHS by getting rid of false economies.

There has been a great deal of discussion today about how much should be spent on the NHS. I do not want to repeat what has been said by many speakers about the need to provide money to cover not just inflation, but NHS inflation. What has disappointed so many NHS professionals, so many people whose families use the service and so many patients and patient groups is not only the underfunding of the service over the past 20 years—18 years of Conservative government, but 20 years of Conservative spending plans—but the contrast with slogans that raised expectations before the last election, claiming that waiting lists would be shorter and that "Things can only get better".

Two weeks before the election, I was working hard in my constituency, canvassing and talking to people who had been my patients. At that time, it was said at a Labour party press conference that there were "14 days to save the NHS". We knew then that, if Labour stuck to Conservative party spending plans, however, it would take at least two years—and even now we remain to be convinced that the NHS will be saved even after two years of Labour government.

The first page of a press release that I received from Labour party headquarters told us that the NHS was in a mess, but Labour could save it in 14 days. It then quoted what a Dr. Evan Harris of the BMA had said on "Kilroy". If the Government are using "Kilroy" as a source of evidence-based policy, I am concerned; but I think that they chose the right author of such policies.

I was quoted as saying that there was a two-tier system—that the patients of non-fundholders would have to wait longer than those of fundholders, and that those who had to wait longer were "stuffed" unless they were very fortunate. In fact, my point was that, even if we got rid of fundholding, there would still be a huge difference in status between those who could not afford private treatment and those who could. While long waiting times and the underfunding of some Cinderella specialties continue, there will continue to be a two-tier system—waiting times of 12 or 15 months on the NHS, or of 15 days privately. That is what I opposed.

When the press asked me whether, as a Liberal Democrat candidate, I endorsed the Labour party's taking my name in vain and supported its policies, I said that I could not see how the two-tier system that I had been quoted as condemning could be got rid of while Labour stuck to Conservative spending plans. I think Labour Members now recognise the damage—the increase in waiting times and waiting lists—that has been done.

Let me now deal with the issue of improving quality in the NHS. I think it rather unfair of Ministers to say that that has been a random occurrence in the past, left entirely to chance. I know that doctors, nurses and other professionals think carefully about their work in the NHS. After their day is finished and they stop being paid—I know that this was true of me, but I think that it was more true of my colleagues, as I was busy with politics—they go to the library to read the latest research, in their own time, with the aim of applying it to their practices.

If the Government intend to make external audit compulsory, as they should do, and if they want to ensure that not only new but existing treatments are of the best possible quality and are shown to be effective, investment in research must be a priority. Sadly, the NHS research and development budget has fallen in the last two years, year on year in real terms. It is difficult to see how we can secure the new evidence we need for the National Institute of Clinical Excellence at a time when R and D funding is falling.

It will be difficult to get the best out of compulsory audit and clinical governance if those who work in the health service—doctors, nurses and those in the professions allied to medicine—are not given time within working hours. It requires an increase in the number of nurses, rather than vacancies. It will also mean an increase in the number of doctors, and it will mean dealing with the recruitment crisis in professions allied to medicine.

The problem relating to doctors is one of which I have particular knowledge, because I worked in medical education and training. There is a shortfall in the number of students coming through medical school who will be the consultants of the future; last November, the Government's own advisory group recommended an increase in the annual output of medical schools of 1,000 trained medical students—trainee doctors five years down the line. We are now waiting to find out whether the Government will implement the advice of their advisory group. If they need to do so, they must bear it in mind that they will see the fruits of that investment only in 10 years' time, which may be rather longer than some patients and some of my former colleagues are prepared to wait.

At the moment, we are taking in doctors from overseas to fill the gap. Only 38 per cent. of new General Medical Council registrations last year were for people trained in the United Kingdom. The European Union will reduce the number of doctors it produces, so we will not be able to rely on them any more, and it is wrong to bring doctors here from developing countries, allegedly to train but often merely to be exploited for service in staff grade, or other non-consultant posts, to make up the shortfall.

I was sad to hear that a leading academic from the Sudan has been headhunted to work in psychiatry in this country when, with his skills and the Sudan's investment in his training, he should be working there. That is also the case with other developing countries: their doctors should not be working to prop up our underfunded health service.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) said, during the most recent Health questions we were delighted to hear the Minister of State agree, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb), that some drug treatments that were probably not effective were being introduced into the NHS too quickly. I agree, and it is important to ensure that pharmaceutical companies and the NHS—or both in partnership—get better information about which groups of patients some apparently widely applicable drugs will work well for.

The Minister of State also agreed that some drugs that are clearly effective are being introduced too slowly, which is an example of rationing. They are being introduced too slowly not merely because of ignorance but because of funding problems, and some of them have been around for some time.

Another example of rationing is the long waiting time for some operations, and the fact that certain operations that used to be offered on the NHS are simply not available any more. My hon. Friends the Members for Southwark, North and Bermondsey and for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) and I have been saying since May 1997, and before that, that the reduction of waiting lists by the deletion of certain operations from NHS indicators was rationing by another name.

Mr. Jim Cunningham (Coventry, South): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that his hon. Friend the Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) accepted that there would be rationing in the national health service? He even quoted Aneurin Bevan to substantiate his argument.

Dr. Harris: I am not sure that I fully understood the hon. Gentleman's point, but I hope that this will answer it. We recognise that rationing takes place. The problem is that the people of this country have never been told at a general election that the NHS is anything other than a universal service, available to all and free at the point of delivery. At the last election, they were told that they could have a wonderful health service and that it would get better, but that no one would have to pay any more and it was a universal service.

Opinion polls have consistently found that people would be prepared to pay more for a health service that was truly universal and readily available. There will always be some need to wait for the sake of efficiency, but waits of more than six months are unacceptable for people who have paid their taxes.

People would be prepared to pay a little more for a decent health service. It is not fair for the Government or Labour Back Benchers to say, as the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) did, perhaps inadvertently, that health authorities should pay for prescribed beta interferon on demand, and for all the other drugs for which there are guidelines. Some treatments do not have guidelines. For certain Cinderella specialties, there are no clearly measurable outcomes. We can ask whether beta interferon is being given to all patients with multiple sclerosis whose consultant neurologists feel that they can benefit from it. Mental health services and services for the care of the elderly have no such parameters.

Health authorities are left with the problem of a demand for beta interferon and for expensive new anti-psychotics as well as statins, all of which are proven and effective treatments. They cannot raise funds locally, but people are blaming them for the rationing—I hope that the Government will not blame them for that.

It is the Government's responsibility at least to initiate a public debate about whether people want such treatments to be widely available and whether they would be prepared to pay more through taxation for them—whether through taxes on cigarettes, the closure of loopholes in the health service, or income tax. That was our platform at the election, as it was for education. It is the Government's role to initiate such a debate, as they have finally recognised that rationing takes place.

If the Government think that there are problems with beta interferon, which would at least reduce in-patient costs if it produced health improvements, and if they think that there will be benefits from prescribing statins to reduce blood cholesterol through the reduction in coronary artery disease, they will see the long-term benefit of the appropriate prescribing of effective medicines.

However, with the new drug Viagra, there will be no down-the-line financial benefits to the health service, as the Minister knows and as has been reported in the press. It is likely to be a popular drug in all senses of the word, but it is also likely to be widely applicable. The Government will find it difficult to ration it through referrals to consultant urologists, who will have little time to do anything other than the impotency work-ups on patients referred by general practitioners. That nettle will have to be grasped, and there will be an opportunity for the Minister or a colleague to do so in an Adjournment debate next Tuesday, when we will discuss how Viagra can be prescribed.

My Liberal Democrat colleagues and I will work with the Government and the pharmaceutical industry to solve the problem of how to ensure that effective drugs are introduced, when they are known to be effective, and not rationed by postcode. There will be an outcry about Viagra if we see not merely treatment by postcode, which is what is happening now, but sex by postcode, as was reported in the papers following a debate at the British Medical Association.

The Government's policies on waiting lists have distorted clinical priorities. My hon. Friend the Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey said today, and has said on many previous occasions, that the concentration on waiting list numbers rather than waiting times is causing immense problems for people who may need expensive operations but will be moved further down the queue because health authorities—on pain of the sacking of their managers and chief executives—have to get the numbers down.

I challenge the Minister to reassure me that, for the waiting list initiative, the format of operations planned matches pretty exactly the range of operations already in the contract. In other words, will he assure me that there will not be proportionately more small operations, for example on ganglions, and that there will be as many, if not more, hip replacements? People waiting for the latter are in pain, their movements are restricted, and they need the support of social services.

That is a problem, and if we keep concentrating on Government-sponsored initiatives with a clear outcome, such as waiting lists, we will not provide services where there is no clear outcome, such as in mental health and the care of the elderly. The false economy of taking money from social services, which suffered real-terms cuts in the past two years even before demographic increases are considered, and putting it into the NHS, must become clear to the Government when they recognise that patients cannot be discharged from hospitals because social services do not have the money to pick up their funding in nursing homes. The threatened closure of two community hospitals in Oxfordshire is a case in point.

Finally, I have two questions for the Minister. First, will he place in the House of Commons Library the figures that the NHS executive gathers on bed blocking, to show whether the winter pressures money and other such schemes really reduced the number of delayed discharge days or the bed blocking from which hospitals were suffering?

Secondly, does the Minister accept that, if it can be shown that it would be a false economy in Oxfordshire or elsewhere to close community hospital beds—the Liberal Democrats are not wedded to any particular bricks and mortar, because it is beds and services that count—health authorities should be allowed to use this year the money that may be available next year to provide the services that patients, many of whom are elderly, deserve, and for which they have paid taxes over the past 50 years?

Dr. Howard Stoate (Dartford): As one of the few proper doctors in the House, I am particularly grateful for this opportunity to speak. I think that I am only one of two who continue to do a small amount of work in the national health service. I also want to declare my great pride in being part of the work force that has ensured that the health service has been the envy of the world over the past 50 years. I hope that all hon. Members are able to join me in thanking all NHS staff on behalf of all our constituents.

Whenever I get the chance, I take a look at the various publications that are sent to general practitioners' surgeries. Apart from articles concerning my own activities, there are occasionally other interesting articles. Quite recently, I came across an interview with the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe), the shadow Secretary of State for Health, in Doctor on 25 June, in which she was described as a hardliner. She claims much for her Government's record on the NHS between 1979 and 1997. Fortunately, the electorate did not believe much of what she or the previous Government said, and voted instead to defend the NHS.

The article makes it clear that the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald has learnt something from my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department of Health. She says that she will be listening to people's suggestions, taking the debate to the country, coming up with a strategy that can be tested on experts and putting policy to the people. If only the Conservatives had done that through their 18-year stewardship of the NHS. The internal market, which set parts of the health service against each other, was not tried and tested before its implementation, and we are having to sort out the mess that they left behind.

At least in 1998, the Conservative Front-Bench team claims to support the NHS. As my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) pointed out, however, the right hon. Lady seems to want to introduce far more private health insurance. I am particularly opposed to that line of thinking, for one simple reason. Let us suppose that a young male driver of a Lamborghini finds that his insurance premiums go through the roof. He can always sell his Lamborghini and buy a Lada. If, on the other hand, the same young man happens to have diabetes or a chronic mental health problem or renal failure, what can he do? He cannot just take his renal failure elsewhere and try to get a better quote for his health insurance.

There is a simple inverse law: those in most need are the least insurable. That will always be so; it is the same anywhere in the world. In any example, such as house or car insurance, the inverse law applies. As bad luck would have it, those most in need tend to be those least able to pay. They suffer a double whammy. We know from statistics that the Department of Health releases frequently that people in difficult social circumstances are also those who happen to suffer the worst medical problems. For all sorts of good reasons, introducing more private health insurance in the NHS would be a disaster.

I should like to concentrate on what is happening in my constituency. In Dartford, we are at the forefront of the new NHS, preparing for the changes of the new millennium. On Saturday, I was pleased to attend the topping-out ceremony for the new hospital in my constituency—the first to be built under the private finance initiative—to serve the needs of Dartford and Gravesham. The Government ensured that legislation was in place to allow the private-public partnership between the NHS trust and Tarmac to go ahead to build the much-needed facility in north-west Kent. I am pleased that the project is on time and on budget. Many eyes are on it, and are willing it to be a great success. If, as I believe, it lives up to our hopes, it will form a template for many similar schemes.

My hon. Friends the Minister and the Paymaster General joined me and my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) in September to mark the start of work on the hospital. I hope that it will not be long before they and other colleagues join me to mark the opening of the hospital. It will be a flagship for the NHS, and shows what a Government who are committed to the health service can do. It would never have happened without the tremendous effort of all those involved and the vision of Ministers to will it into being.

Earlier this year, community trusts in north Kent merged to form the Thames Gateway NHS trust. The trust is seeking to make savings by streamlining management and administration so that more money can go into patient care. At the same time, economies of scale and merging of expertise will lead to improved standards. As long as the quality and availability of care at local level are preserved and—I hope—enhanced, I see nothing wrong with trust mergers, either to create a larger geographical area or, vertically, to integrate health care for a locality.

All the developments in Dartford and Gravesham are supported by significant amounts of extra cash, which has gone into the NHS since we were elected last year. West Kent health authority has received £26 million of new money. That includes £5 million to tackle waiting lists, so that we can make our own contribution to meeting the pledge to reduce over the life of this Parliament the number of people waiting for hospital treatment. Waiting lists in Dartford and Gravesham are already lower than they were in May 1997. The Dartford and Gravesham NHS trust will have an extra 48 beds to treat even more patients.

GPs and community nurses in Dartford and Gravesham are pioneering our plans for primary care groups in a pilot project. Fundholders and non-fundholders alike have embraced the idea with enthusiasm. I am sure that there will be lessons to be learned from their experiences, which will benefit the implementation of primary care groups throughout the country next year. I applaud the efforts of the British Medical Association and Ministers to ensure that such groups work. As with any venture of such vision, there have been some tough negotiations on both sides, and I understand the threat that such change may pose. I hope that some of the groups will try to be even more innovative than the guidelines propose and that, in time, groups will experiment with ways of working together.

Someone who has not visited north-west Kent may imagine a leafy idyll. They would, of course, be right. However, we have many pockets of deprivation, and West Kent health authority thought that it was worth while submitting a bid to form a health action zone. The bid was unsuccessful, but many useful lessons were learnt. The health authority has already begun to work with county and borough councils, and they will be in a good position to work on a health improvement programme for west Kent when we implement the plans for a healthier nation.

Our plans are for the next 10 years; we shall be working on many elements during the lifetime of this Parliament and the next. The agenda is full, but I should like to encourage the prioritisation of some items. Recruitment and retention continues to be of concern, particularly in primary care. We need to research the causes of the shortage of doctors and nurses who want to enter primary care. We need to improve undergraduate medical education, vocational training and continuing education, so that general practice becomes more attractive. Efforts are already being made to provide more flexibility for doctors. That needs to continue and develop. There is particular pressure in inner cities, and incentives should be considered to attract new doctors to fill gaps.

I would welcome an early response from Ministers to the findings of the Campbell committee. One thousand new medical students will take time to work through their training, but there will be plenty of work for them to do when they qualify. With encouragement to enter primary care, they will go a long way to filling the gaps that are appearing.

No debate about the success of the NHS can ignore the enormous contribution made by Britain's innovative and successful pharmaceutical industry. It is one of our largest exporters and leads the world in research and development. I hope that that vital part of our research base is not forgotten when, this year, the Government renegotiate the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, which sets the basis for the price paid for drugs by the NHS. Many new drugs are available, as hon. Members have mentioned. We need clear departmental guidelines on how they should be used. It is very important that new drugs are put into perspective rather than introduced through the media and through patient demand, without proper regulation and control and a balanced approach on how best they should be used.

During this 50th anniversary celebration, there have been many welcome announcements from my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Health. The Prime Minister launched the innovation fund, which will demonstrate that the division and competition of the internal market are not necessary for new ideas to develop. The NHS, during this period of co-operation, will see innovation flourish.

There are many beacons of excellence in the NHS. Their example should be celebrated and shared throughout the NHS, so that everyone can benefit from good practice. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched the drive to improve quality of care in the NHS. Doctors welcome the promise of national guidelines, and we shall ensure that they are adhered to. Patients will be asked regularly how they think the NHS is performing.

I am sure that everyone in the NHS is hoping to hear about funding for the future. Of course, we cannot expect to have the result of the comprehensive spending review before time, but it is clear that the £2 billion of extra money so far is not enough for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and there has already been a hint of money—a lot more money—from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and that is very welcome.

I look forward to next week's announcement, confident that it will fulfil our manifesto commitment to raise spending in real terms every year. I know that the workers at the front line of the NHS will spend the money efficiently to improve patient care.

We can look back to 1948 and celebrate the life of the NHS, but we must also look forward. As Nye Bevan said, the NHS must always be changing, growing and improving. At no time has it been better prepared to face the challenge of the new.

8.58 pm

Mr. David Amess (Southend, West): I welcome this debate to celebrate the national health service and its achievements and talk about its future. Unfortunately, I missed the opening exchanges. I believe that they were splendid. My hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) is not here at the moment, but I certainly agree with what he said.

There has been a familiar tone to the debate. We can talk about history, but the reality is that for 35 of the 50 years during which we have enjoyed the national health service, the Conservatives have been in power. Labour Members have chastised Conservative Governments for what they did, but in a democracy, if the people had been unhappy with the way in which the Conservatives were running the health service, they could have voted them out.

My hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, South was also right about abortion, embryo research and related matters. I listened carefully to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore). When I talk about the achievements of the national health service, I certainly do not include the huge number of babies who have been aborted.

It is an absolute disgrace that we can now abort up to term on the basis of disability. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority is a fiasco. The idea that experiments can be done on embryos up to 14 days and that inspectors can magically deal with the situation is absolute nonsense. It is a further disgrace that, when I tried to introduce a Bill to stop sex selection, it was defeated overwhelmingly, and largely by women Members.

We should not take pride in that aspect of the health service, but we should celebrate its achievements. People are living longer; more premature babies are surviving; and the general public are healthier than ever. We can see immediately in schools that children are much healthier than ever, and for that we should thank every doctor, nurse and other member of staff in the national health service.

Let there be no doubt that, were it not for the army of volunteers throughout the country, we would not have the magnificent health service that we do. One has only to look at America: when President Clinton was first elected, he tried to persuade Congress to deliver a national health service, and they spent two years debating it before deciding that it was simply not possible. I am sure that, if we were starting from scratch today, we would also find it impossible. We have a magnificent health service, and we should all delight in it. It is the envy of the world.

Like other hon. Members, I was present on Sunday at local celebrations in my constituency. Southend hospital was recently recognised with the award of associate university teaching hospital status, making it an integral part of London university. That demonstrates the high quality of its education facilities for clinical staff. We are also very proud to be recognised as a major cancer centre, and in December last year we were awarded the King's Fund organisational audit accreditation award, about which the Government should be delighted, because it means that there could be no better administration than that at Southend hospital. Fairhaven is a magnificent hospice in Southend, and only two weeks ago, the Duke of Gloucester opened our children's hospice, which is the only one in an area that includes the whole of Essex and part of London.

Mental health is an extremely difficult matter to deal with, and not everyone wants to talk about it, as the Minister will know only too well. We have difficulties in Essex at the moment, and I am sure that he and his colleagues are trying to deal with them.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Amess: I certainly will, but I am trying to co-operate to allow another Labour Member to speak.

Mr. Thomas: On the subject of difficulties, the hon. Gentleman will know that his party does not have a policy on the health service at the moment. In terms of future policy, does he agree with the vision of the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) or the vision of the right-wingers in his party who support some form of privatisation or charging?

Mr. Amess: I made a big mistake in giving way. What the former councillor for Westminster had to say did not add anything to the quality of this serious debate on the national health service. As far as the hon. Gentleman's remarks about the Conservatives are concerned, we have lost the plot. Labour is the Government and the Conservatives are the Opposition. The Conservative party has nothing whatever to be ashamed of with regard to our management of the NHS. My right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) was an excellent Secretary of State for Health, and the present Government are trying to copy much of what he and his predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for South–West Surrey (Mrs. Bottomley), did. But as we are increasingly finding out, they are not making a terribly good job of delivering Conservative party policies.

I move on to the second part of my speech, which is on the future and politics in the NHS. One or two hon. Members have said, "Oh well, it is no good talking about appointments. Let's look at what the Conservatives did." Again, we have lost the plot. It was the new Government who on 1 May, celebrating with "Things can only get better", said that we would not have any politics in the NHS. Yet only four Conservative councillors as against 111 Labour councillors have been appointed to trust boards. Labour introduced a new criterion into the appointments process. It wrote to council leaders rather than to chief executives of local authorities. Conservatives have been largely excluded from the appointments process.

The final joke on politics is this. I have nothing whatever against the individuals who have been appointed as chairmen in my area, but when two names are submitted to me as the local Member of Parliament, and they are both Labour activists, that says it all. Even more bizarre, the press release on the new appointments starts off by saying that "Labour activist" X has been appointed. It is no good the Secretary of State for Health saying that there are no politics in the NHS when people are being told to push out press releases saying that new appointments are of Labour activists.

One of my local cancer consultants has made a number of good points about cancer treatment. This might be a controversial point, but I watched two weeks ago the television programme that showed someone dying. I as an individual thought that that was a great mistake, but there it is, it was shown. The current maximum number of new patients seen by a consultant clinical oncologist should not exceed 350 per year. The Board of Faculty of Clinical Oncology recommends that the maximum number of new patients seen by a consultant clinical oncologist should not exceed 315 in any one year. I should like the Minister of State to write to me on a later date to tell me whether he agrees with that suggestion. If he does, given his Government's position on hospital waiting lists, how does he intend to resolve that problem? The other point about cancer treatment concerns the machinery that is used. Many cancer consultants are very concerned about the age of the machinery that they are using. Will the Minister write to me about what his Department intends to do about that?

Another constituent who is an eye consultant has brought it to my attention that one in five of the doctors who qualify in the United Kingdom are lost to the NHS within 10 years. The British Medical Association helpline receives 6,000 calls a year from doctors who are stressed and feel that they cannot continue to work. Will the Minister let me know what the Government will do about that?

The Prime Minister used to jump up at the Dispatch Box to rubbish Essex county council after it had been controlled by the Conservatives for only seven weeks. After 15 months of a Labour Government, however, anything that goes wrong can still be blamed on the Conservatives. The Conservative Essex county council has addressed bed blocking and put £4 million into the service, so that 450 people in hospital beds can go to residential homes.

I shall write to the Secretary of State on behalf of United Response, which delivers quality services in the community, and which wants to raise a constituency point.

Every parliamentarian should rejoice in the achievements of the wonderful NHS. The Conservatives have for 35 years assured its future. It is now up to the new Labour Government to do the same.

9.10 pm

Mr. John Heppell (Nottingham, East): I congratulate the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) on his brevity. He was much quicker than I expected.

The Ulster Unionist party is the only one not to have claimed credit for the national health service tonight, and even it claimed a connection. The truth is that the people of the United Kingdom formed the NHS, and they did so by electing a Labour Government with the vision, commitment and political will to do so in the teeth of opposition from the Tories who fought it tooth and nail. The Liberals have claimed the credit, too. I accept that an individual, Beveridge, had something to do with the creation of the NHS, but he did not do as much as Nye Bevan. In reality, in 1945, the Liberals had no real political influence, and they had not one iota of influence on the NHS. Nothing has changed there of course.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), I share a birthday with the NHS; mine was in 1948. I was reassured by what the Secretary of State said today, but the most reassuring thing that I have heard is that my hon. Friend is older than me. I was an NHS baby, as were my children and my grandchildren, and as are the 2,000 NHS babies who will have been born today. As a child, I broke my arm, and an ambulance came to take me to hospital, just as 8,000 ambulances will have arrived to take people to hospital today. Whenever I was ill, I went to the doctor, as 700,000 people will have done today. When I had toothache, or before I got it, I went to the dentist, just as 130,000 people will have done today.

All that is part of the success of the NHS, but its real success lay in taking away the fear of illness that so many people had before its foundation. I have a fair appreciation of the NHS; indeed, I am often passionate about it. I was amused to hear the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) give her romantic vision of a general practitioner. I had a mental picture of James Herriot, until I remembered that he was a vet. Well, if we cannot be romantic, or sentimental, about the NHS, what can we be romantic or sentimental about? It is an institution that everyone loves. The people who really appreciate the NHS are the generation before mine. They knew what it was like not to have it.

Mr. Jim Cunningham : Does my hon. Friend agree that a major feature that made the national health service what it was, leaving politicians to one side, was the efforts of the staff over the past 50 years, especially through the 18 years of turmoil under the Tories?

Mr. Heppell: That is very true. I and my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield did not suffer the problems that the national health service had. We were not battered by the Tories at birth or for the past 18 years, but looking at the three of us, people would think that the national health service came out with the best health. The NHS has survived in spite of Conservative Governments, not because of them.

The generation before mine were the people who formed the NHS. They knew what the fear of illness was like. They knew what it was like to have brothers, sisters, wives, daughters and sons suffering illness or injury while being unable to get adequate treatment. They knew what it was like to live in a country where treatment depended either on charity or ability to pay. That is why the NHS was formed and why people feel so strongly about it now. That is why this Government will ensure that the NHS is not only saved but modernised and improved.

Mr. John Hayes (South Holland and The Deepings): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Heppell: No. The hon. Gentleman has only just come in. I worry about the lapses of memory of Conservative Members.

Mr. Jim Dowd (Lord Commissioner to the Treasury): Where are they?

Mr. Heppell: There are more here now than there have been during the rest of the debate. The Tories say how good things were under them. Many of the new Members will not remember the 1996 debate here. I showed the House these headlines from my local paper: "Government health warning", "Excellence at risk", "Longer to wait", "Ambulance fears", "Treatment limits", "Cancer plan threat".

Miss Widdecombe: Tell us about the 1978 headlines.

Mr. Heppell: You were in. It was 1996. The man quoted in those headlines was a Conservative appointee to the health authority in Nottingham. Even more important was a later report that showed that 350 operations were postponed because of the winter crisis in 1996. People will not forget the many people who lay injured or ill in corridors on trolleys that winter. They were not there in the winter of 1997 because we did something about it. We delivered when your Government could not.

Miss Widdecombe: The hon. Gentleman is brandishing a set of headlines. Does he remember the headlines of 1978, when his Government were coming to the end of their unlamented period in power? We were glad to see the end of it. Far short of lying around in corridors, patients could not get into hospital at all. Medical staff were on strike and the ambulance men were out. The junior doctors threatened industrial action. Everyone's pay was going down in the health service. People could not get treated and the nation threw his lot out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. That was an extremely long intervention.

Mr. Heppell: I remember the problems of 1978 but I also remember the problems of 18 years of your Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must use the correct parliamentary language.

Mr. Heppell: I am sorry, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The Government have done many things that directly affect the people of Nottingham. I have little time, so I will concentrate on the fact that since coming to power, we have put an extra £20 million into Nottingham health authority and £2.36 million to help with the winter crisis. That was extra money that was not planned before this Government came in. The cash increase for 1998–99 was £14 million when it would have been only £6 million under your Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must concentrate and get the parliamentary language right.

Mr. Heppell: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am getting carried away by my own rhetoric.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have rules about parliamentary language so that hon. Members do not get carried away.

Mr. Heppell: I shall ensure that I do not make any more mistakes in terms of parliamentary language and sit down, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

9.19 pm

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): It is right for the House and the country as a whole to celebrate 50 years of the national health service. The United Kingdom national health service is the best, most comprehensive and integrated service in the world, and it is noted as such wherever one goes. Whether one travels to north America or to other countries in the European Union, one will find that our national health service is envied throughout the world. We should be proud of that fact. We owe a great deal to the nurses, doctors, paramedics, auxiliary service staff and all those who work in the national health service.

I was privileged to serve for a time as Chairman of the Health Select Committee, and I have been involved in health and social service issues for most of my political career. The health service is supported by the overwhelming majority of people in this country, whatever their party political affiliations.

Mr. Ivan Lewis (Bury, South): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Winterton: I am sorry, but I promised to speak for only two minutes, and I shall try to keep within that time constraint.

Governments should appreciate the widespread support that the health service enjoys. I only wish that there were more consensus across the House as to how the health service should be organised and managed. One of my greatest honours was to be made a vice-president by the Royal College of Midwives on the strength of the maternity services report produced by the Health Select Committee when I was its Chairman.

We should value the national health service and seek to work across the Chamber on its behalf. It is appreciated by the overwhelming majority of people in this country and, if we did that, they would appreciate the House a lot more.

Mr. Jim Cunningham (Coventry, South): I obviously do not have much time left in which to speak about the national health service. However, it is important to pay tribute to the loyal national health service staff who have worked hard over the past 50 years. We must remember also those people who fought for the national health service before it was established. Hon. Members have mentioned tonight people such as Aneurin Bevan, but we should also remember others such as Beatrice Webb. I shall not say who thought of doing what, but, at the end of the day, it was a Labour Government who introduced the national health service. It was not an easy task for the Attlee Government to create the national health service, and they spent hundreds of hours in negotiation with the British Medical Association alone.

I acknowledge that the Government intend to spend about £30 million on improving health services in the west midlands. Coventry will receive £1.7 million and there is a new private finance initiative of £174 million for the city. In addition, £1.2 billion will be spent nationally on the national health service. The Government have already spent about £300 million in meeting the pressures of last winter and more resources will be spent on creating 3,000 new beds.

I pay tribute also to the NHS staff in Coventry. Last Sunday, the staff and I took a birthday cake around the two remaining hospitals in Coventry to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the NHS. We heard some interesting comments and I noticed that morale had improved as a result of the Government's actions. We still have a long way to go, but we have the lifetime of this Parliament and probably beyond to put right the mess created by the previous Government over 18 years. Finally, I again pay tribute to all the great pioneers of the national health service.

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge): I am delighted to take the opportunity of this debate to salute the achievements of the national health service over the past 50 years and the achievements of all those who have given their time and dedication to it. However, it is also time to take stock of the issues facing the service now and the longer-term challenges.

This has been a high-powered debate, with one current Secretary of State and two former Secretaries of State taking part. The current Secretary of State was somewhat predictable, reiterating the rhetoric with which we have become familiar. He listed the pet schemes and initiatives that are no substitute for additional resources across the board. He failed to mention the pressing issues in respect of mental health, disability and care of the elderly. He did not mention dentistry, chiropody, physiotherapy, or the other professions allied to medicine. Although he mentioned the NHS direct scheme, he did not mention the threat to community pharmacy presented by the Government's Competition Bill.

The other rather predictable aspect of the debate has been the short canter around what was or was not said in the 1940s—about a decade before either the Minister of State or I was born. The Labour party is not in a position to lecture anyone on the evolution of ideas in political parties. We certainly would not need to go back 50 years to find examples of views held by current members of the Government that have, shall we say, matured over time? The hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) told us that the socialist ethic has been restored to the Government's health policy, which leads me to wonder whether his pager is working properly, and he told us that the debate on health was as polarised as ever.

My right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Surrey (Mrs. Bottomley) said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery and mentioned the rebadging of our policies that has been a hallmark of the Labour Government when trying to avoid acknowledging the debt that they owe to the initiatives of the Conservative Government. She also raised the important issue of the anti-management culture of the Labour Government and the bullying of managers by the Secretary of State's office. She cited one example, of which we have heard several, of health service managers either leaving, or seeking to leave, the service because they are fed up with the way in which they are treated and because they feel undervalued.

The hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) addressed the Secretary of State's claim to ownership of the health service. Although not noted as a friend of the Conservative party, he acknowledged our role in consolidating and strengthening the NHS over the 50 years of its existence. He demolished the Secretary of State's spurious claims to ownership of the NHS.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) gave a ringing endorsement of the effectiveness of the NHS. He demonstrated, if demonstration was ever needed, that where there are disagreements or nuances of opinion about the NHS, they are not along party lines, but across the party political divide. The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) did likewise.

My hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) rightly drew our attention to the importance of GPs and the role they play in the service. She highlighted the role that a primary care-led service has in delivering the cost-effectiveness that is an important hallmark of our NHS. She also drew attention to the staff shortages that ought to be one of the Government's primary concerns when considering the NHS. In the next three years, 24 per cent. of all the nurses active on the register will reach retirement age. That is a time bomb ticking under the Government and a problem that we expect them to address as a matter of urgency.

Seven months ago to the day, the Secretary of State presented his NHS White Paper to the House, yet this is the first chance that we have had in Government time to discuss the subject of health. That tells us something about the Government's priorities, or perhaps their reluctance to expose their performance on health to scrutiny.

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that one of the two most telling contributions to the debate by Conservative Members was that of the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), who was removed from his post as Chairman of the Health Select Committee because he was brave enough to express grave concern about health policy under his Government? The other telling contribution was that of the former Secretary of State for Health, the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell), who felt obliged in the debate to speak to right-wingers in his party about laying down a marker for the appropriate future of the health service. Were those not the two most significant contributions and do they not demonstrate why the Conservative party is not fit to be in control of our national health service?

Mr. Hammond: I do not intend to get involved in a discussion about the relative merits of my right hon. and hon. Friends' contributions to the debate. We need to move the debate forward, not dwell on the past as Labour Members are so anxious to do.

The timing of the debate is no coincidence. The week after the 50th birthday of the NHS, the Government seek to bask in the reflected glory that properly belongs to the men and women who have devoted themselves to the service over the past 50 years. The week before the announcement of the comprehensive spending review, the Government seek to take credit for an as yet unannounced increase in NHS spending, which may or may not be enough to make an impact on the pressing issues that the NHS faces

The Conservative party, like all parties in the House, is committed to the NHS and its core principles. As my hon. Friends have said, we have had stewardship of the service for more than two thirds of its existence. Between 1979 and 1997, NHS spending grew by 3.1 per cent. per annum in real terms. The annual number of treatments increased by more than 3 million over that period. The numbers of nurses, midwives and doctors increased dramatically. We are rightly proud of those achievements, but we should like to enter the second half-century of the NHS looking to the future. To do so, we need to move away from the sterile arguments of the past, but we find that the Labour party has come into office carrying the baggage of its rash promises and the opportunistic criticism that it made in opposition of every action that the previous Government took on the NHS.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) said, the Labour party's pre-election rhetoric led many folk who knew no better, and some who ought to have known better, to believe that all the NHS needed was a Labour Government. The Minister will remember Lee Bosley, and probably his mother, who, when that whole sorry business was over, said to me, "What really gets me is that some people were stupid enough to believe Labour and vote for them."

The Labour party in opposition refused to acknowledge the huge achievements in the service over the previous 18 years and pretended that it would tear them down. It dug itself into a hole with promises that it need not have made, was advised not to make and cannot deliver. Today, those "early promises" are costing British patients and taxpayers dear. Our health service is being driven by the primary objective of getting the Government off a political hook of their own making.

Listening to the Secretary of State congratulating himself on the fact that, apparently, waiting lists have started to fall, one would be forgiven for thinking that the early pledge was only to allow waiting lists to increase by 140,000 before gently turning them around and bringing them back to their original level. The Labour party chose the wrong target. It misled the electorate. It has failed to deliver on that target. We could forgive all that, but we cannot and will not forgive the Secretary of State's coercion of the entire system to achieve the ridiculous target that he has set himself. It is ridiculous not because we say so, but because, without exception, professionals in the NHS say that it is the wrong target and it is addressed in the wrong way, at huge cost to the needs of patients across the country.

If the Minister of State believes, as he told my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) the week before last, that no other part of the health service is suffering as a result of the focus on elective surgical waiting lists, he needs to get out of Richmond house and talk to doctors, nurses and NHS managers throughout the country. He should ask them whether that is the best use of the available resources.

Mr. Hayes: The Minister should speak not only to those professionals but to the people in the communities that are faced with hospital closures. My constituency is faced with the closure of our local hospital. Throughout Lincolnshire and other counties across the land, community hospitals are being closed, and people are amazed at the contradiction between that and the claims that Labour made before the election.

Mr. Hammond: My hon. Friend makes a helpful contribution. One of the advantages of being in opposition is that we can talk to doctors, nurses and health professionals throughout Britain. I understand that Ministers are burdened with their boxes and are forced to spend more time than they would like in Richmond house.

Doctors are pressured to work extra hours. In some cases, they are bribed to work extra hours. We have heard examples of doctors offered 10 times their usual sessional payments to work an extra shift to help clear waiting lists. Can that be a sensible use of NHS resources?

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. Alan Milburn): Where?

Mr. Hammond: If the hon. Gentleman would like the information, I will send it to him. It came to us from the Hospital Consultants and Specialists Association, citing specific examples, and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman tomorrow with the details.

We are not talking about extra hours to deal with major clinical priorities. If you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, were a trust chief executive and you were told that your job was on the line if you did not get waiting lists down, what would you do? You would not attend to the most complex and difficult cases; you would deal with the trivia, the easy and the cheap procedures. You would do the grommets, the hernias, the wisdom teeth. Such actions will get the numbers down, but do nothing to address the real health care priorities in Britain. It is a cynical diversion of scarce resources. The hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris), who is no longer in his place, addressed the Minister specifically on that and I hope that the Minister will answer him.

Next week, we will hear from the Government how much new money the NHS will get. As my right hon. and hon. Friends have said, that announcement must be a minimum increase of between £8 billion and £9 billion per annum over the current annual level and achieved by 2001–02. We shall be looking for a plain-speaking announcement, couched in terms of annual spending increases—no funny figures, no fudging, just a simple figure that people can understand and compare with what has gone before. If that announcement stands up to analysis, and if it delivers real new money over and above the trend rate of real growth that the Conservative Government established during 18 years, we will welcome it. Whether it delivers the increased real growth in practice will depend critically on the Government's ability to meet their own inflation targets, and so far the omens are not good.

How will the money be distributed? How much will be ring-fenced into the Secretary of State's pet projects? How much will be available to NHS managers to spend across the board on the expansion of day-to-day services?

Several hon. Members have emphasised the Government's wide view of what constitutes health care, embracing, according to some Labour Members, everything from social care through housing to unemployment and low pay. I hope that the announcement of £X billion next week as an increase in the health budget will not be disseminated across that wide range of Government activity. I hope that we shall not find that some of the money is draining away to other areas which have traditionally been the responsibility of other Departments. [Interruption.]

The Secretary of State mocks that idea from a sedentary position, but at the margin there are areas where money from the health service budget could be allocated to other budgets that have traditionally been separate. We saw that happen with the winter pressures money, when cash was deliberately moved through the health budget to local authorities for social services purposes. We seek an assurance that next week's announcement will be an announcement of money for use in the NHS, not money to be channelled through health for use in other areas. The Government have already broken their promise not to raise taxes. We must hope, as a minimum, that the tax hoard that they have been collecting will at least come back in part to the NHS.

Before the general election, the Labour party deliberately raised expectations that waiting lists would be slashed, resources increased and hospital closures halted in order to entice voters into the polling booths, only to dash them. Waiting lists have soared. Real spending increases have been lower than the average of the 18 Conservative years. Scores of hospitals face closures, mergers or downgrading. In opposition, Labour criticised the staging of pay increases; in government, it staged them. In opposition, Labour cynically attacked the operation of the internal market; in government, seeing that it worked, Labour retained the essence of it.

Patients will understand what is going on, because they will live with the consequences. No matter what the statistics tell him, Joe Public will know from experience, and from the experiences of his family, friends and neighbours, whether the Government's promises to deliver a better, more effective health service have been kept. Moreover, if he voted Labour because of its pledges on the NHS, he will know that he has been conned. He is the one who will pay the price for the diversion of resources away from the real priorities, the most pressing areas of clinical need, and into the massaging of figures to suit the Government's need. It is the allocation of resources, not by doctors, but by spin doctors.

There lies the challenge for all Governments. The public, the users of the service, are interested, not in statistics, but in receiving quality care when they need it. Their perception of that care will be shaped partly by their expectations, and the Prime Minister would be wise to reflect on that before he makes any more rash promises about a wait-free accident and emergency service.

However, let us rise above the short-term issues—the political knockabout. Let us assume that the Government, in an almighty act of contrition, acknowledged the achievements of the past two decades in the health service, recognised the folly of their own adventure into the cul-de-sac of waiting list manipulation, and acknowledged the complexity of the challenges confronting the NHS. If they were to embark on a constructive, non-partisan debate about the future of the health service, we would welcome that, the vast majority of professionals in the service would welcome it and the public would welcome it.

What would that debate address? Several hon. Members have acknowledged that there is cross-party consensus on the objectives of the modern NHS: the cost-effective provision of state-of-the-art, free-at-the-point-of-delivery health care on the basis of clinical need. The political debate surrounding the NHS is not about objectives but about how best to achieve them.

Fifty years on from the foundation of the service, Britain is a very different place. We are living longer, we expect higher standards of health care and we are immensely wealthier. When the service was created, the range of treatments available was limited, not by rationing, but by the level of development of medical technology. The question whether procedures or treatments should be available is now becoming a burning issue. The forthcoming availability of Viagra may focus public attention on that issue. We are told that the costs of providing Viagra could be £1 billion a year, and many people will question whether that is a proper use of NHS resources.

The great British public know that health care is rationed, even though they will never hear that word from the Government. Most of the public understand and accept that a system such as ours requires some element of rationing, but they do not accept that the rationing that takes place should be arbitrary or should be done behind closed doors. The first subject for national debate, therefore, is how we prioritise need and how we define the limits of our publicly funded health service in a way that is fair and equitable.

The second subject for debate is how we provide the resources for the health service that the British people need and expect in the 21st century. That debate must be undertaken on the basis of pragmatism—a desire to deliver the best possible health service to the people of this country—not on the basis of political dogma.

We on the Opposition Benches will not shrink from criticising the Government if they fail to deliver on their reckless pre-election pledges, nor shall we shrink from criticising them if they simply divert money from more important things to achieve them. We shall attack changes that are proposed for ideological or political reasons, and that are flawed as a result. We shall continue to be proud of the success of the Conservative reforms of the health service, while never falling into the arrogance of imagining that there was not scope for improvement and evolution. We shall challenge and test the Government on their innovations—such as the National Institute for Clinical Excellence—searching for weaknesses, seeking ways to improve, as is the Opposition's duty.

Above and beyond that, when the Government are ready, we shall be ready to engage in the bigger debate: the debate about the scope and resourcing of our health service for generations to come, because that is what matters to the British people as we enter the new millennium.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. Alan Milburn): Over the past few weeks, the entire country has been celebrating the 50th anniversary of the national health service. It is appropriate that the House should take part in those celebrations this evening. Many of us have visited towns and cities over the past week and seen a national celebration of a national institution that is still the envy of the world, as the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) pointed out.

For me, it has been a special privilege to be a Health Minister in this 50th year, as I have been able to meet so many people who have contributed so much to the national health service over those 50 years. At the outset, I pay particular tribute to the staff of the NHS—the 1 million people who work in the health service today, and the many millions more who have contributed so much to the service of others during the past five decades. As my hon. Friends the Members for Enfield, North (Ms Ryan) and for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) reminded the House, all of us who depend on the health service owe those people an enormous debt of gratitude, and it is right that we record that.

During the progress of the National Health Service Bill through the House, Nye Bevan predicted what the health service would bring to our country. He said:

"I believe it will lift the shadow from millions of homes. It will keep very many people alive who might otherwise be dead . . . It will produce higher standards for the medical profession. It will be a great contribution towards the wellbeing of the common people of Great Britain."—[Official Report, 30 April 1946; Vol. 422, c. 63.]

Nye Bevan was right. Fifty years on, it is impossible to imagine life in Britain without the national health service, and we should all be proud of what the NHS has achieved: the great advances in medicine, the improvements in life chances, the banishing—as my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) rightly said—of the fear of becoming ill. We should also be proud of how those achievements have been made, through the simple but practical principle of providing care on the basis of need, and need alone.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health had the pleasure of meeting one of the first patients to be treated in the NHS, a lady called Sylvia Diggory, who is still alive and well today, I am pleased to say. She aptly summed up the achievements of the NHS and what it means. She said that we should be proud of our country because, "We still have a health care system where, if you collapse in the street, they feel your pulse before they feel your wallet."

The Government abide by the principle on which the Labour Government created the health service 50 years ago—that the best health services should be available to all on the basis of need, not on the ability to pay or who the patient's GP happens to be. We were elected in May last year to make sure that the country once again has a national health service that is true to those founding principles.

The 50th anniversary of the NHS has been accompanied by much comment about its past, and much more comment and speculation about its future—about whether the NHS is sustainable as a comprehensive service providing care free at the point of use, funded from general taxation. That debate has been going on for 50 years.

Fifty years ago, the Opposition Benches, just as now, were filled with people who believed that that could not be done. This evening, we have seen a spectacular rewriting of history on those Benches—cases of selective amnesia on a grandiose scale. Thanks to my hon. Friends the Members for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths) and for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore), we have unearthed some of the history that the Tory party would prefer to forget: not just that the hon. Friends of the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) 50 years ago voted against the National Health Service Bill once, twice or three times—that might have been reasonable, as there may have been points of detail that were not quite right—but that they voted 51 times against the National Health Service Bill. Some things never change.

We heard from the right hon. Member for South-West Surrey (Mrs. Bottomley), for example, who questioned the ability of the NHS to progress in the next 50 years as it has over the past 50 years. She hinted that the future of the NHS must lie in rationing and charging, and many supposedly well-informed commentators share that view. However, the Government reject that analysis. As the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) rightly said, the NHS, funded from general taxation, is the best, most efficient, most cost-effective and fairest means of providing health care. We have given the world something that we should be proud of: a system that works, is efficient and is fair.

I pay tribute to the compelling speech by the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell). He argued the case for a modern health service based on its founding principle: to provide care on the basis of clinical need. He rightly pointed out the great clinical and economic advantages of that approach, because it is inherently more cost-effective and efficient than alternative systems of health care provision.

I do not know whether it was deliberate, but the right hon. Gentleman's speech was in marked contrast to that of the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) to the Conservative Medical Society. She posed many questions about the future of the national health service and came up with precisely no answers, apart from one, as my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Dr. Stoate) rightly said—the need for what she called "a flourishing private sector" in health care. What a starting point for someone who aspires, at least on the face of it, to being the Secretary of State for Health.

There could not be a clearer difference between the Conservative party and the Labour party on the future of the health service. Our starting point is not to persuade people to opt out of the national health service; it is to make the NHS the best health care system, public or private, in the world. That is our ambition, and it should be the right hon. Lady's, too.

Miss Widdecombe: May I put two questions to the Minister? First, do his remarks suggest that the Government want to ban the private sector? [Interruption.] That is the logical conclusion of what he is saying. Secondly, as I told the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) earlier, there is a sum of money that goes into the nation's health, some of which comes from general taxation and some from private health insurance, individual payments and large organisations such as trade unions. Does the Minister accept that, if we remove completely the private element of that money, the only effect is to reduce the total sum that goes into the nation's health?

Mr. Milburn: The answer to the right hon. Lady's first question is no. In answer to the second, I refer her to the speech of the right hon. Member for Charnwood, which extolled the virtues of a system of health care funded from general taxation, in which the priority is to see year-on-year improvements in the public's health service.

Mr. Dorrell: The Minister said some kind things about my remarks earlier this evening. I am, indeed, fully committed to the principle of high-quality, universal provision through a tax-funded national health service. However, my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) asked a different question. Does the Minister accept that it is a paltry definition of a free society that people are free to spend their money on foreign holidays or on Mars bars, but not on their own health? Is it not part of a free society that we have a high-quality, tax-funded health system and that, alongside that, people can choose whether to spend their money on their health if that is what they choose to do?

Mr. Milburn: Of course, that is a matter of individual choice. The difference between my party and the right hon. Gentleman's is that we do not believe that the public should subsidise private medicine, which is why we have ended public subsidies to private health insurance.

Mr. Simon Hughes: My colleagues and I share the Minister's conviction that the objective of those in charge of the national health service should be to ensure that the health service increases the proportion of the population that it serves so that people do not gain advantages through paying. The test is whether the health service improves to the extent that there is no advantage in going private and everybody can be served by the public sector.

Mr. Milburn: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right; that should be the ambition for our health service. We should be encouraging people to opt into it rather than out of it.

I paid tribute to the right hon. Member for Charnwood, who made a genuinely compelling speech, but the only problem is that, in government, he did not always practise what he preached this evening. He lectured the House about the dangers of importing an alien ethos into the NHS, and about people from our country examining health care systems abroad. The problem is that that is precisely what happened when he and his right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Surrey were in charge, when we had this crazy internal market in the NHS. The internal market introduced competition, but the founding ethos of the NHS, and the way in which it works day in, day out, is based on co-operation and partnership rather than competition.

Mr. Dorrell: I thank the Minister for giving way again. I promise not to weary the House too often with these exchanges, but if the previous Government imported ideas on the proper management of a public sector health service, why does he think that, once we had introduced those changes, a considerable amount of ministerial time was consumed by people coming from France, Germany, the United States, New Zealand and Australia to see what we had done? We had delivered a more flexible public sector health service ahead of other countries, and the flow of ideas was not from them to us, but from us to them—and, belatedly, to the Labour party.

Mr. Milburn: That was a good try; if that was why those people visited this country, they were wrong, as the right hon. Gentleman is wrong. His system—the internal market—failed and left the NHS with record debt, record levels of decay in capital infrastructure and record levels of demoralisation among staff.

Over the past year, the new Government have been righting the wrongs that the previous Government introduced to the NHS, and we are restoring partnership to the heart of it, as my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) rightly said. That is not all; we have embarked on a 10-year modernisation programme, because however much the founding principles of the NHS still have resonance today, as they of course do, and however great its achievements—they have been immense—the NHS has to change, as all hon. Members recognise.

The NHS has to move on, keep pace with change and with public expectations and become far more modern and dependable in the way in which it operates. The Government were elected with a mandate not only to change the NHS, but to modernise it. We are modernising the NHS, by making it more responsive to the needs of its users; cutting waiting lists and cutting waiting times; introducing new, easy-access services such as NHS direct; and using the information technology revolution to give patients and staff instant access to test results and booked admissions.

We are modernising the NHS, secondly, by putting quality at the top of the agenda; placing new duties on trusts to assure quality and introducing new quality assurance systems in every part of the NHS; and implementing new standards—jointly drawn up by the Government and the professions, as the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) wanted—to provide guarantees to patients that, wherever they are treated, they will receive a first-class service in the NHS.

Thirdly, we are modernising the NHS by making sure that the needs of patients, not the needs of any institution, are the driving force for change. We want patients to receive more integrated forms of care than was possible under the old internal market. Whether staff work in the health care sector or the social care sector, they know that elderly people, disabled people and people with mental health problems need the support of not only the NHS, but social services and housing services.

[Mr. Milburn]

That is why we shall place new duties of partnership on the NHS and local government, create new co-operative ways of working between health and social services and set up new health action zones to modernise services and tackle health inequalities. This partnership approach recognises that the job of improving the nation's health is not only for the NHS. It requires action to cut unemployment, to build homes, to improve the environment and to tackle deprivation—to tackle the root causes of ill health.

The Government's programme—including getting councils to build homes again, the new deal and the minimum wage—amounts to the biggest anti-poverty, pro-health crusade that this country has seen in more than two decades. It will do what no Government, Labour or Tory, have ever done: it will improve the overall health of the whole population while improving the health of the worst-off at a faster rate.

That is an ambitious agenda for Government, and we make no apologies for that. We do not pretend that it can be achieved overnight, but we believe that our programme will, over 10 years, see the NHS getting demonstrably better year by year. Fifty years ago, neither staff nor patients could have dreamt of what the NHS is able to do today: heart transplants, keyhole surgery and telemedicine. The NHS tomorrow and over the next 50 years will do things that are now beyond our wildest dreams.

PETITIONS

Imphal Barracks (York)

10 pm

Mr. Hugh Bayley (City of York): I wish to present a petition signed by the lord mayor of York and supported by the signatures of the lord mayors of Leeds, Sheffield, Hull and Newcastle, the mayors of Sunderland, Durham, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Richmond in Yorkshire, Ripon, Harrogate, Scarborough, Wakefield, Calderdale, Doncaster, Driffield, Hornsea, Grimsby, North Lincolnshire, Kirton in Lindsey, and the chairs of Alnwick district council, Wear Valley district council and Wansbeck district council, which states:

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The Humble Petition of the Lord Mayors, Mayors and Chairs of Councils of the cities, boroughs and districts located in the Number 2 Region of the Armed Forces of the United Kingdom sheweth

That the said Petitioners support the continued presence of the Army's 2nd Division Headquarters at Imphal Barracks in York, and are opposed to any move of this command of soldiers based in the region to Edinburgh.

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House makes representations to Her Majesty's Government about the importance of retaining the Army's Northern Division Headquarters at Imphal Barracks in York.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To lie upon the Table.

Wirral Metropolitan College

10.2 pm

Mr. Ben Chapman (Wirral, South): There is great concern in Wirral, South about the plans of the board of Wirral Metropolitan college to close the Carlett Park site. That facility is a highly prized asset to further education in the area, and my constituents are outraged at the prospect of its closure. The petition, containing some 7,000 signatures, calls for a review by the Further Education Funding Council of the decision by the board of Wirral Metropolitan college. It states:

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House shall urge the FEFC to consider the residents' plight and investigate the reasons for the closure of a much used and highly valued local education facility, without which further education in this part of the Wirral would surely suffer.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To lie upon the Table.

Keresforth Centre, Barnsley

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Jon Owen Jones.]

10.3 pm

Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central): I am pleased to have secured this debate on continuing care and respite facilities for people with learning difficulties. The Keresforth centre looks after people with learning difficulties in my constituency. It is fitting that I am able to debate this health issue relating to my constituency so close to the 50th anniversary of the national health service, and immediately after a debate devoted to the NHS. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Health and his colleagues—especially my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State—for their stewardship of the Department since the election.

My constituency has benefited from the extra money that the Government have provided for the waiting list initiatives. It has also been made part of a health action zone covering Barnsley, Doncaster and Rotherham. That is particularly important in my area, which has a higher than average proportion of elderly infirm people and a very large number of elderly people suffering industrial diseases—a legacy of our industrial past. I sincerely hope that our health action zone status will help to deal with the problem, but I believe that, despite all the problems that Barnsley has now and has suffered in the past, ours is the lowest-funded health authority in the country; so we are somewhat hampered.

I want to discuss learning disabilities and long-term continuing and respite care in the Barnsley area, with particular reference to the Keresforth centre. My attention was drawn to some of the problems surrounding the centre by a number of elderly carers who wrote to me or visited my advice surgery. They were worried about staffing levels and problems in attracting staff; but on further investigation, and following discussions with the health authority, the community and priority services trust—which is responsible for the centre—and the local authority, problems came to light that went a little further than the immediate question of staffing levels. I refer to long-term planning problems.

There is a short-term problem in relation to the improvement of facilities, but what I want to discuss specifically is how, in the light of changes that have occurred over the past few years, we can make plans to deal with the problems of people with learning disabilities. In my constituency—and presumably throughout the country—there has been an increased demand for continuing care for such patients.

As my hon. Friend the Minister said when winding up the last debate, that is partly because the NHS now enables those people to live far longer than they could in the past. Planning assumptions made many years ago about the throughput of patients, how long carers would have to look after their children and so forth, must now be re-examined. Carers who are now elderly are looking after their adult children, and finding that respite care is not readily available because of the increase in demand for existing facilities.

A number of factors contribute to the present position. I have mentioned the longevity of patients, but there is also the increase in the number of emergency admissions.

[Mr. Eric Illsley]

Such issues are well understood by Barnsley health authority and Barnsley metropolitan borough council—and, as I have said, by the trust that is responsible for the Keresforth centre. Blame should not be apportioned to anyone; it is a case of flagging up the issue for future reference, and considering how it can best be dealt with.

All the organisations that I have mentioned reacted swiftly when the issue was raised a couple of weeks ago, and the health authority has not been slow to provide money for the recruitment of nurses to alleviate the staffing problems that led to our investigation.

I also pay tribute to the staff of the trust and, in particular, those at the Keresforth centre, who do a difficult and demanding job. They perform their tasks well. I visited the centre two or three weeks ago, and was impressed by the difficult job that the nurses have to do, and the surroundings and circumstances in which they do it.

The problem is one of recognising the increased need in the area and providing for it—planning now for increased facilities. We have to start planning now.

The Keresforth centre opened in 1984, which was not long ago, yet the planning assumptions on which it was based are now somewhat out of date. At that time, most of the long-term care for learning disability was provided out of district. The centre opened with 48 beds in the day hospital, and grew to a maximum of 68 beds with day hospital and community mental health teams by about 1989. Unfortunately, there was little investment in the centre after that, and it suffered continuing problems.

The buildings which make up the centre were built for able patients. At the time, the people with learning difficulties for whom the centre was to cater were ambulant—they could walk about and use the facilities. Now, more and more patients are severely disabled and require wheelchair access, for which the facilities simply were not built, so there are immediate access problems.

Due to the increased demand, patients now have to share bedrooms and facilities. Some rooms are shared by four adult people with learning disabilities. As I said, those people are living longer—into adulthood—and they have problems of dignity and privacy. Some patients even enter into relationships with other patients, and they do not have the privacy to pursue those relationships with some dignity. Thus the facilities available for patients cause problems, which obviously causes friction, especially with patients with challenging behaviour—I understand that they are on the increase.

Responsibility for the buildings passed to the local authority, and, as my hon. Friend knows well, during the 18 years of Tory government—in particular since 1990—my local authority suffered greatly because of the amount of revenue support grant it receives as a result of the standard spending assessments. The money simply has not been there to invest in that provision. Sadly, one of the houses within the complex closed in 1995—an example of what the health service has done is that the initial cost of the buildings to the health service was 20 per cent. above average, and now it is 20 per cent. below average. The authority has gone a long way to improve its financial position in that regard.

The inadequacy of the buildings is compounded by increased demand. The learning disabled are living longer, which again is a tribute to the NHS. Assumptions were made on that basis. The number of severely disabled people has increased. Previously, there was a 50:50 split between the severely disabled and the mildly and moderately disabled. Now, the majority of patients are severely disabled. Emergency admissions have to be dealt with by the Keresforth centre, as that is the only remaining flexibility within the system, and it puts an extra strain on the availability of beds.

An increasing number of clients have challenging behaviour, which basically means violence. It is not a case of a patient being difficult to handle or a little boisterous, but of a patient going up to a nurse with a knife—that is difficult behaviour with which to deal. The result is a waiting list for placements at the Keresforth centre and a reduction in respite facilities for the elderly carers whom I have mentioned, many of whom are finding it very difficult to manage.

One carer appeared in a short television programme about the Keresforth centre. Mr. Madeley is 88 years old and cares for his 54-year-old disabled daughter. On national television, he repeated the claim that he has made many times, that he wishes that his daughter dies before he does, because he does not know what will happen to her if he is no longer able to care for her. Such a problem is not confined to Barnsley; there are carers of that age group all over the country. I came across a reference to one carer in Sheffield who, at the age of 95, is caring for an adult child. How can such people cope and look after their children in such circumstances?

Some of the letters I have received are very moving. One is from a Mrs. Robinson, who looks after her brother. She writes:

"It is hard enough for me to let my brother go for respite care, but I need the break now and again to spend more time with my husband, daughter and son."

That lady must have a very understanding family.

A letter from Mr. and Mrs. Dobson—no relation to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, I assume—states:

"We are the parents of Shaun, aged 31, who suffers from severe learning difficulties, epilepsy and double incontinence. He requires and receives lots of love, care and attention."

Their son attends the day care unit.

Mrs. Crossley writes:

"My son is 25 years old and is severely mentally handicapped hyperactive and incontinent."

The father of the 25-year-old is in his 70s. He is also worried about provision for his son after he passes on.

Staffing shortages at the Keresforth centre have, to some extent, been resolved. Every one of the letters that I have read out, and all the others that I have not, pay tribute to the staff, who do a marvellous job. They were originally employed to look after more able patients, but now look after more severely handicapped patients and those with challenging behaviour. The centre had some difficulty in finding suitably qualified staff, but the health authority came forward with additional funding to help to attract staff to Barnsley. I hope that, next year, further help will be made available.

There is a problem, and it is increasing as more and more pressure is put on the system. Elderly carers worry about what will happen to their adult children, and the number of patients is increasing. There appears to be no available funding for at least three years to expand and improve bedrooms and facilities at the Keresforth centre.

Can my hon. Friend the Minister say anything to encourage us on that front? At the same time, will he take a long-term view and especially consider the nationwide problem of elderly carers? Then, we can begin to plan for their future and perhaps relieve some of their worries.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. Alan Milburn): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) on his choice of subject for this debate. It is of great importance to many people because it concerns not just people with learning disabilities but, as he rightly pointed out, parents, relatives and friends of people with learning disabilities.

My hon. Friend raised the particular issue of the Keresforth centre in Barnsley. Like him, I pay tribute to the staff who I know from what I have read have done a sterling job, often in extremely difficult circumstances. The joint review of Barnsley social services, which was undertaken in January and February last year, concluded that services for people with learning disabilities were of good quality. That is important and, I hope, offers some assurance at least to friends, relatives and carers of those who are provided with important services in that area.

I am pleased that the local statutory authorities are now fully aware of the concerns that my hon. Friend raised, and are seeking to address the problems. Barnsley health authority, Barnsley Community and Priority Services NHS trust and Barnsley borough council all acknowledge that there is a shortfall in community placements. They are holding discussions to find ways of addressing the problem.

I gather that there was a very constructive meeting last night. I do not know whether that was a coincidence, or whether this debate has acted as a spur. There is clearly joint ownership of the issue, and a recognition of the need to provide group homes for individuals with learning disabilities currently living in the community, where their current care arrangements are likely to break down.

The health authority has responded to the pressure on learning disability services by making some additional investments. For example, it has put in an additional £140,000 a year to increase nurse staffing. It has also put in £16,000 to maintain the provision of respite care.

The authority recognised that, because of the increasing dependency of residents at the Keresforth centre, there was a need for more nurses in the unit, and it recently increased the number of full-time nursing posts by four, as the first instalment of an acknowledged greater need. It also upgraded all vacant posts to E grade, and by the end of last month all posts had been filled. Furthermore, it created a separate fund to start addressing the need for long-term continuing care packages.

Both the health authority and the local authority recognise the need for more residential places, and the effect that those would have on the provision of respite care. They recognise the importance of working together to make the best use of available resources.

My hon. Friend asked about funding for Barnsley health authority, and I understand the problem. We increased Barnsley's allocation this year by nearly £6 million—a 5 per cent. increase in cash terms—to £110 million. It is nevertheless the health authority furthest from its capitation target, and we are committed to bringing all health authorities to their targets as soon as practicable. That is why Barnsley health authority received the highest growth in percentage terms this financial year of any health authority in England. Who knows—before long there might even be some more good news around the corner.

The issues that my hon. Friend highlighted are important nationally as well as locally. They reflect the fact that the pace of change in all walks of life has increased. Advances in medicine and science are helping people to live longer and better than ever before. Those are surely welcome developments. Patterns of family life are changing, and public expectations are rising, especially in what people seek from their public services.

People with learning disabilities and their carers are rightly expecting more from services than they did in the past. That is a welcome development. Many people with learning disabilities now aspire to a home of their own and a job, when previously their future would have been life in an old long-stay hospital or attendance at a large adult training centre. People with learning disabilities are also living longer, and an increasing number of people with multiple disabilities are surviving into adulthood.

In order to meet the pressures that those welcome developments bring, the health and social care systems need to change and to work more in concert. As my hon. Friend knows, the Government are determined to break down what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State rightly called the Berlin walls between health and social care which work against the provision of well-co-ordinated services.

That is particularly true in the field of learning disabilities. People with learning disabilities can be on the fault line of the divide between health and social care. A recent national inspection of learning disability services found that successful arrangements for services for people with learning disabilities crucially depend on social services departments working together with other agencies, especially health, housing and further education. Where such arrangements are not in place, users are less well served. The measures that we are taking should make it easier for authorities to work more closely together.

My hon. Friend rightly referred to the breaking down of barriers that is epitomised by the successful bid for a health action zone in his area. Indeed, I was pleased earlier this year to launch the health action zone in the South Yorkshire coalfields. I know that a huge amount of hard work went into preparing the bid. An even greater amount of work is now going into making it successful and making it work on the ground.

The zones are at the forefront of the implementation of our plans to improve health and health care. They are the most vivid expression of a new spirit of partnership between organisations which, after all, have a common purpose—to improve the lot of local communities. That is certainly epitomised by the South Yorkshire coalfields HAZ, which is led by a partnership of health authorities and the metropolitan councils.

To give substance to the co-operation that will be necessary in the future, a new statutory duty of partnership will be placed on local NHS bodies to work together for the common good and to ensure that local government services and NHS services work in a much more integrated fashion than has perhaps been the case in the past. Before too long, a White Paper will be published on the development of social services and significant work on the regulation and inspection of services.

[Mr. Alan Milburn]

My hon. Friend referred to the important role played in his local community, and communities up and down the country, by people who care for others. The Government value the vital role that carers play. Carers are a hugely important part of the fabric of our society. Caring is something that touches us all, and I know of the difficult decisions that families sometimes have to take.

My hon. Friend has raised those issues here this evening. As he said, carers often take on enormous responsibilities at a significant cost to themselves. That is why my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister recently announced that he had asked my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State to lead a Government-wide review of measures to help carers. The aim is to develop an integrated approach to carers across government as part of a new national strategy for carers. We want to address carers' concerns and give them more support than they have at the moment, which is what my hon. Friend's constituents are rightly crying out for.

In considering the needs of carers, we have recognised the importance of good-quality and accessible respite care to them and the people whom they care for. There is a lot more that we can do to ensure that appropriate and cost-effective services are available. The social services inspectorate has almost completed a project on short-term breaks for carers.

The aim has been to examine what works and why in the organisation, delivery and quality of short-term breaks. This has been done through a review of current research on the subject and by fieldwork visits to schemes of particular interest. We hope that the resultant report will assist authorities to drive up standards and get better value for money in this important component of their services.

Nationally, we have in place a programme of work to support the development of better services for people with learning disabilities, including increasing training levels and investing in initiatives to improve the recruitment, retention and return to practice of trained staff, who are desperately needed, especially in the learning disabilities field. However, it is for the local statutory authorities to determine the pattern of services to be developed locally in the light of local needs and resources.

As I said, a joint review of Barnsley social services, conducted by the Audit Commission and the social services inspectorate early last year, concluded that services for people with learning disabilities in Barnsley were generally of good quality. My hon. Friend has rightly drawn attention to the concerns of his constituents about the current levels of services and the future for their sons and daughters who have learning disabilities. The local statutory authorities fully recognise the need to develop the local capability to deal with demand and are seeking to address the problem. I have asked my officials to continue to monitor the situation in the hope that things can improve locally.

Orders of the Day

Landmines Bill

Order for Second Reading read.—[Queen's consent, on behalf of the Crown, signified.]

9.34 am

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Robin Cook): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

In the time that it will take us to complete the Second Reading of the Bill, five people, somewhere in the world, will become casualties of landmines. Two of them will be killed; the other three are likely to be maimed for life. It is likely that they will be civilian and poor, and they will have already endured the terror and the destruction of war. One among them may well be a child, who will never run again because of a moment of tragedy at play. Their story is told across the world hundreds of times every week. About 60 million landmines lie scattered in 70 countries. They remain long after the fighting has stopped, and cause suffering out of all proportion to their possible military value. Hundreds of thousands of refugees cannot return to their homes because of landmines, and people cannot farm their land without risking death. Many are forced to take that risk simply to feed their families or to gather water and firewood to keep their families alive. After the trauma of war, landmines pollute the peace.

When the Government came to power, one of our first acts was to ban landmines unilaterally. We said that there was to be no more trade, no more transfer or production of landmines and a moratorium on their use. We said that stocks of landmines held by the British military would be destroyed and that we would do everything that we could to work for a wider ban. We have kept those promises: we have destroyed half the stockpile of the 1 million landmines that we inherited from the previous Government. By the end of this year, we shall have destroyed three quarters of that stockpile.

As far as we are aware, no other nation has done as much to destroy its stock of landmines. We played a leading role in the negotiations that led to the Ottawa convention, and we signed it at the first opportunity. Britain helped to draft the Ottawa convention, so it is entirely fitting that we should help to bring it into force. That is why the House is sitting today: if we pass the Bill, Britain will be among the first 40 countries to ratify the convention and to bring it into legal force.

I say to the House and to the Opposition that the Bill gives full effect to the terms of the Ottawa convention. Clause 2 prohibits British service men, or any other British citizen, from using, developing, producing, possessing or exporting a landmine. It also prevents them from assisting, encouraging or inducing anyone else to do those things. Nor is this a token offence; conviction under clause 2 brings with it liability to a prison sentence of up to 14 years.

The right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) has been expressing concern about the provisions of clause 5. Let me help him by explaining its limited purpose. Clause 5 does not provide British service men with any loophole to take part in the deployment of landmines. British forces will be instructed in their rules of engagement for any exercise or operation that they must not use, possess, transport or handle landmines. Clause 5 provides British service men with a shield against unreasonable prosecution because they took part in a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercise in which American forces deployed landmines. Without clause 5, any British Army officer present at a NATO planning meeting who heard that American forces taking part may possess landmines would be obliged to say that he must leave the meeting, or would render himself liable to a prison sentence of 14 years. I cannot believe that the right hon. and learned Gentleman wants to put our service men in that position. If he presses that point, he will effectively be arguing that it is impossible for Britain to implement the Ottawa convention without withdrawing from the NATO integrated command.

Mr. Michael Howard (Folkestone and Hythe): To avoid any doubt, let me make it clear that that is not the Opposition's position. We are saying that clause 5 is inconsistent with the convention. If the Foreign Secretary had woken up earlier to the need for provisions such as clause 5, he would have amended the convention accordingly. Did he make any attempt to do so?

Mr. Cook: Clause 5 is wholly consistent with the Ottawa convention. If the right hon. and learned Gentleman wants proof, I can tell him that our provision for British service men is similar to that made by the Government of Canada, who were the driving force behind the convention and who would certainly do nothing to undermine it. It is humbug that the Conservatives who, in power, kept their distance from the convention, should now complain that the Bill does not go far enough. If, in government, they had taken the line that we took at the general election, the Ottawa convention might have been completed earlier. The Opposition have promised us their help in passing the Bill. It would be warmly welcomed if we could fulfil what we understood to be an agreement between both Front Benches to achieve our shared commitment that Britain should be among the first 40 countries to ratify the convention.

Mr. Menzies Campbell (North-East Fife): The Government will have the help of the Liberal Democrats in ensuring that the Bill passes all necessary stages today.

The Attorney-General, who often intervenes on matters of this sort, not for the Government, but for the guidance of the whole House, is present today. Is the Secretary of State telling us that the Attorney-General advised him that the mere presence of a British officer at a NATO planning meeting could be a contravention of the Bill's criminal law provisions?

Mr. Cook: I am grateful for the hon. and learned Gentleman's assistance. I can assure him that the Law Officers concurred with everything in the Bill. The particular point to which he referred has had considerable discussion. My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General will make his own position clear if he wishes to do so, but I speak with the full authority of the Government, and with the full support of the Law Officers.

[Mr. Cook]

The Attorney-General (Mr. John Morris): I agree entirely with my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Cook: I am grateful to my right hon. and learned Friend—[Laughter.] My hon. Friends encourage me to give way more often to such interventions.

Our discussion of clause 5 highlights the serious problem of ensuring that every country bans landmines. The convention is not yet a global ban. There are countries that have not signed it, including some of the largest producers and exporters of landmines. We are working hard to bring those countries on board. A global ban must be exactly that. We are working in forums such as the conference on disarmament in Geneva to bring in others step by step. A limited, but useful, first step would be to have every country sign up to a ban on the export of landmines.

By passing the Bill today, the House will send a clear message from Britain to countries yet to join the international crusade against landmines. The House will send a clear message, too, to all who live with the threat of landmines. The Ottawa convention does not just ban production and use of landmines, but mandates signatories to help remove landmines, and to look after victims of landmines not removed in time.

A landmine costs only a few pounds to produce, but on average, the same landmine will cost several hundred pounds to clear. Britain is helping the worst-affected countries to clear landmines. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has committed Britain to doubling its annual expenditure on demining. The British Army's mine and training information centre has trained more than 2,000 workers from countries in which landmines have been laid. It has also trained workers from British non-governmental organisations that work in those countries. The House will wish to record its appreciation of the courage and dedication of our soldiers, and of the staff of NGOs, such as the Red Cross, who have worked hard so that the people of other countries may be freed from fear of landmines.

Our century has taught us many lessons. We have learnt that humanity can be capable of the most evil and cruel acts. We have learnt, too, that humanity can look away from suffering. However, we have also learnt that humanity can rise above cruelty and blindness. Sometimes, humanity can decide that something is wrong, and can demand action to stop it. It has done so in the case of landmines.

Many people and many organisations have played a part in awakening the conscience of the world to the casualties of landmines. The Nobel peace prize given to the International Campaign to Ban Landmines was a well-deserved recognition of its determination. All hon. Members will be aware from their postbags of the immense contribution made by Diana, Princess of Wales to bringing home to many of our constituents the human costs of landmines. The best way in which to record our appreciation of her work, and the work of NGOs that have campaigned against landmines, is to pass the Bill, and to pave the way towards a global ban on landmines.

Mr. Michael Howard (Folkestone and Hythe): I join the Secretary of State in his condemnation of indiscriminate use of anti-personnel landmines and the suffering that they cause around the world. We have all been moved by the plight of the victims, and we are all aware of the arbitrary and cruel manner in which innocent civilians have been killed or maimed. We are all conscious of the horror of weapons that remain in the ground long after the conflict that caused them to be put there has ceased.

I also join the Secretary of State in praising the work done by many campaigners and non-governmental organisations to raise the issue of a total ban in the public consciousness. They include the International Committee of the Red Cross, the Halo Trust and the Mines Advisory Group. Each has made a unique and important contribution. I should mention in particular the Nobel prize-winning International Campaign to Ban Landmines, which brought together more than 100 different organisations.

Individuals, too, have played a crucial role. The Foreign Secretary rightly paid tribute to Diana, Princess of Wales, whose work was invaluable. In many ways, the progress made on a landmines ban is a worthier memorial to her than some of the other projects that have received so much recent attention. I want to pay particular tribute, too, to my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Deedes, who has campaigned on the matter for many years and who took it up long before it became a fashionable cause. His work merits special acknowledgement.

The role of British forces in providing mine clearance advice and support should not be underestimated. The Royal Engineers and the Royal Ordnance Corps have been crucial to the success of demining operations. Retired members of the British armed forces have continued their work by joining such groups as the Halo Trust and the Mines Advisory Group, to teach people in countries littered with anti-personnel mines how to remove them safely. Their work is not over. In areas such as Bosnia, demining remains a task vital to helping the country to return to something resembling what we call normality. We should pay tribute to the many people who do that dangerous job across the world, and to the companies—often British based—that are at the forefront of the demining effort.

I assure the Secretary of State that the official Opposition are committed to a meaningful ban on the sale and use of landmines. We support the spirit of the Ottawa convention, and made it clear as long ago as February that we would not obstruct the legislation, which was needed to allow the convention to be ratified. Like the Government, we look forward to the eradication of existing mines and the threat to life that they represent.

The road to the abolition of landmines is long, and we have not yet reached its end. It is also a road down which the United Kingdom had travelled a great distance before 1 May 1997. In April 1996, the previous Government announced that the United Kingdom would work actively towards a total worldwide ban on anti-personnel mines. They made it clear that, should such a ban be agreed, the United Kingdom would give up our anti-personnel landmine capability, and would destroy our stocks accordingly. The previous Government introduced an export moratorium and invested in mine clearance measures around the world. They announced their intention to destroy half our existing stocks of mines as soon as practicable, and to destroy the remainder when the international ban was agreed or viable alternatives became available. Severe restrictions on their deployment were also announced.

The Lyon G8 summit in 1996 included a declaration calling on all countries to make every effort to secure a global ban on the proliferation and indiscriminate use of anti-personnel landmines. The declaration also welcomed the bans already adopted by some countries, including the United Kingdom, on the production, use and export of those weapons.

By October 1996, the European Union was ready, with British backing, to declare a common moratorium on the export of anti-personnel landmines. The European Union also took action to prevent the issuing of licences for the transfer of mine technology. That initiative was presented to the Ottawa conference and the United Nations General Assembly.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): As always, I have listened carefully to what the right hon. and learned Gentleman has to say. It is academic now, but why did the previous Government refuse to introduce legislation on the matter?

Mr. Howard: Simply because the Ottawa convention had not been agreed or signed. This legislation is designed to implement that convention, and this is the appropriate time to bring it forward.

By January 1997, Britain was ready to table a mandate to set up a committee at the conference on disarmament in Geneva to negotiate a global ban on anti-personnel landmines. During that time, some £22 million had been spent by the previous Government on mine clearance programmes across the world. The previous Government lived up to their promises, and did not promise what they could not deliver.

When the present Government came to office after the election, the Foreign Secretary made an early statement about their policy on landmines. Characteristically, it was accompanied by the usual hype—he has been at it again today. It was presented as an early example of the Government's so-called ethical foreign policy. It was presented as if it were a great change from the policy of the previous Government. In fact, the two were virtually indistinguishable. In an article in the February edition of the journal of the Royal United Services Institute, Dr. Paul Bowers and Mr. Tom Dodd said:

"A possible irony is that until the Ottawa Convention enters force or 2005, whichever comes earlier, the essence of the Labour Government's policy on APMs, an export ban and use only in exceptional circumstances, is not altogether different from that reached by the Conservative Government in April 1996."

It is true that, since then, matters have moved on somewhat. [Interruption.] Of course, that is true. In December 1997, the Government signed the Ottawa convention, which the legislation before the House today is designed to implement. We should concentrate on the convention, the legislation and the relationship between the two.

The Opposition support the spirit of the convention, which is why we shall not oppose the Bill. However, the limitations of the convention should be recognised. The United States of America, Russia, China and many other powerful and significant countries are not signatories. The convention will not introduce a worldwide ban.

The legislation raises many important issues, which we shall not be able to explore fully today. So reluctant are the Government to allow proper debate to take place—[Interruption.]—so nervous are they of proper scrutiny, that they have made it clear that they are not prepared to move a business motion to extend today's sitting beyond its normal time. I want to put on record the fact that the official Opposition asked for that extension. [Interruption.] We wanted to give the Bill the proper scrutiny that it deserves. The Government's attitude was that, unless we finish at 2.30 pm today, the Bill will fall. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. The right hon. and learned Gentleman must be heard.

Mr. Howard: That is the extent to which the Government hold this place in contempt. We were not prepared to see the Bill fall.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you allow the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) to look round and see how many of his hon. Friends are present to support him?

Hon. Members: Three.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Howard: If the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) thinks that numbers are the sole criterion by which to judge the proper scrutiny of a Bill, he has a great deal to learn about the way in which legislation can be scrutinised.

We were not prepared to see the Bill fall today, so we have reluctantly accepted the timetable imposed on us by the Government. I strongly hope that the Bill will receive in the other place the careful scrutiny that we shall inevitably be unable to give it here.

In particular, we shall be unable to explore in sufficient detail the many questions that arise on the scope of the convention.

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. George Robertson): May I ask the shadow Foreign Secretary two brief questions? Yesterday, he was offered a briefing on the technical details of the Bill. Why did he turn down that offer? As the right hon. and learned Gentleman and the shadow Secretary of State for Defence, who is noticeably not present for the Second Reading, were given the Bill last week, why, in all that time and given his legal training, has be tabled only one amendment?

Mr. Howard: Because the amendment is sufficient to enable me to make the points that I can make within the time that the Government are prepared to make available today. [Interruption.] I am answering the Secretary of State's question. I am concerned to use the time available to me to deal with the relationship between the convention and the legislation. The particular point that I want to make is about the scope of clause 5. The briefing was not by the Foreign Office, which is responsible for the convention, but by the Secretary of State for Defence, and it did not deal with that matter. That is why the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell), who represents the Liberal Democrat party, and I did not accept that offer of a briefing yesterday. [Interruption.] That is the reason. Perhaps we can continue the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is not right for the right hon. and learned Member to be interrupted. He must be heard. The House must come to order.

Mr. Howard: I hope that the Secretary of State for Defence will deal with some of the questions that are raised. Will he confirm—not in some private briefing, but on the Floor of the House—that the convention does not prohibit the use of anti-tank mines, even if anti-personnel mines are attached to them? Is it true that some of the most advanced anti-tank mines—such as the US Gator—are prohibited by the treaty, because the explosives contained in the anti-personnel mines associated with them are not attached to the main mine?

What is the position on the use of anti-personnel mines in association with anti-airfield weapons, such as the JP233? What are the Government's intentions on the many thousands of landmines that remain in position in the Falklands? Those are obviously very important questions, and I hope that Ministers will be able to answer them during the debate.

The history of this legislation is, to put it mildly, somewhat murky. The convention was signed last December. The Government made a commitment to ratify it as soon as possible. That was immediately modified to a commitment to ratify it as soon as the parliamentary timetable allowed. By February, no action had been taken to fulfil that major commitment.

In February, in response to a request from the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), I told him that the Opposition would not obstruct the legislation. We are told that work on the text of the Bill then began, but that it was not until 9 June, after comprehensive consultation with interested Whitehall Departments, that instructions were sent to parliamentary counsel. Even then, there was confusion, which was typified by unedifying reports that the blame for the failure to present legislation to ratify the convention was being passed between the Foreign Secretary and the Leader of the House.

At that stage, the Government did what they always do when they are to blame—they tried to transfer the blame to the Opposition. The Leader of the House said that the Government had heard only "very recently" that the Opposition would be willing to help with the progress of the legislation. The Secretary of State for Defence said that one of the reasons for lack of progress was that the Government had been waiting to hear from the Opposition. All that is totally untrue. The Government were told as long ago as February that the Opposition would co-operate with the passage of the Bill and would not seek to obstruct it. The delay is entirely the Government's fault.

The legislation is now before the House and for the first time we can compare the Bill with the treaty that it is supposed to put into effect. I remind the House that the treaty was signed by the United Kingdom without reservation or amendment. The Foreign Secretary characteristically boasted that the Government were able to play a major part in drafting the treaty. The Prime Minister said:

"the land mines treaty has done a superb job and we on this side support it thoroughly. Furthermore, it is another initiative in which the new Government played a leading role."—[Official Report, 10 December 1997; Vol. 302, c. 1010.]

In that case, why does the legislation not implement the convention? Why does it permit conduct that the convention expressly prohibits? Why is there such a huge gap between the Bill's provisions and those of the convention, and why are the Government once again saying one thing and doing another? I shall explain. The terms of article 1.1 of the convention are clear:

"Each State Party undertakes never under any circumstances:

(a) To use anti-personnel mines;

(b) To develop, produce, otherwise acquire, stockpile, retain or transfer to anyone, directly or indirectly, anti-personnel mines;

(c) To assist, encourage or induce, in any way, anyone to engage in any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention."

There is no doubt or ambiguity in that paragraph. It expressly prohibits assisting anyone to engage in any activity that is prohibited by the convention. What does the legislation contain? The relevant part is clause 5, which provides a defence for someone who is otherwise guilty of conduct that is prohibited by the legislation. That defence applies to joint operations conducted overseas with the armed forces of another Government in the course of which

"there is or may be some deployment of anti-personnel mines"

by the forces of the other Government who are not signatories to the convention. In those circumstances, according to clause 5, British forces are permitted to do anything other than actually lay anti-personnel mines. They can procure, transfer, modify, adapt or even prime landmines as long as they do not actually lay them.

That is not an academic point, because the other Government with whose forces we are perhaps most likely to enter into joint operations are the Government of the United States, who are not signatories to the Ottawa convention. The effect of clause 5 is that when British forces are engaged in joint operations with the United States or the forces of any country that is not a signatory to the convention, they are given full licence by the legislation to breach the Ottawa convention.

Mr. Robin Cook rose—

Mr. Howard: I shall finish the passage and then give way to the Secretary of State.

We may be told that it is important and essential for British troops to be able to operate in that way. That may be true, but it is absolutely and explicitly contrary to the provisions of the Ottawa convention. That has been pointed out not only by me but by numerous spokesmen on behalf of the campaigning groups that have paid careful attention to the provisions of the legislation and the way in which they differ from the convention.

The Government could have sought to amend the convention. Perhaps they will say whether they attempted to amend it and failed. If that is the case, they are guilty of extreme duplicity. Alternatively, did they simply not notice what the convention would mean? Was it perhaps not until after comprehensive consultations with interested Whitehall Departments, when the legislation was beginning to be drafted, that the difficulty came to light? If that is the case, the Government stand convicted of extreme incompetence. Either way, the Government are asking Parliament to legislate to permit conduct that would be completely contrary to a convention that they signed as recently as December.

Mr. Robin Cook: I plead with the right hon. and learned Gentleman not to attribute to everybody else the conspiracy under which he operates. Clause 2 faithfully and fully puts the Ottawa convention into British legislation. As the right hon. and learned Gentleman did not hear me the first time, I say again that it prohibits British troops from using, developing, producing, possessing or transferring landmines or assisting, encouraging or inducing any other person to do so. That provision will be clearly expressed in the rules of engagement for British forces. There will be no licence for British troops.

Clause 5 is purely prudential. It will protect British troops from being criminalised by the actions of American troops who may be taking part in the same operation. I shall put again the example that I gave earlier of a sapper sergeant who builds a bridge in a NATO exercise and, unknown to him, the Americans drive across it a truck containing landmines. We want to make it clear beyond doubt that such a man is not liable to conviction and 14 years in prison. If the right hon. and learned Gentleman is not willing to remove that doubt, I am beginning to understand why the Conservative party's senior defence spokesman has not turned up for the debate.

Mr. Howard: It is most unlikely that the conduct that the Foreign Secretary mentions would amount to a breach of the convention in the first place.

Mr. Malcolm Savidge (Aberdeen, North): Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Howard: No. I am dealing with the Foreign Secretary's point. Clause 5 is not needed to give effect to that situation.

Mr. Cook rose—

Mr. Howard: I shall give way when I have finished. Irrespective of whether it is needed to cover that situation, the point to be answered by the Foreign Secretary is that the terms of clause 5 are extremely wide. The only activity that it expressly prohibits in joint operations is the actual laying of a landmine. That is contained in clause 5(2). If what the Foreign Secretary seeks to achieve is his only concern, he could amend clause 5 here or in another place to meet that concern, but clause 5 is widely drawn and is contrary to the convention's language.

Mr. Cook: Of course clause 5 is widely drawn because its purpose is not to prohibit activities but to provide protection for British forces. The word "unlikely" will not do. The sapper sergeant may ask, "If I build this bridge, will I be liable to 14 years' imprisonment?" The answer that that is "unlikely" will not be sufficient. We want to put the matter beyond doubt. Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman now put it beyond doubt?

Mr. Howard: That is precisely why I say that if that is the Foreign Secretary's concern—I think that it is an unnecessary concern—it could be met by drafting the Bill narrowly, specifically to cover that point. The Foreign Secretary says that clause 5 does not prohibit activity. Of course he is right; clause 5 permits activity. The point is that clause 5 permits a wide range of activity—everything except laying a landmine—in contravention of the convention itself. We shall press the Government hard for explanations of that in Committee.

I hope that we shall hear more from the Government about the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Bill. Can the Government offer any estimate of the costs that they expect to arise from the need to examine and procure alternative technologies to meet the military capability previously provided by anti-personnel mines? Have they any idea of the costs of destroying the stocks of anti-personnel mines? If so, why are they not included in the memorandum? Is there any estimate of the costs of cancelling any support contracts, which are referred to in the memorandum? Those are important matters.

In February, the Opposition gave an undertaking not to obstruct the passage of the legislation. We shall honour that undertaking. We shall not in any sense seek to obstruct the Bill's passage, but the Bill is an imperfect animal. It merits the closest scrutiny. As a result of the Government's contemptuous attitude to the time to be made available for its scrutiny in the House, there is very little that we shall be able to do, but I hope that those deficiencies will, at least to some extent, be remedied when the Bill reaches another place.

Mr. David Marshall (Glasgow, Shettleston): I am delighted that, today, in one fell swoop, the Bill will complete all its House of Commons stages and be passed unanimously by the House. There is no conceivable reason why any hon. Member should vote against it.

I congratulate my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary, the Secretary of State for Defence, the Secretary of State for International Development and all their ministerial colleagues on all their efforts in the campaign against landmines and on their desire to ratify the Ottawa convention. It is another manifesto promise on which the Labour Government have delivered and will continue to deliver as we destroy the United Kingdom's stockpile of landmines.

Compare the record of the Labour Government with that of the last Tory Government and the miserable, shabby, weasel words of the shadow Foreign Secretary this morning. My only slight regret is that we did not introduce this legislation some weeks ago while the UK still held the presidency of the European Union, because it would have been one of the highlights of that presidency.

As chairman of the British group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, I am proud of the role that the IPU and our group have played in the international campaign over the past four years. I pay tribute to my predecessor,

[Mr. David Marshall]

Dame Jill Knight, now Baroness Knight, who campaigned vigorously in support of the resolution that was eventually carried unanimously by the IPU conference of some 130 nations, which called for a global ban on the use, production, stockpiling and transfer of anti-personnel mines. I am proud to have played a part in supporting that campaign at successive IPU conferences.

The Government have been one of the world leaders in the campaign, and the UK was one of the first nations to sign the Ottawa convention last December. We must all honour Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chrétien and his Government for their initiative in introducing the Ottawa convention. I also thank all my colleagues who have signed my early-day motion 1387, which calls for this very legislation.

The Bill enables our Government to ratify the Ottawa convention, which comes into effect only when 40 nations have done so. Why do we need to ratify the convention? We need to do so because there can be no more flagrant example of man's inhumanity to man in the modern world than the barbaric practice of planting anti-personnel mines, which kill 800 people and maim another 1,200 every month of every year. Since 1975, more than 1 million people have been killed or injured and, as my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has said, many of them were women and children, the most vulnerable members of society.

Estimates may vary, but one is that more than 100 million landmines are scattered indiscriminately throughout 62 countries, adversely affecting the economies of many of the poorest nations; preventing or delaying the development of agriculture and industry, the growing of food and much needed construction of good clean water supplies; and killing valuable livestock.

Expensive and scarce medical supplies are used up, and all civilians, including volunteer aid workers, are at risk. They will continue to be so as long as one landmine exists anywhere in the world. Those weapons will be capable of destruction for as long as they are there. Enormous sums of aid money that could be used for much more positive purposes have to be diverted to mine clearance. That is another worrying aspect of the situation.

I strongly suggest that all hon. Members read the report by the International Committee of the Red Cross entitled "The Worldwide Epidemic of Landmine Injuries", which graphically describes the horrific effect of blast and fragment mines. They will then realise only too well why we need this Bill. It is not only limbs that are blown off. Genitalia are destroyed and people are horrifically maimed. Reading that report would bring tears to hon. Members' eyes. I commend it to the House. Again, I praise the Government for all the humanitarian aid and assistance that they provide to people in need. I appeal to the Government to do more as soon as they can.

The Ottawa convention is not the end of the matter—nor is it perfect. It is only one step forward. Ratifying it and bringing it into the national law of each country as soon as possible is essential. Our Government have a vital role to play in persuading China, India, Russia and the United States to sign and ratify the convention.

Other nations such as Turkey and several African states refuse to support the convention. Perhaps the giving of political co-operation and aid should be linked to the recipient ratifying the convention. I ask my right hon. Friends to consider adopting such a policy, so taking another step forward.

Mr. John Smith (Vale of Glamorgan): Does my hon. Friend recognise the valuable role played by the North Atlantic Assembly in trying to convince some of those member states of the need to ratify the Ottawa convention?

Mr. Marshall: I am only too happy to do so, and I congratulate my hon. Friend on his activities in the campaign.

I congratulate all those countries, organisations and individuals who are making financial and physical contributions to the anti-landmines effort. An especially welcome new initiative is the movement towards partnership arrangements between Governments, private companies, organisations and wealthy individuals to raise extra funds for the campaign. I hope that those will be given every encouragement.

The treaty will need to be rigidly enforced and must be properly monitored. In addition, it will need to be reviewed from time to time to tighten any loopholes, to expand its aims, and to persuade even more countries to sign and ratify it.

It is not possible to have such a debate without paying tribute to the late Diana, Princess of Wales. More than anyone else in the world, she raised the profile of the campaign against landmines. It was fitting that the Prime Minister announced the legislation on 1 July, which would have been her 37th birthday, and I hope that it will become law before the first anniversary of her death on 31 August. There can be no greater tribute to her memory than that we all work together to ensure that there is a concentrated, co-ordinated and cohesive worldwide campaign, involving the utmost co-operation between Governments, aid agencies and citizens, to achieve an effective and total global ban on landmines. That must be our ultimate aim. If we do that, we can look forward to the day when people can live without fear of their next step being their last.

10.18 am

Mr. Menzies Campbell (North-East Fife): I commend the Government for having found the means and time by which to offer the House the opportunity to ratify the Ottawa convention—or, perhaps more correctly, to pass the legislation that is necessary in order that the Government may ratify it. Although I share some of the reservations that have been expressed by the shadow Foreign Secretary about the consequences of clause 5—to which we shall come in due course—I do not share his view that there is inadequate time. If the House approaches this matter sensibly and reasonably, the Bill can pass all its stages in this House today and can be sent post haste to the other place, in the hope that it can then pass quickly into our law.

I am delighted to have the opportunity to speak in this debate. I like to think that the consistent pressure and support that some of my right hon. and hon. Friends have directed towards the Government has encouraged them to proceed. Although I do not subscribe to the "We thought of it first" school of politics—well, not much—it is right to put it on record that it was at a Liberal Democrat conference on 20 December 1995 that we first passed a motion calling for a ban in almost exactly the same terms as those of the convention.

The purpose of the legislation is clear and unambiguous, and it has the overwhelming support of the House. It allows us to play our part in the elimination of a scourge on the lives of innocent civilians, who are often among the poorest people in the world, by prohibiting a military procedure that is now largely discredited.

The hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) referred to the late Princess of Wales. One could say that she lent the campaign her humanity and even her style to great effect, but others must be mentioned, too. I am thinking of, for example, Colonel Mitchell of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, one of the guiding lights behind the Halo Trust. He was responsible for an occasion in Aden which demonstrated the robustness of the Scottish regiments, but, in later life, he appreciated the horror of landmines and spent a great deal of time and effort seeking to advance the cause with which the Bill is associated. Also, as the shadow Foreign Secretary said, long before this was a fashionable issue, Lord Deedes had taken it up and sought to prosecute it with great vigour and robustness.

Someone else who must be mentioned, but who has not yet been referred to, is the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook). He is not in his place today, but I believe he is absent on parliamentary business. For hon. Members who do not know this—although they should—over the past three or four years at the North Atlantic Assembly the hon. Gentleman has been a consistent advocate of the need to ratify the Ottawa convention. His contribution to the debate and his efforts to persuade politicians of other countries, not necessarily as sympathetic as those Members of the House here today, have been very considerable. It is right and proper that we should recognise his contribution on this occasion.

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): As the hon. and learned Gentleman is spraying compliments around, he might like to mention Peter Truscott, a Member of the European Parliament, whom many of us remember holding a landmine at the Labour party conference four years ago and urging that the ban be part of Labour policy as soon as we formed a Government.

Mr. Campbell: I am really willing to offer congratulations only to those people I know personally. As the hon. Gentleman is in congratulatory mode, he may seek to catch your eye later, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

As the purpose of the Bill is clear, and is one for which there is universal support, the public will expect the House to proceed with dispatch. In a moment or two, I should like to remind the House of the scale of the problem, but let me deal first with clause 5, about which there is a genuine difference of legal interpretation. It might be the Attorney-General's view that mere presence at a discussion about the possibility of laying landmines might constitute an offence, but, in my legal experience, that is a somewhat novel proposition. I do not want to explore this issue in too much detail before we reach the appropriate stage of our proceedings, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but mere presence has never previously been regarded as sufficient to constitute a criminal offence.

The Foreign Secretary gave the example of the sapper. Someone who does not display what is called mens rea—a guilty intention—cannot be guilty of a crime. In the example that the right hon. Gentleman gave, the sapper clearly could not be guilty of a crime. The right hon. Gentleman said that the rules of engagement would be clear, and that British forces would know what was expected of them through the chain of command. What concerns us is that clause 5 provides a defence—that is its purpose—but that that defence is too wide. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) has been holding a conversation since he entered the Chamber. It is extremely unfair on any hon. Member who is speaking.

Mr. Campbell: I am grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but it is something that most of us have become used to.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): The hon. and learned Gentleman is talking about a sapper building a bridge, and referring to what my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said about the possibility of that sapper being involved in damages or court action arising out of his involvement with another country that was laying mines. The hon. and learned Gentleman talks about mens rea and so on. Is he trying to tell the House that in the middle of those activities, the sapper is going to have a copy of mens rea in his back pocket so that he knows what the law is? Get a life—join the real world! What my right hon. Friend is trying to do—although the hon. and learned Gentleman is a failed lawyer and cannot understand it—is to ensure that people are protected in law. That is the reason for clause 5.

Mr. Campbell: I was always taught that the personal attack was pretty well an admission of the inadequacy of the merits of the case being made. There is a serious foreign affairs issue here. The Foreign Secretary referred to the possibility of British troops engaged in operations with United States troops. The only place where the United States deploys large numbers of landmines at present is the Korean peninsula. That leads to the interesting question whether we are seeking to pass the Bill as proposed in order to ensure that British troops might be protected, as the Government urge, in relation to operations on the Korean peninsula. That would be a very interesting foreign policy development which the Government have not made plain.

I said that I should like to deal to some extent with the scale of the problem. There are 100 million landmines currently deployed in 70 of the poorest countries. For every mine cleared, it is estimated that another 20 are laid. There is one landmine for every 16 children in the world, and one for every 48 adults. Angola and Cambodia have more than one mine per member of the population, and British-laid mines dating from the second world war still pose a problem in Saharan Africa.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): Will the hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Campbell: No, I must make progress.

In Angola, one in every 334 people is a mine-related amputee. World wide, there are approximately 250,000 landmine amputees. The cost of treatment for such people is prohibitive. A child's prosthetic limb must be replaced every six months, and an adult's every three to five years. Over a 50-year lifespan, that equates to about

[Mr. Campbell]

25 new prostheses. At around $125 each, that means a lifetime cost of well over $3,000. In countries where the monthly per capita income is about $20, that is unaffordable. Most victims face a lifetime on crutches.

The hon. Member for Shettleston referred to the economic cost. Livestock is killed as readily as people; agricultural land is rendered unusable, which leads to malnutrition and starvation; and the development of roads, railways, bridges and other elements of infrastructure is inhibited. It has been estimated that, without landmines, Afghanistan and Cambodia could increase agricultural production by up to 200 per cent.

I understand that the United Kingdom is to double its contribution to the demining effort. Our present level of support for that is of the order of £10 million a year; £20 million a year is clearly progress, but when we consider that Canada provides £45 million, Japan £50 million and Norway £75 million, it seems that we could try to be a little more generous.

I come to the Government's attitude on whether the laying of landmines should be a war crime. I agree that that is an issue, and would not readily leap to the position, as some have, of suggesting that the Government are behaving inappropriately or unreasonably in questioning the issue, which is clearly one of some importance. I hope that the Government will soon be able to tell us their thinking on the matter.

I have some reservations about the notion of extending the category of war crime on what is almost a request basis. War crimes are special and terrible crimes, and should be dealt with in a specific and serious manner. If we make every activity of which we disapprove a war crime, the consequence may be to reduce the significance of war crimes and the special way in which they should be dealt with.

As I said, I have some reservations about clause 5, which I hope to explore in due course. However, I have no doubt about the need for the United Kingdom to ratify the treaty. I have no doubt also that it is essential that the Bill should today pass through all its stages in our House.

10.30 am

Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): I am very proud that a Labour Government are acting so swiftly to rid the world of landmines. Years before the Ottawa convention, people in the Labour party were always in the front-line of the battle to get rid of landmines. It is not a new issue for us. Even before it was party policy, many Labour Members who are today in the Chamber were fighting hard to rid the world of those horrible weapons. I started taking a special interest in the subject when I went to Cambodia, in 1987, and saw for myself the victims of landmines planted there.

I noted with interest the shadow Foreign Secretary's quibbling about various of the Bill's provisions, which he thinks do not quite hold together. It was interesting also that he did not mention one of the Ottawa's convention's most important flaws—that only a quarter of the world's states have signed up to it. The fact that three quarters of countries have not signed up to the convention is one of the biggest flaws in the whole process. I hope that, now that the United Kingdom is to ratify the convention, we will encourage many Commonwealth members also to ratify it.

Mr. Howard: I assure the hon. Lady that I share her concerns on that point. I mentioned those concerns in my speech.

Ann Clwyd: I should like to take as an example Cambodia, with which I have been very involved over the years. It has 41,000 landmine victims—the highest ratio of mine amputees to population in the entire world. An estimated 5 million to 7 million mines were planted in Cambodia, which is about the same size as Britain.

Although I am sorry to introduce this note into the debate, I think that we should examine the history. In the 1980s, to our eternal shame, the United Kingdom Government were partly responsible for training the non-communist resistance in Cambodia—which included the Khmer Rouge—to lay landmines. We should not forget that, between 1983 and 1987, Britain's forces assisted in showing those forces how to maim innocent men, women and children. We therefore have a special responsibility in investing more money in demining, and also in leading the world in banning landmine use.

Ms Tess Kingham (Gloucester): Does my hon. Friend agree that the previous Government's policy was not as stated by the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), who said that it was very similar to the current Government's policy? For several years, I worked on a landmines campaign with a non-governmental organisation—Oxfam—and remember very distinctly that the previous Government's policy was very much one of trying to ban the export rather than the production and stockpiling of landmines. Neither was their policy one of trying to ban the training or paraphernalia associated with landmine use. The previous Government's landmine policy was neither in line with the current Government's actions nor something on which they should be congratulated.

Ann Clwyd: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend, who gained considerable experience when she worked with an aid agency on those very matters.

In 1989, I saw for myself the children, women and men who were injured by landmines in Cambodia. Some of them were begging pathetically in the dirty streets of Phnom Penh; others hobbled on one limb in dusty lanes in villages.

Some years later, a young Cambodian man called Tun Channareth, who was a civilian, spoke movingly at a London press conference—at which I am sure some of my hon. Friends were present. He spoke of the threat to his own people posed by the legacy of landmines in Cambodia left in the 1980s and before. He did not stand up to speak, as both his legs had been blown off by a landmine some years before. He said:

> "Cambodia has no factories producing landmines, yet my country is full of them. How many more people have to lose limbs or their lives before the world wakes up to the need to ban landmines? I beg you again to ban these mines."

Whether a device was "dumb" or "smart" would have been completely irrelevant to Tun Channareth, as it would to the many hundreds of thousands of other landmine amputees in the world's former battle zones. As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said, landmines are grotesque weapons. In all those countries, innocent victims—often small children—and not the military are principally the ones who are hurt by landmines.

Many hon. Members have mentioned Lord Deedes, and I am pleased to do the same. He said:

"I take the view that anti-personnel mines are a crime against humanity, which civilised nations should not touch with a barge pole."

John Pilger, in his book "Distant Voices", described some of the landmine victims he met:

"They are usually civilians, such as 23 year old Rong, a beautiful young woman lying in the hospital at Kompang Spen with her 3 year old infant beside her. When she stepped on a mine she fell into water and lay for three hours bleeding. When her father found her, he applied a tourniquet, carried her to the road and flagged down a motorcycle taxi. He took her to a 1st aid post; it was 7 hours before she got to hospital.

The mine that Rong stepped on had driven dirt and bacteria deep into the wound, causing infection to spread fast. The blood vessels had coagulated, and there was thrombosis high up in her leg. Had she been able to get into hospital quickly, her leg might have been saved.

'I knew there were mines around', she said. 'Every day I was in fear of them. But the work has to be done.'"

Her story is like so many others in countries infested with landmines.

Asia Watch described the after effects of amputation:

"Nearly every aspect of a Cambodian's life is set to the rhythm of rice cultivation—the flooding, the planting, the re-planting and harvesting. It is very labour intensive—and a person who is physically disabled can become a burden.

Female amputees are less desirable as wives because they cannot work in the fields and male amputees are now allowed to become Buddhist monks. Many amputees drift to Phnom Penh and become beggars or petty criminals."

In September 1991, Asia Watch, in its report "Land Mines in Cambodia—the Coward's War", noted that Cambodia has

"the highest percentage of mine amputees of any country—the highest percentage of physically disabled inhabitants of any country in the world . . . for every victim who makes it to hospital another will die in the fields.

These grim statistics mean that the Cambodian war may be the first in history in which landmines have gained more victims than any other weapon."

The Red Cross recently said that landmines are

"fighters that never miss, strike blindly, do not carry weapons openly and go on killing long after hostilities are ended."

In short, mines are the greatest violators of international humanitarian law. They are the most ruthless terrorists.

When Diana, Princess of Wales went to Angola last January, she gave the Red Cross campaign an enormous boost. The pictures of the princess wearing body armour and a helmet with a visor learning how to demine caught the world's attention. While she was in Angola, she was criticised by certain Conservative Members. I have been campaigning against the use of landmines for many years and I have written three reports on the subject. I was so angry that the princess was being criticised for making a humanitarian gesture that I tabled the following early-day motion:

"That this House congratulates Diana, Princess of Wales, for effectively highlighting the tragic humanitarian consequences of Her Majesty's Government's refusal to completely ban the production and use of landmines; and notes with dismay the reported churlish response from Government Ministers on her efforts."

It was signed by 73 right hon. and hon. Members in the previous Parliament.

I sent the princess a copy of the early-day motion and one day I was sitting in my office when I received a telephone call from Kensington palace inviting me to have coffee with her. I spent an hour and a half with her at Kensington palace. She said how pleased she was that so many hon. Members had signed the early-day motion. When I said that she had done more than anyone else to highlight the importance of the landmines issue, she smiled shyly and said, "I will go anywhere if I can do some good." She was self-deprecating as she laughed at herself and said, "Have passport, will travel."

Originally, the princess had wanted to go to Cambodia, but the Foreign Office had told her that it was unsafe. I said that I had been there twice with Oxfam and she said that she was keen to go there as soon as possible. We discussed the role that Britain had played in planting some of the mines in Cambodia and the attitude of various countries towards landmines. She said with some disgust that our ambassador in Angola did not even know what a landmine looked like and that she thought that the briefing she had been given was not very good. I was impressed by her knowledge, intelligence, friendliness and capacity for self-deprecation. We talked about going to northern Iraq and the possibility of her coming to the House to meet hon. Members with a common interest in landmines. Hon. Members will be aware that she made an attempt to come here and talk about landmines, but, because of the attitude of the Conservative party, she cancelled her visit. That was a great pity, and Conservative Members should feel extremely guilty about it.

Finally, many of us who have campaigned for a long time on the issue feel that we are making an important start. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and all his ministerial colleagues who have been so active in achieving agreement on the Ottawa convention and have been at the forefront of the campaign. I hope that they will continue to do so until the scourge of landmines, which has claimed the lives of so many ordinary people throughout the world, is finally eliminated.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): It is always a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd). We agree on a surprising number of issues and I pay tribute to the way in which she highlighted many atrocities throughout the world. Today, she has highlighted the atrocities that landmines indiscriminately inflict on innocent civilians.

The House is united in that none of us likes anti-personnel mines. I would be astonished if anyone did, as it would be rather like saying that one liked the devil. However, when the House is united, logic does not come into play as much as it might. I should like to give something of a soldier's perspective on landmines and the Bill.

I remember sitting in a vehicle in a minefield in the Gulf. Indeed, a successor of mine as company commander in the Coldstream Guards had the wheel of his trailer blown off by an anti-personnel mine. Someone sitting in a minefield is not tempted to get out and walk and if they are in a vehicle they must follow very closely in the tracks of the vehicle in front. It is very unpleasant—it is designed to be.

[Mr. Andrew Robathan]

At least two of the 16 fatalities in the Gulf resulted from anti-personnel mines. They did not involve front-line soldiers but lorry drivers who got out of their lorries and trod on mines. In Bosnia, about six soldiers have been killed by anti-personnel mines.

I have seen the effects elsewhere. I remember seeing a mujaheddin on a pony coming down a pass from the Afghan border. I was with a Swiss doctor from the International Committee of the Red Cross. It was amazing that the victim managed to survive and travel by pony to the nearest hospital, which was about 50 miles away. I hope that he survived when he got there. I visited a refugee camp in Peshawar and saw the poor civilians who had escaped from Afghanistan without limbs. When I was with the Swiss doctor I attended an operation on a landmine victim who had gangrene. It was extremely unpleasant.

In the Falklands, I was the staff officer responsible for the small Royal Engineers detachment that supervises the mines left over from the war of 1982. They gave up clearing the mines in about 1984 because several soldiers had lost their legs. The Falklands are pretty empty and it was thought better to let the mines drift around in the peat and sand rather than risk people's lives by clearing them—and that is quite right. A device has been developed that I think is called the Red Eye. It is a little wheelbarrow-type machine that is operated by remote control and burns the plastic mines that are undetectable with mine detectors. They go puff as the explosive burns. Some areas in the Falkland islands will be closed for ever unless they have to be cleared because we have ratified the convention.

In the Army, I was trained in the tactical use of anti-personnel mines. It is important for the House to understand why many soldiers value them. Quite simply, they protect the forces. Most armies use them only in defensive positions, when they are extremely useful, especially when they are outnumbered. We have heard about the the Americans in Korea. If the Soviet hordes had crossed the inner German border we would have used anti-personnel mines extensively. They are a valued weapon and, until now, they have always been considered legitimate. The British doctrine is always to cover obstacles such as anti-personnel mines; otherwise, someone can quite easily breach them. They have been part of our defensive armoury and our tactics. The Secretary of State for Defence may say that senior Army officers now say that they can survive quite happily without them, but, if there were to be another major conflict, we might feel the lack of them.

Landmines certainly have drawbacks from a military point of view. They deny the ground not only to the enemy but to one's own troops. If they get thrown off a position, they can end up stuck in their own minefield, which is pretty unpleasant. Furthermore, landmines are not failsafe. In 1945, in the dash to Berlin, the Soviet Union marched its penal battalions in front of its other troops and I believe that it lost 10,000 people to landmines in the month before reaching Berlin.

I have also seen the inner German border and the Berlin wall before the iron curtain was lifted. It was covered with landmines—not to keep us out, but to keep people who did not like socialism in. We should remember that.

We have heard about the problem, so I will not dwell on it, but it is not a British problem, notwithstanding what the hon. Member for Cynon Valley said. The problem is the indiscriminate use of landmines. The United Kingdom has not exported landmines since 1982. They do not threaten civilians in Angola and elsewhere if they are sitting in a bunker somewhere in Aldershot. No British anti-personnel mines are sitting in the ground threatening civilians anywhere.

The hon. and learned Member who spoke for the Liberals referred to landmines in the Sahara. I think that they are all anti-tank mines, although I may be wrong. They are certainly metal mines. Furthermore, British troops have been taught, as I was, to mark minefields. That is part of international law. We want to clear them because we want the land back if we are in a defensive position.

The Halo Trust has been mentioned by several hon. Members. One should remember that it was formed by a former Conservative Member of Parliament, Colin Mitchell.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: I mentioned him.

Mr. Robathan: The hon. and learned Gentleman did not mention his party. I once had an interview with Colin Mitchell about going out to Kabul to work for the Halo Trust, where it has done immensely good work. I have many friends who have worked for it. However, we should be under no doubt that the Halo Trust—I have spoken to it—has never found one British anti-personnel mine in its clearing of hundreds of thousands. It may have missed them, but not one has been found.

As hon. Members may know, in the Afghan conflict the Soviet Union went up and down the border with Pakistan to stop the mujaheddin getting in. It threw out from helicopters between 4 million and 5 million butterfly mines, which arm as they go down. They are all plastic, so they cannot be found. They look rather pretty, so children like them. Not many can have been cleared, so 4 million to 5 million must be left. I should point out that it is not possible to mark a minefield from a helicopter.

In Cambodia, Bosnia and Angola, millions of mines have been laid indiscriminately. The vast majority come from Russia, the former eastern bloc and China. Russia and China are not ratifying the convention. Furthermore, many landmines, especially in Bosnia, are home made, as hon. Members may have seen. One can make landmines in a workshop in the garden or in the kitchen. All that is needed is a string, a trigger, a box and a bit of plastic explosive.

Laying landmines is a favourite tactic of what some people call freedom fighters. The Viet Cong specialised in the use of booby traps, as does the IRA. I have had friends killed by home-made anti-personnel devices in Northern Ireland. So how will the Bill enforce the ban in, for example, Northern Ireland? I would love to see IRA criminals put on war crimes trials, but the House has just passed a measure that will let people convicted of such crimes out of prison within the next couple of years. We should look at that dichotomy.

Mr. Skinner: Well, the hon. Gentleman voted for it.

Mr. Robathan: The hon. Gentleman, voluble as always, bangs on saying that I voted for it. I did not.

Mr. Skinner: Everyone did.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Robathan: So what is the point of the Bill? Is it to set a good example? We are all for that, but who will follow our example? Not, I suspect, UNITA or the Khmer Rouge, if it still exists, or the Taliban or the IRA. So what are we doing in the Bill? In my opinion, we shall be withdrawing a legitimate means of protecting our soldiers, who, to my knowledge, have not misused anti-personnel mines within my lifetime in the United Kingdom. [Interruption.] We hear a lot of barracking from the Labour Benches, but three quarters of countries do not consider that the Bill is a sensible move because they have not ratified the convention. If everyone ratified the convention, it would be marvellous, but many other countries are not considering doing so at the moment. Perhaps they will, following our example.

I fear that we may expose our public servants to danger. In every defence debate, Labour Members extol our public servants in the armed forces and say how well they work for us. One day, our public servants may value anti-personnel mines to protect them.

Mr. George Robertson: The hon. Gentleman raises from his military experience some interesting points. Clearly this is a matter of great relevance to the armed forces. How does he react to the fact that the shadow Secretary of State for Defence has not even bothered to turn up today?

Mr. Robathan: My hon. Friend must speak for himself, but I can only assume that he has a long-standing constituency engagement that he was unable to break. The Secretary of State will note that the House is not packed on either side. Out of 400-odd Labour Members, only about 20 are present, so the Secretary of State's argument is not particularly good.

I should say to the Secretary of State, as he intervened, that I just hope that there is never an occasion on which British soldiers are left exposed and die because they do not have anti-personnel mines in their armoury. Only on Wednesday, the Secretary of State made a very good riposte to one of his hon. Friends who argued that Britain should ban nuclear weapons to set a good example. He said that it was fine to set good examples, but not much good following them. It seems to me that that argument could be used in this debate.

Hon. Members may have read a letter from the director of the Halo Trust in The Daily Telegraph. He said that it was marvellous that anti-personnel mines might be banned. He said that there were conferences here, there and everywhere, but he wished that, instead of spending money on air tickets, people would spend it on mine clearance. I pay tribute to the Government for increasing the amount of money that is being spent on clearance. Money is the core of the problem.

I am not against the Bill, but some things need to be aired. We need to look at the matter from all angles. It is worrying when the House is united. If there is not discussion of all the arguments, we sometimes pass extraordinary measures. In my limited experience of six years, I have seen one or two, and I know that others who have been here longer have seen one or two others. The Child Support Agency floats immediately to the top of the pile.

The problem that the world faces is clearing the mines. The hon. and learned Member for Invernesshire—

Mr. Menzies Campbell: North-East Fife. Inverness is about two hundred miles away.

Mr. Robathan: Geography was never my strong point. The hon. and learned Gentleman said that 20 mines were laid for every mine that was cleared. Yes, we have to stop mines being laid, but we have to do more clearance.

I do not believe that the Bill will help civilians throughout the world who are being killed. I do not believe that it will encourage China, Russia or others whose mines are being used to stop producing them. I would welcome a world without landmines and nuclear weapons, but I am not entirely sure that the Bill will further that aim.

10.57 am

Mr. Howard: With the leave of the House, I should like simply to say how sorry I am that we have not had time for more Second Reading speeches from the Back Benches. We have had two notable speeches—from the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) and from my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan)—and it is a shame that there was not time for more. I make it plain again that the official Opposition support the spirit of the Ottawa convention and will not obstruct the passage of the Bill, but we will continue to explore, during the Committee stage, the inconsistency between the Bill and the convention.

Mr. Robin Cook: With the leave of the House, I shall reply briefly to the debate. To respond to the point that the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) has just made, I am sure that, in the remaining three and a half hours, there will be adequate time for the three Conservative Back Benchers in the Chamber to speak.

Perhaps I may respond to the questions that the right hon. and learned Gentleman asked in his opening speech to which I have not already responded in our exchanges. It is the case that the Ottawa convention and therefore the Bill bans all anti-personnel mines, whether or not they are associated with anti-tank mines. The JP233 and the Gator mine are caught by the Ottawa convention.

The hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) touched on the serious problems of lifting mines that we face in the Falklands. Work was suspended because it was judged that the casualties were too high for the game. Nevertheless, we are seeking a feasibility study on how we can proceed with the best available technology to lift those mines.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey): Will the Secretary of State give way?

Mr. Cook: If the hon. Gentleman will forgive me, we have an agreement to finish by four minutes past 11, and I have a few points to make.

[Mr. Cook]

The right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe asked about the cost of destroying our stockpile. The Government, as a matter of policy, are carrying that out in any case, so it is not a cost that arises directly from the Bill. However, for the record, the cost of destroying Britain's stockpile of landmines will be some £5 million. I hope that that helps to answer the right hon. and learned Gentleman's question. I could of course say that if he had accepted our offer of a technical briefing yesterday, some of his questions could have been answered then.

The House has already heard extensive arguments about clause 5, but what I have listened to leads me to expect that it is about to hear them again. The only point that I now make in response to that debate is that several hon. Members have rightly mentioned the extreme courage and dedication shown by members of the British Army when they carry out operations to lift landmines. I do not think that we can praise them for showing that courage and dedication and then leave them in any doubt about whether they may be liable for a prison sentence, not because they have deployed landmines but because they have taken part in an exercise in which someone else has deployed landmines. The least that we owe to those whom we ask to put their lives at risk is that we will not put their liberty at risk.

Mr. Colvin: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Cook: Very briefly.

Mr. Colvin: If a British soldier comes before a court for being in breach of the convention, will it be a civil court, a criminal court, a court martial or an international court?

Mr. Cook: I am advised by my right hon. and hon. Friends that in the event of British soldiers being brought to trial for any offence under the statute, there would be a court martial.

A number of hon. Members have taken part in the debate, but I cannot say with immense confidence that every one them supported the Bill; I have reservations about making such an assertion simply because I was not quite clear on which side the hon. Member for Blaby came down at the end of his speech. I hope that the hon. Gentleman managed to persuade himself to support the Bill.

The others who took part in the debate fully and strongly supported the Bill. I entirely accept the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) about the fact that the most urgent priority now is to widen the signatories and those who have ratified the Ottawa convention so that it embraces not only the 126 countries that have already signed but the remaining countries, especially those who are large producers and exporters of landmines.

I agreed with many of the points made by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell). Among other things, he asked whether the laying of landmines should be included as a war crime within the scope of the international criminal court. I understand why some people argue for that. In principle, it would not necessarily cause Britain great problems—but Britain is also one of the leading advocates of the international criminal court and is in the front rank of those trying to secure progress towards that court at the current conference in Rome. I do not think that it would be helpful in persuading other countries, especially America, to sign up to the international criminal court if we wrapped that up with this controversy too.

Mr. Menzies Campbell rose—

Mr. Cook: I shall give way to the hon. and learned Gentleman on this occasion, as I have mentioned him, but this must be the last time I give way.

Mr. Campbell: I am most grateful to the Secretary of State for responding so positively to my point. In the same context, may I say that I support and greatly admire the robust stance that the Government are taking with regard to the independence of the prosecutor for an international criminal court?

Mr. Cook: I am glad that I gave way to the hon. and learned Gentleman so that he could put that point on the record.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) spoke eloquently and movingly, and rightly drew attention to the immense contribution made on this issue, and to the campaigns associated with it, by Diana, Princess of Wales. Like my hon. Friend, I wish that Princess Diana's bold statements had been as welcome on both sides of the House while she was alive, and not only when she died.

We can all be proud of Britain's record on this issue. In one year, we have halved our stockpile of landmines and doubled the contribution that we make to lifting landmines throughout the world. Britain played a leading part in the negotiations on the Ottawa convention: we signed it on the first day it was open for signature and we now have the opportunity to be among the first 40 countries to bring it into legal force. The way to do that is to give the Bill a Second Reading and to complete its remaining stages today. I commend that task to the House.

Clause 1

MINES AND COMPONENTS TO WHICH ACT APPLIES

Question proposed, That the clause stand part of the Bill.

11.4 am

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): As we have now moved into Committee, we shall have some opportunity to scrutinise the Bill more closely, although, in the restricted time available, it may not be possible to explore exhaustively matters that deserve detailed attention. Indeed, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) has expressed the wish, which I endorse, that those matters be pursued in greater depth in another place—not least because of the significance of what we are doing today, not only to those who have campaigned so vigorously for the abolition of anti-personnel mines, but for our own forces, who rely on weapons to preserve both life and liberty.

It would not be a fitting tribute to those campaigners, including Diana, Princess of Wales, if we produced poor legislation in an attempt, however well intentioned, to rush the Bill through.

Mr. Colvin: If ever there was a case for a pre-legislative hearing, this Bill presents one. As a member of the Defence Select Committee, I regret that that Committee did not have time to examine the minutiae—although I take the opportunity to congratulate the Library on the speed with which it managed to produce a briefing note on the subject. With a measure such as this, where there is a conflict between the heart and the head, it is vital to consider the military implications, so I regret the fact that the Defence Select Committee did not have the opportunity to consider the matter before the Bill was brought forward.

Mrs. Gillan: My hon. Friend's remarks speak for themselves, and I support what he said about the Library. I hope that when I raise issues under clause 1, the Minister will not tell me that things would be better if I had attended the briefing session. Like many other hon. Members on both sides of the House, I believe that it is important for such matters to be discussed as a matter of record, in the open, rather than dealt with behind closed doors.

The Minister will appreciate the fact that we have not tabled amendments to the clause, but in the stand part debate I hope to give him the opportunity to explore a little of the thinking behind the definitions in the clause and to clarify what is included within the parameters of the legislation. It is important to everyone who is closely observing the passage of the Bill that we establish beyond doubt what is covered and what is not. That need has been illustrated by some of the discussions on Second Reading.

The definitions in the clause draw on the definitions in article 2 of the Ottawa convention, but they are not identical, and go beyond the convention. Will the Minister tell us why he considered it necessary to improve on the provisions of the convention, and whether these improvements are likely to be incorporated by other signatories to the convention?

I understand that the Government are not proceeding with the future anti-personnel scatterable mine project; I should be grateful if the Minister would confirm that that is the case. However, given that the Government are supposed to be procuring 29 vehicle-launched scatterable anti-tank mine systems known as Shielder, manufactured by Alliant Techsystems, will the Minister first confirm that procurement, and secondly, clarify the status of those systems in relation to the Bill?

The variety of scatterable mines produced by Alliant Techsystems is comprehensive, and includes those used in the Gator system, which has already been referred to, the m128 vehicle-towed mine dispenser—the GEMSS system—the Volcano multiple delivery system and several others. Those mines contain similar fusing, arming and functioning mechanisms and have interchangeable and compatible components. They all belong to the family of scatterable mines or FASCAM.

The same company that produces those mines also produces the Shielder mine, and the technology is obviously similar. Can the Minister confirm the status of the Shielder mines under the Bill, and tell me whether any components could fall foul of the provisions, or whether he is satisfied that nothing in the Bill prohibits the use of those mines? Can the Minister further clarify the issue and say whether an anti-disturbance fuse will be fitted to those mines? If an anti-handling device is fitted, surely that achieves the effect of turning the device into an anti-personnel mine? An explanation would assist me, the House and those who have raised the matter with me.

Command-detonated mines such as the M18A1 Claymore mine are currently exempt from the landmine ban, as they are command-detonated by electrical means. However, I understand that the Army, under ministerial clearance, could fit those mines with trip-wire booby trap switches. That could be authorised at a time of war by Government and almost any booby trap switch could be fitted to those mines.

Can the Minister tell me how he perceives the Claymore mines and whether he intends to alter the discretionary ministerial powers in any way, or to retain them for the sake of the efficacy of our armed services? In other words, can he confirm that nothing in the Bill will prevent a Minister from authorising the conversion of those mines into anti-personnel mines?

I do not want to detain the House, but it would be helpful to observers if the Minister could answer those questions. Perhaps he would also consider producing for the House a list of mines currently held in the United Kingdom or in the process of being procured, and identify whether they are banned by the legislation or excluded and, if the latter, the reason for that exclusion. That would go some way towards clarifying the definitions in clause 1.

I add my support for the Bill to the support of my right hon. and hon. Friends, but I hope that the Minister will amplify those points, which will help with the interpretation of the Bill.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tony Lloyd): I was a little surprised at the mean-spirited way in which the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) introduced her remarks. In view of the consensus on the need to introduce the Bill, it is a shame that an offer to brief the shadow Foreign and Defence Secretaries and their teams should be treated as an attempt to lull the Opposition into a false sense of security.

Mrs. Gillan: My voice is failing, as I have a very sore throat, but I have never been called mean-spirited from the Dispatch Box in the House of Commons. I was being extremely open. I welcome the provisions of the Bill, but, like every observer of the Bill, including Labour Members, I believe that the details deserve proper and open discussion in the forum of the House. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will withdraw his remark, as I am not being mean-spirited in any sense.

The First Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. My concern is that the Committee should concentrate on clause 1.

Mr. Lloyd: Urged by you to make haste, Mr. Martin, I shall pass beyond the hon. Lady's exhortations.

Matters of definition are of the utmost importance, and there is an explicit distinction in the Ottawa convention between anti-personnel landmines and anti-tank mines. That is also clear in the Government's approach.

Some of the hon. Lady's questions about definition could properly have been answered at the technical briefing. It is equally proper to raise technical questions on the Floor of the House. There is no contradiction, as I hope the House will accept.

The Shielder system is not caught by the provisions of the treaty or of our own legislation, so it is effectively exempt. Inevitably, component parts would also be exempt under the Bill, as they would be components not of an anti-personnel landmine, but of an anti-tank mine. I hope that provides the reassurance that the hon. Lady seeks.

11.15 am

The United Kingdom does not have, and will not acquire, the Gator system. The Gator system is not part of the Shielder system, so the question does not arise whether Gator is a component part and whether it is legal under the Bill.

Mr. Colvin: That illustrates the problems that the House faces. The Shielder system may be designed to blow up vehicles, but in practice it will blow up people. It has a highly sensitive magnetic fuse, which can easily be set off by a person walking close to it. If the Government are to spend £62 million buying those weapons, we should be clear that they will not suddenly be deemed to be illegal under the convention.

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman is technically wrong. Anti-handling devices—anti-tamper devices—are not operable in the same way as an anti-personnel landmine, by simple contact. Significantly more than that is required. It is not the sensitive device that the hon. Gentleman describes, but a much more robust system, which gives a different type of protection. It is important for the House to understand that there is not just a clear conceptual distinction, but a clear practical difference between the two. For those reasons, anti-handling devices on anti-tank mines do not fall within the remit of the Bill or the Ottawa convention.

I am happy to give way to the hon. Lady if I have not responded to all her questions, but I hope that I have demonstrated that technical queries can be fully answered on the Floor of the House. There is no reason to suggest that we are making slow progress, although we may be about to enter such a phase.

Mr. Robert Key (Salisbury): One of the reasons why we are anxious to take the matter on the Floor of the House is that many technical experts who are involved in charities, such as the Mines Advisory Group, have asked the Ministry of Defence for technical details of the fusing mechanisms, to ascertain whether an anti-disturbance fuse is fitted, and that information has been denied to them on the ground that it is classified.

Mr. Lloyd: I hope that the hon. Gentleman is not suggesting that we should make classified information available. Consistent with the need to protect our defence systems, the Ministry of Defence will make technical information available to the various interest groups, and has already done so.

Mr. Lloyd: My right hon. Friend confirms that, so there can be no suggestion of an attempt to obstruct the progress of the Bill or to stifle national debate by failing to provide such information.

Mr. Colvin: The Ministry of Defence makes classified material available to the Defence Select Committee, which reinforces the argument for a pre-legislative inquiry into the matter. When the measure reaches the other place, I hope that a Select Committee will take evidence from experts—particularly regarding the military matters mentioned in the discussion—rather than plunging headlong into debates on the Floor of the Chamber without the necessary technical back-up.

Mr. Lloyd: I have sought confirmation from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence who, like all members of the Cabinet, is more than willing to attend meetings of the various Select Committees. Hon. Members may recall that that was a matter of debate across the House when my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear the pleasure that he derives from appearing before Select Committees. The Secretary of State for Defence is happy to make information available to the Select Committee, but he informs me that no such invitation has been received.

We are now many months into the debate on anti-personnel landmines. It is not a new issue, and the types of systems that we are discussing this morning are not new. These technical questions could have been asked, but they were not. My right hon. Friend the Defence Secretary offered to give precisely that sort of technical briefing to the Opposition. That would have been a sensible way to proceed, but I record once again the fact that that invitation was not accepted.

Mrs. Gillan: Will the Minister confirm that he is now offering to provide an answer to my question about the anti-disturbance fuse on the Shielder mines and will give such information to the Select Committee? The Mines Advisory Group has not received a reply to that question, and the Minister has not clarified the issue in his remarks this morning.

Mr. Lloyd: I have answered the hon. Lady already. However, for the sake of simplicity and so that there is no misunderstanding on her part, I shall try again.

The Shielder system will not detonate if merely touched inadvertently. That information is available to the Committee this morning. My right hon. and hon. Friends in the Ministry of Defence sent two long letters about that issue to precisely the sort of groups that the hon. Lady claims have not received any answers. The information is already in the public domain, but I shall put it on the record again this morning. Far from the Government's attempting to hide information from the Committee or the public, there has been a remarkable lack of interest on the part of Opposition Members regarding those technical questions. Nevertheless, we are happy to have spent 11 minutes answering the full range of technical questions posed by Opposition Members.

Mrs. Gillan: I cannot believe that the Minister has sat down; I fully expected him to speak for longer. He has singularly failed to answer my questions. He has not even mentioned Claymore mines or booby traps, and he has not responded to my request as to whether a list could be produced in order to clarify the situation for outside organisations. It is one of the most unsatisfactory responses that I have received from a Minister at the Dispatch Box. The Minister has failed to brief himself about this issue. He has been taking copious verbal briefings from his colleagues on the Front Bench, and the record will show that he has failed to answer the questions posed very reasonably from this side of the Chamber.

I am seeking information, not just for myself and the Committee, but for observers outside who will be disappointed by the Minister's reply. I shall give the Minister an opportunity to study my remarks and to write to me before the Bill reaches the other place.

Mr. MacShane: Mean-spirited.

Mrs. Gillan: I am not being mean-spirited; it is not in my nature. However, those matters must be answered fully and I hope that the Minister will write to me. He may not be fully briefed in these areas and the matters are technical and complex, as my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey (Mr. Colvin) pointed out. However, we owe the observers of these proceedings the details that I have requested.

On 9 July, the Mines Advisory Group wrote to the shadow Secretary of State for Defence, my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples), and said:

"MAG has asked the MOD for technical details of the fusing mechanism to ascertain whether an Anti-Disturbance fuse is fitted. This has been denied to us under the title of 'classified information'. We have assurances that no Anti-Personnel mines will be procured with the new Shielder System but an Anti-Handling device will achieve that effect anyway."

[Mrs. Gillan]

I am only as good as the briefings that I get, but that is pretty unambiguous. I hope that the Minister will address that issue in a letter to me, as he could not do so verbally on the Floor of the Chamber.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Some moments ago, I invited the hon. Lady to intervene if she believed that I had not answered her questions. As she did not take up my offer at the time, I was rather surprised when she rose to say that I had not answered her questions.

It is important to establish several points exactly. The Defence Select Committee sent a list of detailed questions to the Ministry of Defence, and it received proper answers. The Mines Advisory Group received two long and detailed replies from the Ministry of Defence in answer to its questions. As the hon. Lady said, she is only as good as the briefings that she receives. However, if she had accepted the briefing offered by my hon. Friends, she would have received the information that is already in the public domain and which was provided to the Mines Advisory Group.

The Claymore system—this seems to be the last of the hon. Lady's preoccupations—is exempt because it is a command control system, and therefore is not detonated by physical contact. I shall undertake to examine the record and, if any questions have not been answered, I shall almost certainly write to the hon. Lady well before proceedings in another place. If the hon. Lady prefers to put down parliamentary questions, I or my hon. Friends will ensure that the information is available. The hon. Lady seems to be preoccupied with the private briefing that she has already rejected, but most of the information is already in the public domain.

Mr. Colvin: I have a certain sympathy with the Minister, and I direct this question to him and the Foreign Secretary. Is it not about time that arms control matters were handled by the Ministry of Defence rather than by the Foreign Office, because the Minister is receiving all his answers this morning from the Secretary of State for Defence?

Mr. Lloyd: That is a quite astonishing proposition for several reasons.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. That matter is far too wide of the clause that we are considering.

Mr. Lloyd: I shall not explain my astonishment, but it may assist the Committee if I were to assure hon. Members that Ministers in the Defence team will participate in the Committee's proceedings. I assure hon. Members that they have been closely involved in the deliberations in the run-up to Britain's acceptance of the Ottawa convention and in the detailed work that has been done since then. The idea that the Foreign Office and the Ministry of Defence should work separately on such issues would command little support elsewhere. With that, I trust that I have answered the questions. It has taken a little longer than I originally suggested. It has now taken about 18 minutes to answer the Opposition's detailed questions on all the technical aspects of these matters. I think that that shows that the detailed examination of the Bill that they want has now been achieved.

Mrs. Gillan: What about the matter of ministerial clearance for booby trapping the mines that I raised?

Mr. Lloyd: I have already undertaken to ensure that all outstanding matters will be answered either by myself or by Defence Ministers. Those answers can be placed in the public domain. That is a perfectly reasonable answer to the hon. Lady, to the House of Commons and to the wider world. I trust that with that we can now make progress.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 2

PROHIBITED CONDUCT

11.30 am

Mr. Howard: I beg to move amendment No. 6, in page 2, line 8, leave out 'to' and insert ', 4 and'.

The First Deputy Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following: Amendment No. 3, in clause 5, page 4, line 31, leave out from 'to' to 'the' in line 32 and insert

'active assistance in any activity prohibited under'.

Amendment No. 4, in page 4, line 37, leave out

'was not the laying of an anti-personnel mine'

'did not involve active assistance in any activity prohibited under the Ottawa Convention'.

Amendment No. 5, in page 5, line 7, leave out from 'Convention' to end of line 8.

Mr. Howard: I shall begin by disposing of one of the red herrings which the Foreign Secretary, who I am sorry to say has left us, attempted to put into our path during our earlier discussions. It is an instructive red herring. The right hon. Gentleman sought to imply that clause 5 was in some way associated with the ability of British service men to undertake operations that would have the effect of destroying, clearing or dismantling landmines. Clause 5 has absolutely nothing to do with that. There is a separate exemption in the Bill for those operations, which is to be found in clause 4. We have absolutely no problem with clause 4. Indeed, that clause matches and mirrors article 3 of the Ottawa convention. That is precisely what one would expect to find in this legislation—a match between the provisions of the Bill and the provisions of the convention.

The trouble with clause 5 is that it is not matched or mirrored in any way by anything in the convention. I shall make it clear for the avoidance of any doubt that the amendment, together with amendment No. 3 to clause 5, has been tabled so that we can debate the hole at the heart of the legislation. We do not say that there is no military argument to justify the exemption from the provisions of the convention that clause 5 seeks to provide. It may be interesting and illustrative that the impression I gain from those on the Government Front Bench is that the debate will be replied to by a Defence Minister and not a Foreign Office Minister.

We say, and our charge is, that it has always been the practice of Her Majesty's Government to honour the provisions of treaties and conventions that they have signed. We say that if the Government now find compelling the military arguments that we shall no doubt hear from the Secretary of State for Defence or the Minister for the Armed Forces, which have led them to insert clause 5, they should have found them compelling when they came to sign up to the convention in December 1997. It is the contradictions between the convention and the Bill's provisions on which we seek to focus attention, and they are the thrust of the debate.

On Second Reading, I read out the provisions of the convention. I do not intend to read out article 1.1 again. The effect of article 1.1 is absolutely clear, unequivocal and explicit. It permits no assistance to be given to any party that is not a signatory to the convention when the forces of that country are taking part in activities that are prohibited by the convention. According to article 1.1, if troops of Britain find themselves together in military operations with troops of the United States or of Turkey—a fellow member of NATO—or any other country that is not a signatory to the convention, they are not permitted to assist those forces in the activities that are prohibited by the convention—that is, anything to do with the laying of landmines. That is what the convention provides.

Clause 5 seeks to permit certain activities that would otherwise constitute an offence. In other words, it purports to permit activities that are contrary to the convention. Let us consider the relevant provisions in clause 5. The relevant part of the clause is subsection (2), which reads:

"In proceedings for a section 2 offence in respect of any conduct"— that is, any conduct that would otherwise be prohibited by this legislation—

"it is a defence for the accused to prove that . . . the conduct was in the course of, or for the purposes of, a military operation or the planning of a military operation".

We have no problem with that. The subsection continues by providing that "the conduct was not the laying of an anti-personnel mine".

That is the only specific conduct that is prohibited by the clause. The subsection continues by providing that "at the time of the conduct he believed, on reasonable grounds, that the operation was or would be an operation to which this section applies; and he did not suspect, and had no grounds for suspecting, that the conduct related to the laying of anti-personnel mines in contravention of the Ottawa convention."

That is what subsection (2) states. It is made clear elsewhere in the clause that if the activity is by forces of a country that is not a signatory to the convention, according to the Bill, that is not activity in contravention of the convention.

What does all that mean? It means that a range of activity expressly prohibited under the Ottawa convention is permitted under the terms of the Bill. It means that if British forces were engaged in joint operations with a non-signatory state such as the United States, clause 5 would enable British service men to procure a landmine, to transfer it to the battlefield, to transport it to the precise spot where they thought that it should be laid and to point to that very spot before handing the object over to the Americans and asking them to place the object in the ground. British forces could then modify or adapt the landmine. They could even prime it. That is what clause 5 would permit. The only activity that is prohibited in the course of those joint operations by clause 5 is the actual laying of the landmine itself, which is identified in clause 5(2).

There may be military justification to permit such activities. However, it is absolutely clear that those acts would be in complete contravention of article 1 of the Ottawa convention. It is—[Interruption.] From a sedentary position, the Secretary of State for Defence talks about rules of engagement. That is completely beside the point. We are talking not about rules of engagement but about legislation. It may well be that the Government will issue rules of engagement that will prohibit the activities to which I have referred. The point is that the legislation before us would permit them to make entirely different rules of engagement. It is no answer to my argument that the Government intend to make rules of engagement that have a different effect. We must consider the legislation that is before the House of Commons, and that legislation would enable all the activities to which I have referred to take place.

It is no use Ministers saying either that they will not permit those activities according to rules of engagement or that there is a powerful military justification for those activities. If that is the case, they should have thought of that military justification when the convention was negotiated and should, if they felt it necessary, have put forward amendments to the convention. I hope that we shall be told during the debate whether the Government sought to table any amendments to the convention to give effect to clause 5, which would permit activity that is completely in breach of the convention.

The Minister for the Armed Forces (Dr. John Reid): British forces throughout the world will be listening with great interest to what the right hon. and learned Gentleman is saying. The rules of engagement, which this or any other Government would lay down, do not force soldiers to do anything; they permit. The right hon. and learned Gentleman is implying that, despite the Government's signing the convention, passing the Bill and laying down rules of engagement, the honour of British forces would be impugned by activities in which they would be willing to engage in breach of all those things. That is a scurrilous and disgraceful implication and I hope that he withdraws it immediately.

Mr. Howard: That is a disgraceful intervention. It is the honour of the Government that is at stake, not the honour of British forces. I would never do anything to impugn the honour of British forces.

Dr. Reid: It is a disgraceful allegation—[Interruption.]

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Hon. Members must calm down. We have the ability to debate these matters in a reasonable manner. I cannot allow arguments across the Floor of the Committee.

Mr. Howard: The Minister's intervention shows how little he understands about the Bill's provisions. We are concerned about the legislation.

[Mr. Howard]

If the Government say that they would never issue rules of engagement that would take advantage of clause 5, why is it in the Bill? Why on earth do the provisions in the Bill not match what the Government say they will set out in the rules of engagement? The Government cannot have it all ways. They must match the provisions of the Bill to those of the convention.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: If the Bill is passed unamended, what would be the nature of the instrument of ratification lodged by the British Government in respect of the convention? Would that instrument of ratification have to contain some reservation or condition in the light of clause 5?

Mr. Howard: The hon. and learned Gentleman makes an excellent point. I intended to raise it later in my remarks, but I am content to adopt it because I do not want to prolong my speech. It is a pertinent question and I hope that it will be answered during the debate.

I remind the Committee of the provisions of article 9 of the convention, which states:

"Each State Party shall take all appropriate legal, administrative and other measures, including the imposition of penal sanctions, to prevent and suppress any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention undertaken by persons or on territory under its jurisdiction or control."

I assume that the Bill is the means by which the Government seek to give effect to article 9. It is the way in which the Government seek to prohibit by British forces activity that is prohibited by the convention. That is why the Government are in breach of their duties under the convention and are putting before the House legislation that is at variance with the terms of the convention.

When did the Government first become aware of the arguments that led them to insert clause 5? Was the Ministry of Defence consulted before the Government signed the convention? Did not the Ministry of Defence then make clear its reservations about joint operations with countries that did not sign the convention? Were those reservations simply ignored by the Foreign Office when it came to negotiate the convention, or did it try to amend the convention to reflect the concerns of the Ministry of Defence? Did it fail? Those questions lie at the heart of the inconsistency with which the Government are approaching the matter, and we must have answers to them.

It is a matter of deep regret that the Attorney-General is no longer with us—

Mr. George Robertson: Where is the shadow Attorney-General?

Mr. Howard: The shadow Attorney-General is undertaking a series of long-standing engagements today. His deputy is in the House and will actively participate in our scrutiny of the Bill.

Let us get down to the issues that really matter. The Attorney-General intervened earlier in the debate, but in a most general and unhelpful way. He expressed himself in agreement with a proposition put by the Foreign Secretary, but did so in the most general terms and did not approach the detailed interpretation of the Bill, which is relevant to the consideration of these matters. If the Attorney-General were here now, I am confident that he would be able to confirm that clause 5 will permit all the activities that I identified earlier in my remarks.

The hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) asked how the Government seek to ratify the Bill and whether they intend to propose a declaration when the time comes. I hope that we shall be told in what circumstances it may be possible for the Government to be taken to the International Court of Human Rights at The Hague, so that its interpretation of the convention may be put to the test.

Reference was made in the debate on Second Reading to the precedent adopted by the Government of Canada. The Foreign Secretary said, if my recollection is correct, that the Government's attitude was similar to that taken by the Government of Canada, but that is far from the case. I have the legislation passed by the Canadian Government before me and it is in very different terms from those of the Bill. It contains an express distinction between what is termed "active assistance" and passive assistance. It is accompanied by a declaration of understanding, which the Canadian Government have entered to the Ottawa convention. The Canadian legislation provides that participation in military operations is to be regarded as permissible so long as that does not amount to active assistance with prohibited activity.

The Secretary of State nods. There are no words to that effect in the Bill. The Government are not following the precedent set by the Canadian Government. The Bill is miles away from the Canadian precedent.

Dr. Reid: It is not.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps the Minister of State could refer me to the language in the Bill that mirrors the language to which I have just pointed in the Canadian legislation. It simply is not there.

Dr. Reid: It is the same pattern and process, not the same subject of detail. The interpretive declaration was put in at the time of ratification.

Mr. Howard: I have no idea what that intervention means and I doubt whether any other hon. Member does—[Interruption.]

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Ministers and others on the Government Front Bench must be quiet. I have called the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) to speak, and he is the only person who should be speaking.

Mr. Howard: This is not a matter that requires a technical briefing from the Ministry of Defence. It is a matter for the Foreign Office. It is not the Ministry of Defence's view with which we take issue; we take issue with the Foreign Office's view. If the Ministry of Defence, for good reason, wanted to insert something like clause 5 in the Bill—there may be good reason for doing so—we have no argument with that. However, if that is the view taken by the Ministry of Defence, the Foreign Office should have reflected that view when it negotiated the convention. The problem is not whether clause 5 is needed; it is that it is absolutely inconsistent with the convention. Nothing in the convention would give rise to an exception that comes anywhere near the provisions of the clause. That is the mess that the Government have got into, and, because they have got into that mess, they are asking hon. Members to agree to a Bill that would contravene the Ottawa convention, put this country in breach of its obligations under that convention and make our country depart from its long-standing tradition of honouring, ratifying and implementing in every detail the treaties and conventions that it has signed.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: I promise not to get too exercised if my old friend the Minister for the Armed Forces displays his customary zeal in defending the armed services. He has a long tradition of doing that, as a shadow Minister and from the Treasury Bench, and I understand his anxiety to ensure that they are properly protected. He will know that I do not seek to reflect on the honour of the armed services; I never served, but at least one member of my wife's family did, with great distinction. I am as conscious as he is of the importance of ensuring that the armed services are properly instructed and are not laid open unnecessarily to the possibility of conviction, and that we provide a proper legislative framework.

If clause 5 is, as the Minister for the Armed Forces describes it, the "heat of the battle" clause, I should make this point to him. He had reservations about my introduction of the concept of mens rea, or guilty intention, although they were not quite as robust as those of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), who has left the Chamber. Every soldier who fights on the battlefield has to obey the Geneva convention. So long as his actions are in accordance with it—or even if they are not, and he has not displayed any guilty intention—he would not be guilty of an offence. The notion of guilty intent is already in the international legal framework by which we determine the actions of soldiers, sailors and airmen when they are engaged in operations on our behalf.

The shadow Foreign Secretary and I share a view about clause 5, but we do not share precisely the same view about the solution. If he were to press clause 5 stand part to a vote, the clause could be taken out of the Bill altogether

Mr. Howard: I sought to make it clear at the outset that I do not intend to press the amendment to a vote and that I do not seek to remove clause 5 from the Bill. The purpose of our amendment is to demonstrate the inconsistency between clause 5 and the convention, so there is nothing between the hon. and learned Gentleman and me on that point.

Mr. Campbell: It may be that I can persuade the right hon. and learned Gentleman of the merits of our amendments. There is need for a form of what is in clause 5 and for a defence for soldiers engaged on the battlefield. There is not only a need; they are entitled to such a defence. He and I join forces on the fact that that defence should be consistent with the Ottawa convention and not apparently contradictory of it.

It is important to remind ourselves that article 1 of the convention contains a blanket prohibition, the terms of which we are all now familiar with, but only one exception to that is allowed—article 3, which allows for "the retention . . . of a number of anti-personnel mines for the development of and training in mine detection, mine clearance, or mine destruction".

There is an issue there, because I understand that Italy has said that it intends to maintain 200,000 anti-personnel landmines for those purposes. Some people might think that 200,000 was a rather generous margin, and there may be a question about the strength of the language in respect of numbers.

It is understandable, and even desirable, that there should be a defence of the kind that clause 5 creates, but the difficulty is that clause 5(1) further defines the offence created by clause 2. It goes on to provide what is essentially a defence, at subsection (2). The effect of taking the two together is that a person charged with contravention of clause 2 could not be convicted if the conduct that had been complained of did not relate to the laying of anti-personnel mines in contravention of the Ottawa convention.

Likewise, under subsection (2), if proceedings were taken against such a person, it would be a valid defence to say that the conduct took place in the course of, or was for the purposes of, a military operation or the planning of such an operation, and was not the laying of any anti-personnel mines. The effect of that is that conduct up to, but not including, the laying of anti-personnel mines would not be struck at by the criminal provisions.

Our amendments are designed to make the position even clearer than it would be under clause 5 as it stands. We propose in amendment No. 3 the deletion of the words:

"the laying of anti-personnel mines in contravention of the Ottawa Convention" and the substitution of the words:

"active assistance in any activity prohibited under"

the Ottawa convention. In amendment No. 4, we propose the deletion of the words:

"was not the laying of an anti-personnel mine"

and the substitution of the words:

"did not involve active assistance in any activity prohibited under the Ottawa Convention".

For my money, that is much more specific than the current provisions, which operate as much by implication as by express provision. It is right that any British soldier engaged in an international operation should have a valid defence, so long as he or she did not actively assist in any activity prohibited under the Ottawa convention, as those are defined in article 1 of the convention, and so long as his or her conduct did not involve active assistance in any activity prohibited under the convention.

By adopting a formula such as that which I have suggested, one would make the terms of the convention and of the statutory provision virtually identical; indeed, one would be adopting by reference the terms of the convention into the statutory provision. That deals with the point that we should have legislation consistent with the convention; it also has the advantage that it spells out in the clearest possible detail to the soldier in the heat of the battlefield that, so long as he or she does not do something amounting to active assistance, he or she cannot be the subject of criminal proceedings. If such people became the subject of criminal proceedings, they would be entitled to pray in aid the defence in subsection (2).

Mr. Colvin: I am trying to follow the gist of what the hon. and learned Gentleman is saying, and what was said by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), our Front-Bench spokesman. When two lawyers get to work, it is sometimes difficult for the rest of us to keep up. I was under the impression that clause 5, which allows for exemptions and reservations, could not be law under the convention. I understood that article 19 of the Ottawa convention ruled out any reservations, so how can we pass the Bill as it stands and honour the convention?

Mr. Campbell: We can pass the Bill in any form we choose. The House is not bound to pass the Bill in a form prescribed by the convention, although the form in which we pass it may have consequences for whether we are able to ratify the convention, and whether the instrument of ratification is credible and valid. The hon. Gentleman makes a reasonable point about article 19, but my amendments would meet it by making it plain that so long as the individual concerned was not giving active assistance in any activity prohibited under the convention, he or she would have a valid defence. That would be a much clearer statement of affairs.

Because the laying of anti-personnel mines is specifically referred to, conduct up to, but not including, the laying of mines, would, by implication, be excused. It would be better, and it would be consistent with the convention, to adopt the formula of active assistance. That would make clause 5 consistent with the convention while avoiding any need to enter any reservation when the Government lodge the instrument of ratification. That can only be in our interests, and I hope that the Committee will consider the amendment sympathetically.

Ms Oona King (Bethnal Green and Bow): Clause 5(2)(d) provides a defence for British military personnel whose conduct is "related to the laying of anti-personnel mines".

If the defence is that laying an anti-personnel mine requires the other prerequisites given for the transfer or transport of landmines, how widely can the net be thrown? It is obvious that we need a defence for British personnel, but British forces will not be allowed to use, possess, transfer or transport mines, or to assist others in doing so. Is this not an adequate defence?

If, in the parallel universe occasionally raised by the Opposition today—I mean no disrespect by that, but I worked in Nicaragua in 1986 and saw the effects of landmines—clause 5 allowed any loophole, which I do not believe it does, will my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary undertake to review the legislation? Clause 5 hinges on the need for members of NATO and international allies to sign the Ottawa convention, particularly the United States. It is often said that we are five years behind the USA; let us hope that America will not be five years behind us in this case.

Sir Robert Smith (West Aberdeenshire and Kincardine): I did not intend to speak today, but the opening speeches left me concerned that political divisions sometimes prevent us from scrutinising the details of criminal legislation. At times, people are forced away from accepting reasonable words, such as those of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) on how to improve clause 5. We should seek consistency, particularly in criminal legislation. When we dealt with the Crime and Disorder Bill, the Government felt it right to draw the criminal net widely, saying that we need not worry about its drawing in people who should not be drawn in because those who implement the law will use regulations to avoid that. Today, they have flipped that logic the other way, arguing that exceptions should be drawn widely, so that people will not be brought into the net who should be drawn in under the convention.

The purpose of the House is to draft Bills and scrutinise them. It is perfectly in order for a Committee to amend a Bill, or to say that amendments can be made in the other place to tighten and improve the Bill. That is the purpose of the Committee stage. I hope that the Government will consider the arguments carefully and seek to bring the Bill more closely in line with the treaty.

Fiona Mactaggart (Slough): I welcome the Bill and the fact that we have set aside special time in which to pass it. However, whenever the House passes legislation relatively quickly, there is a risk that we may inadvertently draft the Bill badly and end up with something that is not quite what we intended. There may be such a risk in the drafting of clause 5.

There is another way of looking at clause 5. It seems odd that people who thought that during the election I was completely outrageous to campaign for the Labour party's position on anti-personnel mines have hinted that clause 5 is designed to enable Britain enthusiastically to participate in joint operations with countries, such as the USA, which are not signatories to the convention, and that we want to slide under the wire the fact that that may involve us in doing things that are wrong, immoral and are prohibited by the convention. I do not believe that that is the Government's intention.

During the progress of the Bill, it may be necessary to consider ways in which we can refine the wording to ensure that it is clear that we are on all fours with the convention, but that, in the circumstances described by the Foreign Secretary and others that are, as it were, closer to the border, the ordinary soldier is not criminalised by the Bill. That is not the intention, and it is absolutely essential that we should make that clear. I am sure that it is possible to draft the Bill in such a way as to achieve that.

I hope that the Minister for the Armed Forces will be able to assure me that the drafting in no way puts us at risk of being outside parts of the convention, as I am worried that it may do so. I am also anxious that, as we have so much business in the other place, if we spend ages considering this matter, other important Government business will disappear. Many of us who have been enthusiastic to get the Bill through have faced that argument. We are in a cleft stick.

I hope that the Minister will reassure us that the intention of clause 5 is merely to ensure that we do not criminalise officers of Her Majesty's forces who are doing their duty, who are working beside other forces that do not have our same international commitments and who unknowingly—that word is significant—participate in activities that may contravene the convention. I am confident that any necessary detailed wording changes can be considered after this debate. I should be grateful for some assurance about the fundamental intention of the clause.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): I congratulate the hon. Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on making that point. Many people are worried about clause 5, because they feel that it allows us to cop out of the Ottawa treaty. It enables us to say, "Oh well, it wasn't us. It was the Americans in NATO who said that we were to participate in this action. We weren't there at the time, guv." I hope that that element of clause 5 was not intended, but the feeling is that it provides an excuse.

I am not a military person, and I know nothing of military matters. If we are operating as part of NATO and an American NATO commander gives an order to lay landmines, what is the position of our troops? How does this legislation work in a military exercise? Do our troops become conscientious objectors, and are they sent to peel the spuds? Perhaps the Minister will answer those questions.

Mr. Colvin: It is too late to table further amendments, but I cannot understand why the body of the clause cannot be more explicit. Clause 5 is entitled, "International military operations", but its wording throughout omits the word "international". I hope that the Bill will get its Third Reading, but, in the time between the proceedings in this House and in the other place, the Government should consider inserting in clause 5 the word "international", which would make the meaning of the body of the clause far easier for people like me and the world outside to understand.

Dr. Reid: I shall start, I hope usefully, by dealing with the issues that were raised by the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge). She spoke about the Government's motivation; the armed forces, presumably as instruments of the Government's will; and her fears about clause 5 and our troops being given orders within alliances by a commander of a state that had not ratified the convention. I shall deal with those matters in turn.

The hon. Member recognised the balance that we had to consider when we were framing clause 5. Our troops would not carry out such an order because, for them, it would be an illegal order. On motivation, the hon. Lady need not fear that a Government who were prepared to ratify the convention, pass law, take a lead on these matters and lead the world in many ways within days of coming to office should somehow all along have wished to avoid the consequences of their actions. That would be a bizarre interpretation of motivation. I impugn the honour of no hon. Member, and for anyone to imply that not only the Government but British troops would wish to conduct themselves in that way impugns the honour of our troops. That was one of the reasons that I gave, perhaps too robustly, for rejecting the claims made by the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard).

I am surprised that many who have spoken in the debates, not only on clause 5 but on the Bill as a whole, seemed to question the Government's commitment to the Ottawa principles and the global elimination of anti-personnel landmines. Clause 5 has been portrayed as some kind of betrayal of the Ottawa convention. Such a claim is extraordinary, especially in view of the identity of some of the accusers: the previous Government were hardly distinguished by the urgency of their commitment to abolish anti-personnel landmines.

I had hoped that, whatever the past contained, the Government and the Opposition would be able to proceed, in the name of the nation, on one of the great humane moves of the 1990s and possibly of the century while protecting the honour and lives of British troops and reducing the practical risks to them. Motivation has featured in the debate. The Government took the lead on this issue, not only in the United Kingdom but throughout the world. Within days of the new Government's coming to office, I was called to the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, whose prime responsibility is to balance the great issues of humanity, civilisation, law and liberty. The unique tasks that we discharge through our troops means asking them to act not in rooms in which liberal lawyers have discussions but on the world's battlefields where life and limb are put at risk. On the issue of landmines, there was no question about the side of the fence on which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence came down. The same applies to the Chief of the Defence Staff. The British troops were involved in that discussion, as was the Foreign Office.

Apart from taking that lead, and apart from early ratification, we have already introduced an export ban. A moratorium on use has been in place almost since the day that we came into office. Our stockpiles are being destroyed even more rapidly than we anticipated in that first week that they would. We have destroyed 46 per cent. of them—almost 500,000 landmines—since we came into office.

In addition, of the many thousands of mines in the Falkland Islands that have now been located, only one is British. Even though they are not our mines, however, demining of the Falklands is actively being considered. Work on putting appropriate verification arrangements in place is well advanced and we are assisting others in meeting their obligations under the convention.

In addition, we have created the humanitarian mine action section of the Ministry of Defence, as well as the mine information and training centre, which is run by the Royal Engineers with the specific aim of helping non-governmental organisations and others to deal with the blight of anti-personnel landmines that have already been laid throughout the world.

Before today, I did not think that even the Government's worst enemy would suggest that, rather than leading the campaign to eliminate global landmines, we had somehow been devoting our energies all along to thwarting the campaign—I counted without the shadow Foreign Secretary.

Sir Robert Smith: I hope that the Minister will recognise that many of us do not doubt the motivation. We are trying to ensure that the wording is accurately drafted in Committee.

Dr. Reid: I am glad that the hon. Gentleman has reminded me of part of my job. Another part of it is to respond to the points that have been raised by hon. Members, and one of them was the motivation question, raised by his colleague, the hon. Member for Richmond Park. It deserved a response because it underlies some of the suspicions, fears and implied criticisms that are being engendered by the shadow Foreign Secretary. However, I maintain that the Government's commitment is not in doubt.

Our motivation is not in question because, in contrast to the previous Government, our actions and practical moves have spoken louder than our words—and the people of Britain know that—but we did not and do not interpret the Ottawa convention to mean that coherent and effective joint operations that are carried out alongside non-signatory, non-ratifying allies should risk criminalising United Kingdom service men and women; our service personnel should not risk prison because of the acts of others. We did not and will not countenance putting our service men and women in that position.

That reading would not only call into question the future cohesion and effectiveness of NATO but would have serious implications for coalition action anywhere in the world, as well as for our service men and women. The important distinctions and nuances of legal interpretation that we are discussing are important, but nothing would give Saddam Hussein, or future Saddam Husseins, greater pleasure than the realisation that the Ottawa convention could be taken to prevent this country from playing an effective role in coalitions that might otherwise repel aggression or enforce peace. I will explain the practical implications of some of that.

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): I am listening to the Minister's arguments carefully and I agree entirely: we must ensure that our troops are in no doubt whatever about their ability to participate in joint operations. However, will he reflect on the answer that he gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge)? On the hypothetical position of a non-ratifying country commander giving an order to a British soldier, the Minister said that the soldier could rightly say that it was illegal to lay a mine, but does he not accept that, under clause 5, that soldier could not give the same reply if he were ordered to assist in laying a mine? As a protection for our troops, would it not be better if the Bill were absolutely explicit, so that no ambiguity existed?

Dr. Reid: I am coming to that very point and to the Liberal Democrat amendments. At the moment, I am dealing with the more general objection enshrined in the amendment tabled by the shadow Foreign Secretary, which would delete the whole of clause 5 and leave our troops without any legal defence whatever. That is different from the amendments tabled by the Liberal Democrats.

Mr. Howard: I repeat what I have said at least twice today. The amendment was tabled as a peg for a debate on a very important question about which disquiet has been expressed in all quarters of the House—the relationship between clause 5 and the Ottawa convention. I made it plain from the outset that I was not going to press the amendment to a vote, and that it was simply a peg for debate.

Dr. Reid: The right hon. and learned Gentleman is a learned and prestigious Queen's counsel, I think; I am just a common 5' 8". He has had a week in which to table a reasoned amendment and to offer a different legal interpretation, but he has chosen to table an amendment that would delete the whole of clause 5 which provides a defence for British troops. I was merely observing that that is somewhat different from the amendments tabled by the other Queen's counsel, the hon. and learned Member for North–East Fife (Mr. Campbell). I made that distinction in response to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath).

Mr. Howard: It may help the hon. Gentleman to deal with the points that I have raised if I say why I tabled the amendment in the form that I did. The problem that the Minister has to address is whether it is possible to retain clause 5 in any form and still adhere to the Ottawa convention. The view that I reached—which is why I did not table a different amendment—is that it was not possible to retain any part of clause 5 and subscribe to the convention. I hope that the Minister will deal with that point. The solution may not be to get rid of clause 5, which he may well seek to justify for good military reasons, but to amend the Ottawa convention. That is at the heart of the dilemma.

Dr. Reid: The right hon. and learned Gentleman is now going to extraordinary lengths. I think he is saying that, as it is not possible to amend the convention, we should not ratify it. Not only does he wish us to remove the clause that protects British troops, on the basis that it is incompatible with the convention but he is now urging us not to ratify the convention, which I find even more extraordinary. Added to the fact that he keeps assuring us that he wants the Bill passed quickly so that the convention can be ratified, I think it shows that the confusion lies not with the Government but with the Opposition.

Mr. Howard: It is the Government who have caused the confusion. They drafted the Bill and they signed the convention. It is for them to explain, but so far we have not heard a word of explanation in response to the disquiet expressed in all quarters about to how clause 5 can be reconciled with the convention. That is the dilemma at the heart of the debate, and it is what the Government have to explain.

Dr. Reid: It has already been explained to the right hon. and learned Gentleman that the Bill is consistent with the convention. He heard it this morning, not only from my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary but from the Attorney-General, who expressed his full agreement. The right hon. and learned Gentleman should know that we cannot amend the convention, but he had the opportunity to try to amend clause 5. If he is so keen to protect our service men and women—as we are doing in the clause—he had a chance over the past week, either in a private briefing by the Ministry of Defence or by publicly tabling an amendment, to make proposals on protecting our troops. However, at the end of that week—with all his learning and experience, and with his obviously strong views on the matter—his suggestion is that we delete clause 5, thereby taking away any protection for our troops.

I should move on, as I wonder whether Opposition Members who so loudly criticise the Bill really intend either that we should leave our troops defenceless if the activities of others are deemed to be criminal or that we should have to avoid multinational operations. Is the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe aware, for example, that it is a fact—it is regrettable, but nevertheless a fact—that neither Kuwait nor Saudi Arabia has so far signed the convention? Does he think that that strategic reality should simply be ignored if the United Kingdom has again to take up arms against a dictator?

Clause 5 is the Government's reconciliation of our duty of care to our troops and our adherence to Ottawa principles. We take both those matters very seriously indeed. We balance—as the hon. Member for Richmond Park asked us to do—those two considerations. Moreover, we will not be the first to enter an interpretive declaration—which is not an amendment or reservation, as the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife suggested—making it clear that the convention was not intended to make coalition operations with non-signatories impossible. The Canadians led the way on such a provision.

We have given a great deal of thought to the wording of clause 5. Its purpose is to ensure that members of our armed forces cannot be prosecuted for the circumstances of planning and operating alongside troops from states for which the use of anti-personnel landmines remains legal. The clause provides a defence for personnel involved in an international operation alongside troops of a state not party to the Ottawa convention which may use anti-personnel mines.

United Kingdom personnel could not themselves use such mines or give any assistance whatever to a state party to the convention which planned to use such mines in contravention of its international obligations. The clause enables United Kingdom service men and women to engage closely in the planning and conduct of an operation with those who may, lawfully for them, use anti-personnel mines. Without such a provision, United Kingdom service men and women, if they were in some way indirectly implicated in use of anti-personnel mines by the forces of a state that is not party to the convention, would potentially be at risk of prosecution and imprisonment for up to 14 years. We cannot place the men and women of our armed forces in that invidious position.

It has been said that the clause is a licence. It is not a licence but a shield. It is a shield that has to be large enough to protect the men and women of our services in serving a country that has led the world in banning landmines and has absolutely no intention—in ratifying the convention, in passing the Bill or in the action of our troops—of doing anything other than adhering to the principles in which we have led the way.

Dr. Reid: I am coming to the hon. and learned Gentleman's main point.

In the practical circumstances—far from the comfortable surroundings in which we debate the matter—in the fog and heat of battle, in the planning and conduct of hostilities, we will be asking young men and women to make decisions. Their lives already depend on those decisions and, should they survive, we should not ask them to countenance the possibility of unwittingly facing criminal proceedings and penalties despite their sacrifices and the courage they have shown.

Let me give one or two practical examples. Without the clause, if non-ratifying states' vehicles, which could contain anti-personnel landmines, refuelled during hostilities at a United Kingdom refuelling facility, our service men and women could be laid open to criminalisation, criminal charges and penal servitude. Other examples were given earlier. Suppose that a non-ratifying state's forces equipped with anti-personnel landmines crossed United Kingdom-controlled areas of the battlefield, or that our forces were deemed to have benefited in some way from the activities involved in landmine laying by a non-ratifying state or, to use the example given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, that a non-ratifying state's forces were to run a lorry full of anti-personnel landmines across a bridge built by our engineers. Without clause 5, all those possibilities could lay our service men and women open to criminal charges. I do not believe that is the will of the House and, more important, I cannot believe that it is the will of the British people. They want landmines removed from the globe and they do not want the reputation or the careers of our service men and women impugned in the course of achieving that aim.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: Do I understand from what the Minister has said with some passion in the past four or five minutes that, on the battlefield, in the circumstances that he has described, clause 5 would permit British service men and women to do things that they would not be able to do if the operation were being conducted only by the United Kingdom or within the United Kingdom?

Dr. Reid: No. That is not the understanding. There is a balance to be struck. We believe that we have it right, and that is why I am asking the hon. and learned Gentleman not to press his amendment.

I now come to the hon. and learned Member's main point, which relates to active and passive assistance. He could reasonably say that none of my examples would be considered active assistance and that they would all be passive or unknowing assistance.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether the Minister can help me, because I am confused by the answer that he has just given the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell). Clause 5(3)(a) makes it clear that the clause applies only to military operations outside the United Kingdom; paragraph (b) makes it clear that it applies only if

"it involves the participation both of members of Her Majesty's armed forces and of members of the armed forces of a State other than the United Kingdom"; and paragraph (c) makes it clear that it applies only if that other state is not a signatory to the convention. Therefore, is not the position exactly as the hon. and learned Gentleman put it to the Minister—that the clause permits actions to be taken under circumstances that would be illegal if they were taken in the United Kingdom and not in the context of such joint operations? If that is not right, why not?

Dr. Reid: I know that the right hon. and learned Gentleman is a lawyer and not a military man. The hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife asked not whether the clause permitted something, but whether troops would be permitted to act in a different fashion. That was the question I was asked, as we will find if we check Hansard. The clause and the Bill cannot be taken as if we were discussing the matter in the abstract; it applies in the context of the rules of engagement, which are part of what a soldier, in the activity on a battlefield, will have to curtail his operations. The rules of engagement will be partly informed by the Bill. Thus, the answer to the hon. and learned Gentleman's question is no, there will not be different circumstances. He has raised a more important point, which is the question of active and passive assistance. The Government take the view that the distinction is an unsafe and imprecise basis for United Kingdom legislation.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State used the example of a British sapper building a bridge. What could be more active than building a bridge? The building of a bridge might assist a United States unit deploying landmines over the bridge. The sapper would not be able to rely on any mens rea defence under the Bill if he was capable of suspecting that the bridge might be used by a United States mine-laying unit. To put people in the position in the heat of battle of having to make those decisions would be a dereliction of our duty to protect our troops. So we have another defence that clearly covers that conduct, and it is enshrined in clause 5. We do that because we do not believe that we should put our soldiers, especially in a life-and-death situation, through the further agonies of worrying whether the action that they take will later be argued by lawyers to constitute a violation of the convention, for which they could face up to 14 years in prison.

The hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife made the point that the Geneva convention already implies that soldiers' actions can constitute a violation. I am sure that he accepts that the Geneva convention is of long standing and is not, like the Bill, a new piece of legislation, which we in the House of Commons, with legal minds surrounding us, have disputed. The Geneva convention has clarity, and we have experience of it which is of such long standing that it cannot be compared to the questions posed by the Bill for soldiers in the battlefield. We do not want them to be faced with those awful prospects. It would be a dereliction of duty to allow them to be so.

I do not go as far as my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). I do not suggest that the hon. and learned Gentleman quaintly depicts British soldiers wandering through battlefields with a gun in one hand and "Archbold" criminal pleadings in the other, but it is reasonable to say to him under these circumstances that the Government have an obligation to clarify matters with regard to the soldiers' intent. The one thing that they can be absolutely clear about is when they are or are not laying mines. For that reason, that is all that we expressly cover in the offence. Beyond that, beyond the Bill, beyond our intentions and beyond our public statements, we have ways other than the criminal law of controlling the actions of our troops.

We have the most professional Army in the world. The House can be assured that Her Majesty's armed forces will fully comply with the spirit of the convention, but they should not be subjected to the suspicion that there may be legal nit-picking after the event in addition to the other burdens that we place upon them.

I hope that the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife will see the merit in what I am saying and the sense of not pressing amendments Nos. 3 and 4. I am sure that it was never his intention that amendment No. 5 should remove an effective part of the implementation of the convention, but the purpose of the words that he seeks to remove is to ensure that if a military operation involving co-signatories to the convention included in its formal plans the use of anti-personnel landmines, the legal defence provided by the Bill would no longer be available to our personnel.

We would not want to condone any breach of the convention, even by allies who are also signatories. That is the purpose of the words that the hon. and learned Gentleman seeks to remove. If I understand him correctly, that would do the opposite of what he intends to do, and I am sure that he would not wish that to be the result, so I beg him not to press amendment No. 5.

The Government have taken a lead in the campaign for a global ban on landmines. We have done so through every instrument at the disposal of the state—through diplomacy, through government, through our contacts in the wider community and through our informal representations. We have also done so through our armed forces, which are an enduring source of national pride to this country.

Our armed forces undertake duties far beyond those required for the defence of the nation. They not only defend our rights: they are an instrument for the discharge of our wider moral responsibilities in the world, and they carry out that role not only in the interests of this country but in the wider interests of humanity. They work alongside parties from all over the planet, some of whom have not signed and will not ratify the Ottawa convention.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made it clear on Wednesday, such overseas deployments will be an increasing feature of life for our armed forces. It would be morally wrong for them to be exposed to the risk of prosecution simply for carrying out their duties in trying to meet military objectives, often in the most horrendous conditions, and as a result of anti-personnel mines laid by the forces of a state that is not party to the Ottawa convention.

The people of this country would expect the Government and the House to have a duty of care to our forces and to ensure that they are not exposed to such risks—just as we have a duty to discharge in terms of wider international obligations, to rid the world of landmines. We take both those duties seriously, and we will discharge both of them.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: With the leave of the Committee, Mr. Martin, I shall return briefly to the question and answer that we heard a moment or two ago about the scope of the defence. As the Minister knows, and as I went out of my way to say, I think it desirable that there should be a defence to deal with the heat of the battlefield.

However, as I understand the position, the defence available applies when operations take place wholly or mainly outside the United Kingdom, involve the participation of the armed forces of a state other than the United Kingdom, and may involve some deployment of anti-personnel landmines.

If the defence is available in those defined circumstances, that must mean that it would not be available if those circumstances were not present. That therefore means that we are giving a defence in certain circumstances, which would not be available if the United Kingdom were acting alone—as in the Falklands war, for example—or if the United Kingdom were conducting a defence of the mainland of the United Kingdom against any invader.

We are giving a defence in relation to actions that would otherwise be illegal in either of the alternative scenarios that I have depicted. It is important to test the extent of the defence against those factors.

I hope that the Minister will not regard me as unduly facetious if I say that if his exemplary sapper were ever charged, I would volunteer to defend him myself, for nothing.

Mr. George Robertson: That is quite a good offer.

Mr. Campbell: Indeed it is—but subject to the qualification that the trial would have to be north of the border.

The example of the sapper is not one in which a prosecution would ever arise—or if one did, the defence that my amendments seek to add to the Bill would, in my view, be more than adequate.

The Minister said that when there was even a reason to suspect the use of the bridge, that might constitute a contravention of the criminal law. In my respectful view, a reason to suspect could not in any circumstances constitute the necessary guilty intention in relation to a defence that proceeded on the need to establish that there had been active assistance in activities prohibited under the Ottawa convention.

I do not propose to press my amendments to a Division. Technically, I should have to ask your permission, Mr. Lord, for a separate vote. However, I am not yet satisfied by the Government's responses. If they are worried about a plethora of lawyers in this place, they had better get their tin hats on before they go to the other place, where there are legions of lawyers who are much more experienced than me or the shadow Foreign Secretary, the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard). I predict that clause 5 will be as much a focus of attention there as it has been in our proceedings so far.

Mr. Howard: I agree with the points made by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell). I do not agree with the terms of his amendments—which he invited me to support, before he said that he would not press them to a Division—because I am not persuaded that those amendments provide a satisfactory way of solving the dilemma at the heart of the debate: how to reconcile the terms of the convention with the entirely legitimate and understandable desire, expressed at some length by the Minister of State, to provide proper protection for British troops in the heat of battle.

I am waiting for an explanation of how that dilemma can be resolved, consistent with the terms of the convention. I am not persuaded that the route provided by the Liberal Democrat amendments would work, but we have not yet had an answer to the dilemma from the Government. Disquiet has been expressed about the dilemma in all quarters of the Committee, and it is the function of this place to subject legislation to proper scrutiny. It will not do for Ministers to try to deflect that scrutiny by talking about distinctions and nuances of legal interpretation and to contrast them with real-life situations.

The purpose of our consideration of the Bill is to try to ensure that, in its detailed provisions, it matches real-life circumstances, provides a defence where it should do so and yet matches the obligations to which the Government have signed up by way of treaty and convention. That is the purpose of parliamentary scrutiny, which involves detailed examination of the clauses.

No immunity from that examination is provided by the high moral tone adopted by the Minister of State in the early part of his speech. We have become accustomed to the Government's attempts to wrap themselves in a cloak of moral sententiousness, telling us that they are so pure and impeccable that we do not need to look at the details of what they are doing, and that if we do look at those details we are impugning their high moral tone and standards of virtue. We will not be deflected from our duty of scrutinising the Bill by such considerations.

Fiona Mactaggart: There seems to be a contradiction between what the right hon. and learned Gentleman says about scrutinising the Bill and getting the detail right, and the aim of his amendment. He said that the amendment did not seek to correct the detail, but was a general, explosive, amendment. That runs side by side with the hypocrisy that he has shown in the matter.

Mr. Howard: As I have made plain on at least three occasions so far, the purpose of the amendment is to provide a peg on which to hang precisely the kind of detailed scrutiny, analysis and consideration that it is the duty of Parliament to undertake.

The Minister said a good deal about the military justification for clause 5. As I have said, I have some sympathy with his comments, but he touched on the heart of the dilemma when he said that the purpose of the clause is to provide a defence for British forces when they might be at risk of committing a criminal offence. British forces would be at risk of committing a criminal offence only if their conduct were in breach of the convention. That is the point at the heart of the dilemma. If British service men were to find themselves at risk of committing a criminal offence in circumstances when the Secretary of State for Defence thinks they should not be, the fault would lie with the convention. If that is so—that is the dilemma about which we have been seeking enlightenment, but we have yet to find it—proper representations should have been made when the convention was signed.

The Minister of State devoted a good deal of time to clause 5 and to his attempts to justify it. He spent a great deal less time on the provisions of the convention. That is not surprising, and I sympathise with him on that count also. The Foreign Office negotiated the convention, and a Foreign Office Minister should have replied to this group of amendments. However, a simple question must be answered. It relates to article 1.1 of the Ottawa convention, which makes clear that never, under any circumstances, is any assistance to be given to anyone—whether or not they are a party to the convention—who engages in any activity that is prohibited to a state party under the convention.

The thrust of the Minister's contribution is that there may be all sorts of circumstances in which British forces might want to provide some assistance to parties who are not signatories to the convention. British forces might want to engage in activities that are in breach of the convention. That is the dilemma, and that is the problem facing the Committee today. We have not only not received an answer to that question; we have not come within miles of receiving such an answer.

My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey (Mr. Colvin) was absolutely correct to draw attention to article 19 of the convention, which provides that the convention should not be subject to any reservations. The Minister told us—for the first time, as far as I am aware—that the Government intend to make some kind of declaration of interpretation when they ratify the convention. If that is the case, it would assist the Committee greatly if we could see the text of any such declaration so that we can consider it and determine whether it amounts to a reservation from the convention—which, as my hon. Friend pointed out, would be contrary to article 19—or constitutes some ingenious way of resolving this dilemma.

We have not seen the text of any such declaration and, if we do not see it today, I certainly hope that it will be available before the Bill is considered in another place, where those to whom the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife referred—and I concur in every detail with his description of them—will put it under close scrutiny.

I hope that, before we conclude our consideration of the amendments, we shall have an answer from the Minister to the simple point that I have made. The conduct for which, understandably, he wants to provide a protection for British troops would constitute a criminal offence only if it were contrary to the convention. If the Minister seeks to escape the provisions of the convention through clause 5, will he please show the Committee where in the convention there is any authority for that course?

I put to the Minister article 1.1 of the convention. It is unequivocal, explicit and clear. I put to him also article 19, which says that there should be no reservations. Will he please identify where in the convention there is any authority for the course of action that the Government are taking, as embodied in clause 5?

Dr. Reid: I shall respond, first, to the points raised by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell), who asked about international and national operations. Clause 5 applies only to international military operations. I think that we are clear on that. The hon. and learned Gentleman contrasted that with other operations. We do not need a defence when acting alone. We do not need the clause when acting alone because the problem of anti-personnel landmines does not arise when we are acting alone. Therefore, we need a defence only in terms of multinational operations.

The difference between active and passive has been discussed. The hon. and learned Gentleman has given us his interpretation. I am grateful for his offer but I do not think that I would be thanked by the massed ranks of the British armed forces if I were to say, "We decided to ditch clause 5, which relates to your defence, but I know a guy who will do your defence for nothing." However, I am entirely grateful for the hon. and learned Gentleman's offer. Two great moves forward have been taken today in the context of world events. One of them, I hope, is a move forward on landmines; the second is finding a lawyer who is prepared to offer his services for nothing. I thank the hon. and learned Gentleman for that.

I do not know how to respond to the shadow Foreign Secretary without repeating the points that I have already made—because the right hon. and learned Gentleman merely repeated his points. He has been told by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, by the Ministry of Defence and by the Law Officers today that the Bill is completely consistent with the convention; the right hon. and learned Gentleman's asserting that it is not does not make it otherwise. However, we listen to what he says.

Secondly, clause 5 is not in the Bill as a licence or as a prompt to action but as a shield for our service men and women lest they be at any stage after the event deemed to be subject to criminality—deemed to be or potentially subject to criminality—because of the actions of others. We believe that the clause is completely compatible with the convention and essential if we are to ask our service men and women to engage in multinational operations where there may be alongside them a party or a state that is not a signatory or ratifying state to the convention.

The United Kingdom Government do not believe that the convention was intended to make international co-operation impossible. Article 1 must be read in that context and not in a vacuum. We have been as clear as anyone could possibly wish in clauses 1 and 2, and we are also clear in our intention in the practical application of the Bill and in the signal that we send to service men and women: that in seeking one great goal, as we do—indeed, in leading in the pursuit of one great goal, as the Government have done—we shall not inadvertently fail to discharge our duty to protect our service men and women from the possibility of being accused of criminality because of the acts of others. These are duties that we shall discharge.

Mr. Howard: The Minister says that he has explained why clause 5 is not inconsistent with the convention and that I have merely asserted why it is. The precise opposite is the truth. I have explained at length and in detail precisely why clause 5 is inconsistent with the convention, whereas the Government have simply repeated assertions that that is not the case and offered no explanation to support those assertions. The situation remains as unsatisfactory as it was when we started the debate.

As I have repeatedly said, I tabled the amendments to provide a peg on which the debate could be hung. I made it plain from the outset that I would not press them to a vote. I therefore beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton and Wanstead): I beg to move amendment No. 9, in page 2, line 37, leave out from 'for' to end of line 38 and insert 'life'.

The amendment provides for the maximum penalty for the laying of landmines to become life imprisonment. I want the use of anti-personnel mines to be punishable on the same level as war crimes. Negotiations for an international criminal court are currently going on in Rome and have included a discussion on whether the use of indiscriminate weapons such as landmines should be classed as a war crime. I think that it should, and I should like to discover the Government's view on that and on the setting up of an international criminal court.

I listened to the view expressed by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) in a debate earlier today. I have great respect for him. He talks a lot of sense in the House and in the Defence Committee, of which I am also a member, but on this issue I disagree with him. I think that the laying of a landmine should be classed as a war crime. It is an indiscriminate act and, as we have seen, the target is invariably civilians. Indeed, it makes normal civilian life, long after a war is over, near impossible. The former UN Secretary-General, Boutros Boutros Ghali, called landmines weapons of mass destruction in slow motion.

One has only to look at countries such as Bosnia or Cambodia, about which my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) spoke earlier, to see that landmines are laid by war criminals. That is part and parcel of their genocide.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: I should not like the hon. Gentleman to have the impression that I have closed my mind entirely to whether the indiscriminate laying of landmines should become a war crime. However, I have a number of reservations. For example, would one have to lay 5,000 landmines or just one or two before the act qualifies as a war crime? There are problems of definition, and I am anxious to ensure that the importance of the category of war crime is not diminished by the addition of actions that do not appear naturally to fall within the definition. I repeat that my mind is not closed on the topic.

Mr. Cohen: I am grateful for the hon. and learned Gentleman's intervention. My view is that laying any landmines should be deemed to be a war crime and should be punishable by life imprisonment.

The laying of these weapons is abhorrent behaviour and by providing life imprisonment—the greatest punishment under British law—as a maximum, this country would send a clear signal that such behaviour is unacceptable. Life imprisonment is a maximum sentence, at the discretion of a judge. As with punishments for war crimes and other crimes, judges are likely to set a lower sentence, but the amendment is about signalling what is the maximum.

The laying of anti-personnel mines is an intention to murder. A minefield is nothing more or less than a death trap, and it must be clear in the mind of a British subject who uses anti-personnel mines that deaths may well be the result. Can we allow, under British law, a conviction for arson to be punished with a life sentence when the use of anti-personnel mines carries a maximum of only 14 years' imprisonment? Under section 3 of the Explosive Substances Act 1883, which is still in force, the making or keeping of explosives with an intent to endanger life is punishable by a maximum of life imprisonment—and possession of explosives includes possession of landmines. Under the Genocide Act 1969, the maximum sentence is life imprisonment.

My amendment would place the penalties for laying landmines on a par with those for arson, for possession of explosive substances, for genocide and for war crimes. My strong view is that the laying of landmines is a war crime. I hope that the Government will endorse that position in the negotiations to agree the remit of the international criminal court.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My hon. Friend has raised two separable issues and I shall treat them as separate, if he will allow me. The first is the penalty available under the Bill for those who are found guilty. Let us establish at the outset that, whether 14 years in prison or life, the penalty will be severe and exemplary, which is right and proper for the crimes prescribed under the Bill. We must give clear signals: in what I hope would prove to be the unlikely event of people being prosecuted under our national legislation for such crimes, they would be dealt with in the most serious fashion by the courts. There is no dispute among hon. Members about the need for tough and exemplary sentences to be available and put into operation, should that be necessary.

We could argue almost endlessly about what precise level of penalty would be sufficient to act as a deterrent and to show the full gravity with which our society condemns such crimes. Precisely because the Bill does not seek to erode other parts of the criminal law, some activities consequent on the placing of landmines could, of themselves, attract higher penalties. Murder is murder, irrespective of how it is caused, so there can be no suggestion that we are not on all fours with some of the other heinous crimes mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen).

Under section 4 of the Explosive Substances Act 1883, the making or possession of explosives in suspicious circumstances carries a maximum penalty of 14 years. That was a reference point for the Bill. The Committee could have an interesting debate about the penalty that should apply to making or possessing explosives, but, after the terrorist outrages in London and Manchester, the location of one of the last IRA bombs, none of us treats those crimes as trivial. We are not being inconsistent by using as a reference point a crime that we judge to be heinous and requiring exemplary sentences.

While we can always argue about what precise measures should apply, I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that in the event of contravention of the Bill leading to death or serious injury, other criminal offences would apply, along with the relevant penalties. The reference point is consistent with the 1883 Act, so we are not far from making serious and exemplary sentences available to the courts. We are telling the world and our own people that exemplary punishments would be available if the Bill were contravened.

The more important part of my hon. Friend's remarks concerned whether use or possession of landmines should be a war crime. There is a serious debate about the nature of war crimes. As we speak, the conference in Rome on an international criminal court continues. I hope that the Committee supports the Government's wish to see that conference succeed. The hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife graciously said that he supports us; I hope that I can welcome his consistent support with just as much grace.

We are determined to help to bring the Rome conference to a successful conclusion. Agreement must not affect only a narrow group of states. We need an international court that can bear down on the serious and horrendous crimes that have disfigured the planet in recent times. In Europe, we have the example of Yugoslavia, and there is the prospect that the spectre of war crimes will haunt that region again. I have been to Arusha, where the tribunal on Rwanda is taking place, and to Rwanda itself where war crimes certainly happened. We must have an international criminal court that can deal with matters that need international sanctions or where the weight of international opinion is needed to ratify not just justice, but justice as part of reconciliation.

We can achieve wide agreement around the world on the need to criminalise activities such as genocide. It is easy to say, as Britain does strongly, that activities such as forcing children or young people into armed forces should be criminalised internationally. The crime of rape as part of the prosecution of war—I use that phrase although it is a contradiction—should be made a criminal offence under the statutes of the international criminal court.

Those matters are so important that we are insisting on a workable court that can bear down on those who commit such offences and can give a signal to the whole world that the international community is not prepared to allow them to go unpunished. The would-be perpetrators should know that their actions will lead to prosecution. The mechanism of the international criminal court would provide justice.

My hon. Friend wants the use of landmines to be a war crime. My right hon. Friend said that he, as an individual, and, more important, as the Foreign Secretary, would have no difficulty accepting that the use of landmines and the other activities referred to in the Bill should be included in the definition of a war crime. However, I give my hon. Friend an important warning. Significant members of the international community have not signed up to the Ottawa process and are not yet ready to sign up to an alternative agreement, possibly through the conference on disarmament or wherever we pursue the establishment of a universal ban on landmines. In that climate, the setting up of an international criminal court is not more, but less, certain.

I caution my hon. Friend that, although I can offer him genuine sympathy for his ambitions and can reassure him that this matter does not cause the Government any problems, it would create real and practical problems if we were to pursue it at an international level. At least in the short term, it would make our ambition—which I know my hon. Friend shares—to establish the international criminal court less likely. In those circumstances, although I can offer him sympathy, I cannot offer him a way forward.

I hope that I have responded to my hon. Friend's remarks and that he accepts that the intentions that he wants to serve are either not achievable through his amendment or have already been achieved. The need to give the court real power and the ability to pass exemplary sentences has already been accepted, so I hope that he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Cohen: I accept the points made by the Minister, although I am disappointed at the conclusion he reaches. He said that the Explosive Substances Act 1883 was the benchmark for the 14-year maximum sentence. He referred to the carrying of explosive substances, but other aspects of the 1883 Act carry a life sentence.

My key point is about making the laying of landmines a war crime and for it to be within the international criminal court's remit. I favour the establishment of an international criminal court and I want it to deal with the issues to which the Minister referred. It clearly must cover genocide, rape of women as an act of war and the use of children in war. It must take action against the perpetrators of a holocaust. The use of landmines is a holocaust: it is a holocaust by drip. Individual after individual suffers. As Boutros Boutros Ghali said, landmines are a weapon of mass destruction in slow motion.

I hope that the Government will not lose sight of that point. Although they feel the need to give the international criminal court a more limited remit, I hope that they will, in the future, reconsider this matter and make the laying of landmines a war crime, which is what I favour. On that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. Cohen: I beg to move amendment No. 8, in page 11, line 29, leave out 'may' and insert 'shall'.

Article 8.14 of the Ottawa convention states that any state party that is subject to a fact-finding mission "shall" grant access. However, the Bill states that the Secretary of State "may" authorise access for such a mission. That allows the possibility of may not, but "shall" allows no such negative. The implementing legislation should contain the same word as the convention. Can the Minister assure the House that there are no circumstances in which authorisation would not be given to a fact-finding mission in the United Kingdom?

Fact-finding verification missions are important, and I would not want the Government to block them or to encourage a formula that would enable other Governments to block them by claiming a UK precedent. The amendment is simple and I hope that it will be accepted.

Mr. Key: I should like to raise a point on behalf of the Halo Trust. It was approached by a Canadian human rights organisation which demanded minefield information on current tactical minefields between two countries. When the trust suggested that that was not an appropriate inquiry, the organisation quoted the Ottawa convention with veiled threats. The Halo Trust is not sure whether the rules for fact-finding missions and information and records apply only to fact-finding missions between states under article 8 of the convention or whether it also applies to humanitarian organisations. Furthermore, the trust is not sure whether the rules also apply to missions whose representatives speak to UK nationals working overseas. Some paragraphs suggest that that applies only in the United Kingdom.

The Halo Trust has raised the point because if missions visit humanitarian mine-clearance programmes overseas and demand minefield information, UK demining staff—for example those working for the Halo Trust—would perhaps by law have to hand over the information, even if it were privileged. For example, it could have come from local military commanders as a result of trust being built up between Halo Trust staff and local commanders in countries that had not signed up to the ban. If those commanders thought that non-governmental organisation workers were passing privileged information to the UK, they might not allow any access by international humanitarian staff. Therefore, the Bill's effect might be to reduce humanitarian mine clearance, which I am sure is not the intention. In some mined countries that are emerging from civil war, the distribution of privileged information about mines by international NGO workers could be considered even as espionage.

This is a slightly difficult area and the Minister of State may not be able to respond to it immediately, but I should be grateful if he could perhaps respond by letter, so that we can pursue the matter—[Interruption.] I am delighted that he says that he can do it now.

Mr. David Heath: I support the amendment that was tabled by the hon. Member for—

Mr. Cohen: Leyton and Wanstead.

Mr. Heath: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I was thinking Leytonstone. I listened carefully to him, as I always do, particularly with the news that his lineage has been carefully researched over the past few weeks and the news of the bearers of his surname. He demands even greater respect.

It seems an odd anomaly that the word "may" is used in this context. Surely, Britain would always wish, under any circumstances, to co-operate with a fact-finding mission under the convention. When I say that, I do not question the Government's motives, and I do not want to hear the claim that we had earlier that we are undermining a positive move towards ratification of the Ottawa convention and everything that goes with it. However, the fact remains that a future Government may not be so well disposed. A future Secretary of State may have some scintilla of doubt about the application of the convention. In drafting the legislation, we must leave no area of ambiguity.

Curiously, reading further on in the clause, the word "shall" is used on a number of occasions. Once the Secretary of State, under subsection (1), has decided to issue an authorisation, the content of that authorisation is no longer a matter for his consideration, because the word "shall" appears in subsequent subsections, including, incidentally, the subsection on the overriding of the control functions of constables, which provides that they shall provide assistance. That is wholly welcome.

I am curious—perhaps the Minister of State can help me on this—whether the same provision applies to Customs and Excise officers and to the security services. I assume that, when he responds, he will say that the provision is analagous to that of other Acts that provide similar international obligations. However, perhaps he will explain why this word "may" is used, or do something better than that: accept the amendment, so that we have no doubt as to the position of not only this Government, but any future British Government in respect of the Ottawa convention.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have no intention of rushing to the defence that this is an attempt to subvert the Bill. The amendment is a different proposition from the clear wrecking amendment that the Opposition tabled under clause 5. I accept that the motivation of the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) and the hon. Member for Frome—

Mr. Heath: Somerton and Frome.

Mr. Lloyd: I want to give the hon. Gentleman the Frome and not the Somerton. I accept that he, the hon. Member for Salisbury and my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) genuinely want to serve the purpose of the Bill.

The clause provides the power under which the Secretary of State can allow fact-finding missions to take place; it is not the manner in which the Secretary of State finds himself placed under a duty to make facilities available for such a fact-finding mission. The distinction is not unimportant. Under domestic law, clearly, it is necessary to give the Secretary of State the power by which he can facilitate fact-finding missions. That is sensible, and it is right and proper that it should be in the Bill. Once we ratify the convention, under international law, there will be a duty on the Secretary of State to allow for those fact-finding missions to enter this country. There is therefore no ambiguity about the intent. The duty will exist at the point of ratification and when the convention comes into force.

Mr. David Heath: I understand the Minister's point, but if he were to change the word "may" to "shall", he would combine the duty with the power and incorporate both into British law, which seems a more satisfactory solution.

1.30 pm

Mr. Lloyd: I am certainly not a lawyer—indeed, it is many years since I ceased to pretend to be a logician—but I hope that the hon. Gentleman will forgive me for saying that although I understand what he says, it simply is not necessary to do as he suggests. The shadow Foreign Secretary failed to grasp the fact that the Bill is not the only way in which the Ottawa convention will be brought into operation. His inability to grasp the simple arguments made by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces was the source of his confusion. The law and the other procedures that bring the convention into operation already exist in other fields, or will exist under international law on ratification of the treaty.

The hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) rightly asked about parallels. The convention on chemical weapons, for example, uses exactly the same form of words in respect of fact-finding missions. In respect of the convention on chemical weapons or the landmine legislation, it is inconceivable that any British Secretary of State would seek to place himself outwith the spirit or, more important, the letter of international law. I hope that I have reassured my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) and the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome that what is in the Bill is sufficient. We could go beyond that, but I assure the Committee that it is not necessary.

I refer the hon. Member for Salisbury to clause 27, which defines a fact-finding mission as "a fact-finding mission under Article 8 of the Ottawa Convention".

That is important because a fact-finding mission under this part of the Bill is restricted to the Ottawa convention definition, which is agreed by states that are party to the convention. It could not lead to the problems mentioned today. I hope that I have managed to reassure the hon. Gentleman and those who asked him to express their concerns. If that reassurance is not adequate—although it seems that the hon. Member for Salisbury is indicating that it is—I invite him and those who raised matters with him to come back to me. I shall then attempt to set their minds at rest. However, I assure the Committee that it is not necessary to pursue the amendment, and that all the concerns expressed are covered in the Bill.

Mr. Cohen: The Minister says that what is in the Bill is sufficient. Verification is important, and there must be freedom of access if the treaty is to work and if there is to be confidence that it will work.

I note what the Minister said about the Bill's provisions being in addition to a duty to allow access under the Ottawa convention. In that case, I do not understand why he cannot accept the amendment. However, I assume from his comments that there would be no circumstances in which a Secretary of State would not allow access under the treaty—I see that he is nodding. He used the word "inconceivable" in that context so, on that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Bill reported, without amendment.

1.34 pm

Mr. George Robertson: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

Last year, one of the first visits I made as the new Secretary of State for Defence was to Bosnia, to visit our troops in multinational division south-west. I do not think that it was an accident that my Ministry decided that that should be my first visit. I have graphic memories not only of the service men and women who were serving there and of the dedicated and risky job that they do for us, but of Bosnia's physical and political scenery. That scenery has improved considerably since my visit, providing great testimony of the necessity both of that intervention and of the subsequent role played by our armed services—in stopping the fighting, killing, concentration camps, mass rape and torture occurring on our own continent, in rebuilding shattered communities and in allowing the Bosnian people the breathing space to grow their own new democratic institutions.

Flying over some parts of Bosnia in a British Army helicopter, one's breath was taken away by the physical beauty of the countryside. Flying over Glamoc, for example, one saw dazzling scenery of green spaces and tiny villages. One could not help being attracted to that country. However, one could not land in a helicopter or walk round Glamoc, as it had been riddled and contaminated by the thousands of anti-personnel landmines that were left behind by the warring factions as a legacy—which will continue for many years—to the conflict.

Seeing Glamoc brought home to me the depth of the problem, even more so than when I stood in a minefield outside Mostar, dressed in the cumbersome equipment—of which I am continually reminded by the replay of embarrassing pictures—that is required to enter a minefield. People continue to live and daily to risk their lives and limbs in Glamoc, as its surrounding countryside is covered with undetected mines.

There is therefore an unfinished mission that—for people living in Bosnia and in so many other countries around the world—is not only political or visionary but real and practical. That is why this debate, the Bill and our ratification of the convention are all so important, not only for us and the United Kingdom's credibility but for all humanity. I feel a burning sense of duty to ensure that the campaign continues, not only to ratify the Ottawa convention ourselves but to persuade countries that have not yet signed it and are still manufacturing, exporting and sowing anti-personnel landmines to stop those activities.

Although the House will pass the Landmines Bill in only one day, we have had a full and vigorous debate. The Opposition have highlighted some points of interest, contention and debate. However, they have taken themselves to a logically ludicrous position, essentially telling us that we should not ratify the treaty. They appear to be saying that only by amending the treaty—and that is impossible—can we give our armed forces safety and security. I do not find that a particularly practical position, but they have retreated from opposing the Bill, and I welcome their co-operation in taking the Bill so quickly and at such short notice.

Our success in dealing with the measure in one day demonstrates the strength of feeling on the issue in the House, and that must be welcome. It is also a fitting tribute to the enduring memory of Diana, Princess of Wales, and the work that she did, more than so many others, to draw attention to the evil effect of anti-personnel landmines.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) made a moving speech, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead

(Mr. Cohen). My hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) referred to the parallel universe that the Opposition appear to inhabit in respect of this subject. My hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) and the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) also made powerful speeches. The hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan), who is not in his place, used his Army experience to some effect. He articulated a practical view that will be recognised by many soldiers, including the vast majority who now believe that anti-personnel landmines are a form of warfare which must be abandoned and outlawed for ever.

The debate has underlined the fact that the Government's policy on anti-personnel landmines that we adopted last year has been the right one. I am glad that we have been able to fulfil the pledge that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I made 13 months ago when we came to power and took instant action on the issue. When it comes into force, the Bill will ensure that no British soldier will ever use an anti-personnel landmine again; no British company will be allowed to manufacture anti-personnel landmines; no one anywhere will ever be able to acquire anti-personnel landmines from a British source; and our operational stockpiles of anti-personnel landmines will be eliminated.

We have also ensured that members of our armed forces cannot be prosecuted for planning and operating alongside those from states for which the use of anti-personnel landmines remains legal. That is the right thing to do, and I welcome the recognition that the House has now given that today. Of course, any such protection for our armed forces will become increasingly unnecessary as more states sign and ratify the Ottawa convention. In that context, I welcome the announcement by the United States Government of their intention, at least in principle, to sign the Ottawa convention by 2006. That will provide a big boost towards our final goal. It also shows the inexorable public pressure that is now rightly exerted on all Governments.

There is still a long way to go. No country can measure its achievements merely by reference to its own efforts. The problem of anti-personnel landmines is a global one which requires a global effort. Achieving complete elimination of anti-personnel landmines remains a key objective for the Government, and we will use all our influence and endeavours in the international scene to exactly that effort.

Regrettably, some states do not feel ready or able to sign the convention. For those that have not, the quoted reasons are primarily connected with national security and the need to develop alternative capabilities. However, a comprehensive ban must be exactly that; the Ottawa convention provides a goal to which we have to encourage all states in the world to aspire. That means working closely with those states, recognising their security concerns while persuading them not to rely on such weapons, but to seek alternative and better means of providing their security. It may cost money; it may cause apprehension; but what is that compared with the human costs that are otherwise involved?

We must continue our efforts to demine the world. My Department will continue to play a significant role in that. I am pleased to inform the House that the mine information and training centre that I announced last October is now fully operational. As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said, it is running mine awareness courses on a large scale. Some 2,000 students have already completed its expert courses. It continues to look for ways to help NGOs with mine clearance. The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency also plays a valuable role in developing new techniques, and will continue to do so.

So our work does not end here today with this legislation. There is still much to do, and we will do it. I commend the Bill to the House, and wish it a smooth passage through the Lords.

Mr. Key: Last October, my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Hampshire (Mr. Arbuthnot) and I, on behalf of the Opposition, welcomed the signing of the Oslo agreement. We pointed out that it was severely weakened because it did not include major manufacturers of landmines such as China, Russia and Pakistan. We said that the debate on landmines had rightly focused on negotiations for a future ban, but that the problem required a dual approach—working towards a ban and removing existing mines. We offered consensus on the issue of anti-personnel landmines. We recognised that mines had had a military purpose, and that we should work to encourage the development of alternatives that could achieve that purpose without the appalling risk to civilians. We continue to support the Government's resourcing of mine clearance operations whether directly or through agencies as the Halo Trust.

Television pictures bring into our homes the horrors of wars in far-off lands and the horrendous impact that indiscriminate use of anti-personnel landmines have on innocent civilians. We all remember the scenes of the visit to Angola by Diana, Princess of Wales, which gave such global momentum to the cause of the International Committee of the Red Cross. Within our own continent, some of us here have visited Bosnia and seen the devastating impact of mines on that country and its people.

On Friday 13 May 1955, which happened to be in the middle of a general election campaign, when I was just 10 years old, a British anti-personnel landmine laid on Swanage beach to defend against wartime invaders was uncovered by a party of schoolchildren of whom I was one. By a stroke of fate, I and a friend got bored and returned to our sandcastle at the water's edge. A few minutes later, the explosion killed five of my friends. British children killed by a British mine. I believe that I am the luckiest man alive in the House today. I know how children and their parents feel in such traumatic circumstances, so it is with a real sense of pride that I stand at this Dispatch Box today giving a fair wind to the Bill.

It is also true that my military constituency in Salisbury has ensured that I understand why our service men continue to feel the need for battlefield protection by anti-personnel landmines. They are usually the very same people who are motivated to extremes of bravery when they put their lives at risk in mining operations both during their service and when they have retired. We must all recognise that ratification of the Ottawa convention will mean that our armed forces lose a significant military capacity, and that defensive landmines are effective in redressing the balance in favour of the user in the face of an assault by superior forces.

[Mr. Key]

I agree with the Secretary of State that this is not the end. Today is the beginning of a new era. The Secretary of State and his ministerial colleagues will, I know, address the question of how British soldiers will continue to have effective defensive protection. In 1996, the previous Government asked DERA to conduct studies of non-lethal obstacles for peacekeeping operations. I look forward to hearing what progress has been made.

There are viable alternatives to anti-personnel landmines. They may make static defence systems such as minefields increasingly irrelevant. I wonder how far the Ministry of Defence has got with remote surveillance methods such as electronic sensory devices, real-time satellite intelligence, drone aircraft with infra red and photographic capabilities and so on. How advanced are replacement technologies, ranging from non-lethal devices such as entanglement nets, slippery agents, foam and obscurants to Claymore-type mines that are activated by command through remote surveillance methods that automatically activate other forms of ordnance?

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) said, the Bill is a very imperfect animal. There is much unfinished business here. It must receive close scrutiny in another place, but we have made a start today and we give the Bill a fair wind.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: In the cockpit of frenetic exchange today, it has sometimes been easy to forget the purpose for which we are here. We pass lots of legislation in the House, but there can rarely have been—

It being a quarter of an hour after the commencement of proceedings on Third Reading of the Bill, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER, pursuant to the Order [9 July], put forthwith the Question already proposed from the Chair.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Asylum Seekers

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Pope.]

1.49 pm

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham): I am grateful for the opportunity to introduce an Adjournment debate on the specific issue of asylum seekers and the role of local authorities in the associated funding. I see that the Minister has not yet arrived to respond to my debate, so I shall make my remarks as slowly as possible, to give her a chance to catch up—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. Will hon. Members leaving please do so quickly and quietly?

Dr. Cable: I shall preface my remarks with a couple of introductory comments explaining the context within which I chose the debate. Most Adjournment debates stem from essentially local problems, and this one is no exception. My borough, like many other London boroughs, has had to cope with the financial and practical implications of an influx of asylum seekers, including, in our case, unaccompanied children.

I state at the outset my recognition that although we have genuine problems, they are not on the same scale as those of other London boroughs, especially those in the inner city. The Minister—I am glad to say that she has now arrived—represents an inner-city London borough, and I know that she is well aware of the magnitude of the problem. I would not want to exaggerate the difficulties that we have in our corner of London.

However, the fact that a borough with a relatively small number of asylum seekers still has a serious problem illustrates the magnitude of the problem in general. To put the numbers in context, we have about 242 asylum seekers at present, among whom particular problems surround a group of either 17 or 22—depending on how the numbers are measured—unaccompanied children. Hillingdon has almost 150 unaccompanied children, and, in terms of aggregate numbers, we are talking in terms of 2,000 or 3,000 in areas such as Southwark, Haringey and elsewhere. Although my borough's problems are relatively minor, they illustrate the broader issues.

Secondly, I realise that the Government inherited extremely offensive and unsatisfactory legislation, and that they have been battling with the problem ever since they came into office. The Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 and the Housing Act 1996 created a morass of problems, which the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), who is, I believe, the lead Minister in the matter, called a "shambles within a shambles". That is an accurate description. We have a combination of highly defective and pernicious legislation and subsequent court action; that has created the problem that the Government now have.

I also recognise that the Government have given assurances that they will introduce new measures soon, and that the Minister may be inhibited by the spending announcements due next week. None the less, I feel that there are ways in which we could take matters a little further forward in this discussion. A particular question that I wish to pursue—we can pursue it in qualitative terms even if the numbers are not open for discussion—is whether there will be a role for local authorities in the new measures that the Government envisage, and if so, what kind of role that will be. I hope that I shall be able to press the Minister on that question.

My third introductory point is the fact that, when we talk about asylum seekers, Members of Parliament have a responsibility not to whip up xenophobia, racism and other such feelings in their areas. It is easy for such matters to get out of control. In my borough, which I emphasise is not one of the most affected areas, there were reports a few weeks ago of "floods of asylum seekers", but, when the story was investigated, it turned out to involve only seven people. By then, however, local opinions had become thoroughly inflamed. We have a duty to represent our areas and to express their concerns, but also a duty not to inflame public opinion.

Long before I became a Member of Parliament, I was involved in immigration issues, and fought and argued hard for the rights of people to have access to the United Kingdom—for example, in the context of the problems associated with the Asians from east Africa. I strongly support the position taken by my party leader on the rights of people from Hong Kong. I support a liberal and humane approach to asylum and immigration. If we are to sustain that argument, we must deal with the problems faced by local authorities. That is the spirit in which I present this debate.

As most of us know, a substantial number of asylum seekers remain ineligible for benefits under the legislation introduced by the previous Government. Three categories present problems in different degrees for local authorities.

First, there are the single people, of whom there are about 10,000 in London, according to the Hammersmith figures, which are the common statistical basis. Those 10,000 people are all pushing for bed-and-breakfast accommodation, in a city where such accommodation is extremely difficult to get. Because of recent court rulings, they cannot share with other families, so the problem has been fragmented and the demand for accommodation is even greater than it otherwise would be. There is a disparity between the funding that the Government are making available for single people once costs are deducted, and the costs that local authorities have to pay. The estimate that I have been given is that London boroughs as a whole are paying out of their own resources £6 million for this category.

The second group are the families. Under the Government's complicated funding structure, local authorities must pass a threshold of spending—£80,000, I think—before they can begin to claim back some of those expenses. In order to accommodate about 13,000 people, London boroughs must pay out of their own resources about £13 million.

The third category is unaccompanied children. I shall speak in more detail about this group because, although it is relatively small in number, it presents particular problems under the asylum rules and procedures. There are 890 unaccompanied children in London as a whole. Hillingdon is the worst-affected borough, and possibly also Westminster. My borough has a smaller number. Estimates over the past week have risen from 17 to 22.

Accommodating children is extremely expensive, at £1,000 a week. It is very difficult for the local authorities to access the funding that is available from Government. They must spend £200,000 before they can claim anything back. The restrictive nature of the procedures in the Children Act 1989, under which local authorities are acting, means that services for vulnerable children in the local area are being cut to finance those costs.

I am told that if my local council had been more imaginative in the use of creative accounting, the problem would not have arisen, but councils should not be forced into that position. A literal interpretation of the Children Act 1989 would imply that the interests of vulnerable children are being placed against those of asylum seekers. That is wrong.

We often hear that many asylum seekers are bogus. I tend to take such stories with a pinch of salt. No doubt some are bogus, but surely no one would argue that children were bogus asylum seekers. Most of them are entirely genuine and incapable of dissimulating, as fraudsters would. The current influx of children is from Kosovo, and no one would dispute that that is a war-torn area where ethnic cleansing is being practised, and that there are genuine victims. The particular needs of children and the way in which those impact on local authorities is an issue to which we should give specific attention.

Why is the current practice fundamentally unacceptable? I should not need to speak at length about this point, as Labour, in government and in opposition, has acknowledged why the present situation is fundamentally unsound and unsatisfactory. It is unsound for local authorities because they must pick up a large bill—I believe that the figure is about £26 million for the whole of London. That burden is imposed on local authorities that have stretched financial services and capping limits. It appears to local residents that asylum seekers are being financed at the expense of other services.

The current system is bad for asylum seekers because the payments in kind that they receive under national assistance legislation are barely adequate. Asylum seekers receive food, but cannot get money for travel, which they need in order to pursue asylum appeals. The current payment mechanisms are totally unsatisfactory, and asylum seekers are often introduced to a dependency trap from which they may never escape. The situation is bad for the authorities, for asylum seekers and, almost certainly, for the Government who, at the end of the day, must pay large sums to supply asylum seekers through inefficient mechanisms. That would not occur if there were a properly integrated national programme. Worst of all, the present situation is bad for race relations. As a result of the immediate juxtaposition of asylum seekers and reduced Government services in local areas, people's feelings are inflamed unnecessarily.

The present situation is thoroughly unsatisfactory, but what can the Government do about it? I recognise that announcements are imminent and that perhaps the Government cannot reveal the details of their proposals. However, if the Government are moving towards a national system of asylum benefits that is qualified by the provision of documentation—I believe that that is the proposal on offer—where will it leave local authorities? Will they still be responsible for undocumented cases, particularly children, who are most unlikely to be carrying documents? What role will local authorities play? How will they be reimbursed according to the new proposals under consideration?

[Dr. Cable]

I hope that we can make some headway on the issue of transitional arrangements until the Government's new procedures come into effect. The situation is urgent in many cases, and local authorities must receive some relief—for example, we should remove the threshold regarding the amount of money that must be spent before local authorities qualify for reimbursement. Last year, the number of unaccompanied children reached double figures in 16 London authorities. However, only three local authorities had sufficient numbers of unaccompanied children to be able to claim Government money. That is the sort of anomaly for which the Minister's Department is responsible, and I hope that the Government will address that problem without prejudicing their overall expenditure targets, which will be announced next week.

Although the Minister is not responsible for the Home Office, we must put in context the way in which the Home Office is managing the asylum seeker issue. Many Members of Parliament deal with asylum seekers' cases, some of which have been around for years. The delays are appalling. I understand that the problem was inherited from the previous Government, but it is totally unclear why a substantial number of civil servants have not been drafted in to deal with the problem much more expeditiously. That is very strange, and it is quite wrong that the solution to an enormous human and financial problem should be obstructed by bureaucratic difficulties in the Home Office. I hope that the Minister will provide an assurance that proper priority is being given to that issue.

I hope that, in defining their approach to asylum seekers and local councils, the Government will adopt a much more holistic approach. At present, the response to the problem is fragmented: various Government Departments do different things, and local authorities do their own thing. Some of them act adequately and heroically, while others pass the buck to other local authorities. We need a co-ordinated approach that is led from the centre.

There have been examples of when the Government of the day, Conservative or Labour, have faced up to the difficulties presented by immigration problems. The country's response to the Ugandan Asians crisis, for example, ultimately reflected credit on most of those concerned. We had a concerted national response to the problem of the boat people, which was led by the Government of the day. I realise that the asylum seekers issue is much more complex than either of those two examples. However, we need Government leadership, which must be integrated and co-ordinated. That is what most of us are seeking from the Government.

2.4 pm

The Minister for Public Health (Ms Tessa Jowell): I begin by paying tribute to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) for raising this important issue. The House will know that asylum seekers who claim asylum at the point of arrival are entitled to social security benefits that cover their needs for housing, food and other necessities while their applications are considered. Local authorities have become responsible for supporting asylum seekers under the National Assistance Act 1948 and the Children Act 1989 as a consequence of the previous Government's removal of entitlement to benefit for people who claimed asylum after entering the country or whose initial application had been turned down.

We recognise that the current arrangements have placed an undue burden on local authorities and, quite inappropriately, on social services departments. Local authorities are in a difficult position in having to meet an open-ended commitment without having any control over the number of people approaching them for assistance. The point was well made by the hon. Gentleman. Staff and other resources that should have been used for community care services are being diverted, to the detriment of other service users.

The current support arrangements are a mess, and we are having to consider a way of relieving the burden on local authorities, but we still need them to play a role given their access to and expertise in this area. As a matter of priority we initiated a wide-ranging interdepartmental study to examine the asylum process from beginning to end, including the present arrangements for welfare support. It is unacceptable that any asylum seeker should be left destitute, but, equally, we are conscious that a balance must be struck between reducing the benefit incentive for economic migrants to make unfounded asylum applications and the need to support asylum seekers while their applications are considered.

The study team has now completed its work, and we are considering its findings carefully across government. We shall carefully examine all the options before deciding what to do, and we shall announce the way ahead as soon as we are able to do so. I am fully aware of the sense of urgency with which our announcement is awaited. The Government's policy on asylum seekers is that we should deal with their cases quickly and fairly so that genuine refugees receive the protection to which they are entitled and those who seek to abuse the asylum process are given no opportunity to play the system by pursuing appeals that have no chance of success.

Our aim is to put in place a strategy for dealing with asylum issues that is responsible, properly thought out, comprehensive and enduring. We intend to implement a clear, coherent and comprehensive policy across the board. In the meantime, it is our responsibility to operate the law as it stands. The removal of benefits in 1996 and subsequent court judgments have had severe consequences for many social services authorities, especially in London. The local authorities for the boroughs of Lambeth and Southwark, in which my constituents live, are facing precisely the sort of pressure that the hon. Gentleman referred to. I know that that pressure is shared by other hon. Members and by my hon. Friends, especially those who represent London constituencies.

A new duty has been imposed on many social services authorities to support adults for whom they have never before had to provide services and for which they do not have funding. Although there is no new duty in respect of families with children and unaccompanied children, the numbers are very high and the burden on local authorities is therefore substantial.

At 29 June, just over 10,000 adults were being accommodated by London authorities and a further 1,000 were being accommodated in the rest of Great Britain. In addition, almost 6,500 families and some 900 unaccompanied children were being accommodated by London authorities alone.

Mr. John McDonnell (Hayes and Harlington): My hon. Friend will be aware that my constituency includes Heathrow. Other hon. Members present today will testify to the scale of the problem of unaccompanied children. Although it is a problem that we welcome because we want to stand by our humanitarian concerns and uphold people's right to live in peace and security, the scale of the problem is placing an increasing burden on our local authority and diverting resources from the local community.

We have two desperate requirements: first, additional financial resources and, secondly, assistance with and a review of practice at ground level to ensure that the services that we provide are appropriate and adequately supported by both the local authority and the local voluntary sector. I urge the Government to deal with those issues as rapidly as possible.

Ms Jowell: I thank my hon. Friend for the two important points that he has raised, which will no doubt be relevant to, and supported by, other hon. Members.

One of the tests of the new measures that will be announced as a result of the review will be the capacity to deal with the pressures being faced by local authorities such as that of the hon. Member for Twickenham. I wish to underline the fact that some of the most distressing asylum cases involve unaccompanied children who have no source of support or nurture other than that provided by the local authority. In many cases, there is intolerable tension between meeting the demand in terms of cost and responding in a humanitarian way, which none of us would want local authorities to avoid. My hon. Friend has highlighted the tensions and I hope that the review will meet those points.

We recognise that it is not right that a financial burden on the scale that this issue represents should be imposed on council tax payers, or that community care services for local people should suffer. We have continued to make available to local authorities three special grants to alleviate the burden imposed on them. Last year, the Department of Health paid local authorities almost £40 million to support adult asylum seekers. The majority of claims by local authorities for reimbursement of expenditure on adult asylum seekers was fully met in 1997–98. However, we have listened carefully to what local authorities and local authority associations have been saying about the costs of supporting asylum seekers and we have therefore undertaken to increase the adult grant by some 18 per cent., subject to parliamentary approval, to £165 a week per adult asylum seeker accommodated in 1998–99.

With regard to local authority support for asylum seeking families, under section 17 of the Children Act 1989 local authorities have a general duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children who are in need within their area and, so far as is consistent with that duty, to promote the upbringing of such children by their families by providing a range and level of services appropriate to those needs. Section 17 duties are for children under the age of 18. The Government paid £28.4 million for that grant in 1997–98 to target compensatory funds to local authorities with significant numbers of asylum seekers with children.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): Will the Minister acknowledge that one of the difficulties for local authorities is that there is a threshold above which they receive compensation from the Government? They are juggling with a few tens of thousands of pounds within the tight finances that apply to local government to try to stretch the money over the services. That is causing huge difficulty, especially in areas where money to support asylum-seeking children has to come directly out of the children department.

My hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable), whose constituency shares a borough with mine, has pointed out that that is causing huge stresses and tensions in the boroughs, because parents of vulnerable children and children in need are being asked to give way for asylum-seeking children. We want to cater adequately for both categories, but the threshold often prevents us from doing that.

Ms Jowell: I entirely accept that some local authorities have difficulties. The hon. Lady will be aware that the grant is not intended to meet the full costs of care for children, but is focused on local authorities that deal with the largest number of children. Whatever formula is settled on, it is extremely important that it is administratively simple and gets the resources to where they are most needed.

The purpose of the children's grant is to provide compensation to local authorities for unforeseen additional expenditure in carrying out their duties under sections 17 and 18 of the Children Act 1989, rather than the reimbursement of the full costs. The grant is to support children in need, and their families, through support for the whole family, or to support children of 16 or 17 who are without a family and are not already being looked after by social services, which are affected by changes in social security benefits and housing legislation for asylum seekers. The grant is intended to keep the family together.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is seeking resources of a commensurate level for the current financial year. The number of families with children being supported by local authorities has been rising steadily, and the Government recognise that local authorities will need resources to reflect that increasing demand. For unaccompanied asylum-seeking children, we currently have a grant of up to £3 million a year, as the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) said, to help meet local authorities' costs in respect of them. As she suggested, authorities qualify for the grant if they spend more than 5 per cent. of the children block standard spending assessment on unaccompanied asylum-seeking children.

We introduced that threshold because many authorities deal with only a handful of unaccompanied children seeking asylum and the amounts of money involved do not justify the administrative costs that would be incurred in paying grant to them. We are, however, reviewing the arrangements for the grant and have taken on board the views expressed by some local authorities about the threshold.

We intend to continue to support local authorities for as long as the current arrangements exist. The courts imposed a new duty on local authorities for supporting adult asylum seekers for which there was no personal social services funding. The families with children grant and the unaccompanied asylum-seeking children grant recognise that local authorities already had a duty to those groups under the Children Act 1989, and they are considered to be a contribution to the increased costs that local authorities face. We have listened carefully to representations from local authorities and local authority associations about the conditions of various grants. We have undertaken to reconsider the grants and we will put proposals and special grant reports for 1998 and 1999 before the House in due course.

The hon. Member for Twickenham made a very important point about the needs of asylum seekers. We need holistic solutions that transcend the boundaries between Departments, and that is a test of our capacity for joined-up government. The awful circumstances facing many asylum seekers are evident from our constituency surgeries every week. That experience underlines the importance of conducting procedures fairly, transparently and speedily. We must ensure that local authorities have the capacity to respond to difficult demands.

Mr. Paul Murphy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive the Elections Review Report in mid August which will be considered by Ministers, and published shortly afterwards.

Thereafter, the Secretary of State will consult the Northern Ireland parties and legislation will be drafted and published as soon as possible.

Union Flag (Ulster Hospital)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Ulster hospital, Dundonald was provided with a Union Flag; if it was flown on the occasion of Her Majesty's official birthday; what arrangements have been made to fly the Union Flag at the Ulster hospital on the appropriate dates; and if she will make a statement. [46727]

Mr. Worthington: The Ulster Community and Hospitals Health and Social Services Trust has confirmed that it has always had a Union Flag and that it was flown on the occasion of Her Majesty's official birthday on Saturday 13 June 1998. Management of the Trust have passed the schedule of dates for flying the Union Flag to the reception porters based at the main reception of the Ulster Hospital who have responsibility for hoisting the Flag.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in Northern Ireland in each year from 1990 to 1997; what was the total number of maternities in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (i) in-vitro fertilisation, (ii) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (iii) other forms of assisted conception. [46929]

Mr. Worthington: The information requested in relation to total maternities and total multiple births is set out in Table 1.

[1] Provisional

With regard to the number of multiple births conceived as a result of IVF and other forms of infertility treatment, the information is as follows:

In a period 1 August 1991[1] to 31 March 1996[2], there were 148 multiple births[3] recorded in Northern Ireland following infertility treatment at the Royal Maternity Hospital (RMH), Belfast, the only clinic licensed to provide such treatment in Northern Ireland.

[1] Date from which HFEA commenced keeping records

[2] Latest verified data available

[3] Figures have been provided by the HFEA, whose annual reports appear in the Commons Library. They are grossed up to ensure confidentiality

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47020]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Policy Appraisal for Fair Treatment (PAFT) administrative guidelines of 1993 require the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments to assess the equality impact of new policies, including legislation, in terms of gender and seven other categories. Such assessments are not published, but are covered by annual reports on the implementation of PAFT. A report for 1997 is in preparation. The White Paper, "Partnership for Equality", published on 11 March 1998, proposed replacing PAFT with a statutory obligation to promote equality of opportunity.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost to public funds of each of the four area councils for health and social services in each of the last three years. [47115]

Mr. Worthington: The table discloses expenditure on Health and Social Services Councils by the Northern Ireland Health and Personal Social Services Boards for 1995–96 and 1996–97. The information for 1997–98 is not yet available.

Bloody Sunday Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the families of the (a) deceased and (b) wounded on Bloody Sunday have been informed of the number of counsel and firms of solicitors who will represent them at the Bloody Sunday Inquiry; and if they will have the solicitor, and counsel of their choice. [47003]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 24 June 1998]: I understand that these matters will be discussed at the preliminary hearing of the Inquiry which will be held at the Guildhall, Londonderry on 20 July as laid down in the list of considerations given in the Bloody Sunday Inquiry press notice of 18 June.

Housing Grants

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if data are available to enable her to make a statement on the religious affiliation of (a) applicants for grants and (b) applicants whose grants have been approved, in both cases by district council area, under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1992. [47275]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose Chief Executive has advised me that to date, there are still insufficient data to make a meaningful assessment of the impact of the grants scheme on applicants of particular religious persuasions. The Commission for Racial Equality has recommended that a completion rate of 80 per cent. to the relevant question on the preliminary inquiry form is the minimum which would allow for meaningful monitoring. At present, only 63 per cent. of applicants are completing the question.

Higher Education Applications

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those aged (a) under 21, (b) 21 to 24 and (c) over 25 years and over, registered in Northern Ireland, applied through UCAS for admission to a course of higher education for the (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996, (iv) 1997 and (v) 1998 entry cycles; what were the numbers of the population in Northern Ireland aged (a) to (c) for (i) to (v); and what was the proportion of those applying as a percentage of the appropriate population cohort. [47266]

Mr. Worthington: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Mr. Worthington: The Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA), on behalf of the Department of Education Northern Ireland, gathers data on the gender, ethnicity, religion and disability of students in universities in Northern Ireland.

DEFENCE

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which battalion will be assigned for public duties in Scotland for the first opening of the Scottish parliament. [48033]

Mr. George Robertson: The 1st Battalion The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the 1st Battalion The Black Watch will be assigned to public duties in Scotland during the summer of 1999. No decisions have been taken on which units will participate in the opening ceremony for the first Scottish parliament.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated regarding the causes of Gulf War Syndrome illnesses. [38601]

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what research is currently being carried out on behalf of his Department into the effects of Gulf War Syndrome on servicemen; [44673]

(2) what criteria are used to select control groups in studies into Gulf War Syndrome; [44675]

(3) how many servicemen are currently participating in studies of Gulf War Syndrome. [44674]

Dr. Reid: In addition to our present work on the subject of illnesses suffered by Gulf War Veterans, I am today announcing that MOD will be funding an independent systematic literature review of worldwide published research relating to Gulf veterans' illnesses. This decision follows a recommendation from the Medical Research Council (MRC) who advise the Government on research aimed at addressing Gulf veterans' health concerns. The review will be carried by a team led by Professor Glyn Lewis at the University of Wales at Cardiff and will cost £75k over three years. The findings of the review will be published at regular intervals.

The Government are already funding two major epidemiological studies to look at the health of Gulf veterans and their families. One study, under Professor Nicola Cherry at Manchester University, aims to determine whether Gulf veterans are experiencing greater ill-health than service personnel who did not take part in the conflict and will involve a total of 9,600 Gulf veterans, plus a control group of 4,800 personnel. The other study, under Dr. Patricia Doyle at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, will examine the reproductive health of Gulf veterans and the health of their children. Dr. Doyle aims to contact all personnel who served in the Gulf, some 53,000 in all, plus a control sample of the same size. Controls for these studies are drawn from personnel who were serving at the time of the Gulf War but did not deploy there.

A further epidemiological study looking at whether service in the Gulf is associated with increased illness of UK veterans is being funded by the US Department of Defense and carried out by Professor Wessely at Kings College School of Medicine. Although this study is being carried out independently of MOD, the Department is co-operating with Professor Wessely by providing essential data to the study team. This study involves 4,250 Gulf veterans and two control groups: one of 4,250 non-Gulf personnel and another of 4,250 personnel who have served in Bosnia. The control groups have been randomly selected to form a sample similar to the Gulf cohort on the basis of Service, age, sex and Officer/Other ranks status. The Army and RAF samples are also selected according to Regular/Reservist status and fitness.

The Government are also funding King's College, London to carry out a clinical study under Dr. Michael Rose and Dr. Mohammad Sharief. The study will focus on those veterans who have, according to their response to the epidemiological study carried out under Professor Wessely, significant neuromuscular symptoms.

Control subjects for this study will be randomly selected through Professor Wessely's epidemiological study and will include Gulf veterans who do not exhibit any neuromuscular symptoms, Service and ex-Service personnel who were serving at the time of the Gulf War but did not deploy there and personnel who have served in Bosnia. In addition, a group of civilian patients will be used to validate the research methodology, although they will not be used for comparison as part of the study.

The Government are also funding a programme of research to investigate the possible adverse health effects of the combination of vaccines and tablets which were given to troops in the Gulf to protect them against biological and chemical warfare agent. This research is based principally on animal studies, but it is also planned to monitor the health of staff at Porton Down who receive multiple vaccinations as part of their normal safety regime.

MOD Police

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the performance of the MOD Police Headquarters; and how many cases relating to (a) grievance and (b) disciplinary procedures took (i) six months or more and (ii) 12 months or more to reach a conclusion in (1) 1996–97, (2) 1995–96 and (3) 1994–95. [46495]

Dr. Reid: The Ministry of Defence Police is an executive agency and therefore subject to the same review procedures as all other departmental executive agencies. I have made no specific assessment of the performance of the MOD Police Headquarters in addition to the normal agency reviews. The information requested on the duration of grievance and disciplinary cases is as follows:

| Year | Grievance cases 6 months to 12 months to conclusion | Grievance cases 12 months or more to conclusion |

The current grievance procedure was not adopted by the MDP until July 1995 and so the information is available only from the year 1995–97 onwards

Figures for the year 1994–95 cover the 15 month period from 1 January 1994 to 31 March 1995

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47017]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women on 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58.

Divisional Headquarters, York

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed closure of Divisional Headquarters in York. [47101]

Dr. Reid: No proposals have been put to Ministers for the closure of the Divisional Headquarters at York. Various options are under consideration as part of the study into the future divisional structure of the Army in the United Kingdom, details of which I set out in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for City of York (Mr. Bayley) on 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 349.

Death Penalty

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department's inquiry into the retention of the death penalty in military law will be completed. [45740]

Dr. Reid: [holding answer 17 June 1998]: Consideration of the review is now in the final stages and I will advise the House of the outcome as soon as possible.

Greenwich Hospital Site

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implementation of long-term plans at the Greenwich Hospital site under section 26 of the Armed Forces Act 1996. [46650]

Dr. Reid: I assume the question refers to section 30 of the Armed Forces Act 1996. The section requires my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to have regard to the heritage of the Royal Naval College site at Greenwich, the desirability of securing reasonable public access to it, and to prevent use out of keeping with its unique history and character. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence hopes soon to be able to conclude a head lease with the Greenwich Foundation, an independent charitable trust, whose intentions for the site are entirely consistent with Section 30(2). The plans for the future of the site, which include planned occupation by the University of Greenwich, are being developed by the Foundation in consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Culture, Media and Sport and for Defence.

Large Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when is the anticipated delivery date of the C130-J aircraft; when it was originally due to be delivered; what compensation has been offered for its late delivery; and if he will cancel the order of C130-Js due to late delivery. [46822]

Mr. Spellar: On current plans, the Ministry of Defence will receive delivery of the first aircraft for test and evaluation in mid 1998. It was originally due to be delivered in November 1996. We will be claiming liquidated damages from the company, currently estimated at £30 million, which will be used to offset the additional costs incurred by the MOD. We have no plans to cancel the contract.

RAF Stanmore Park

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the timetable is for the dismantling of RAF operations at RAF Stanmore Park and for the disposal of the site; and if he will make a statement. [46919]

Mr. Spellar: RAF Stanmore Park formally closed on 1 April 1997 with units transferring to RAF Bentley Priory. However, until the necessary work to provide messing and accommodation at RAF Bentley Priory is complete, use will continue to be made of facilities at Stanmore Park. Although on current plans the site will not be vacated until 1 June 1999, a marketing strategy is already being prepared by the Defence Estates Organisation in order that an open market sale can take place as soon as possible thereafter.

Parachute Regiment

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to make an announcement about the future roles of (a) the Parachute Regiment and (b) 24 Air Mobile Brigade. [46813]

Dr. Reid: A package of proposals, covering all our Armed Forces, has been submitted to the Cabinet. Once decisions have been taken, the results of the Strategic Defence Review will be published in a White Paper as quickly as possible thereafter.

WE177 Weapon

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of withdrawing and dismantling the WE177 weapon. [46824]

Mr. Spellar: The estimated cost of dismantling WE177 is some £23m; withdrawal costs are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many WE177 weapons were manufactured by his Department before the weapon was withdrawn from service; and in what years these weapons were manufactured. [46826]

Mr. Spellar: WE177 was manufactured between 1966 and 1977. Regular servicing was carried out as necessary to ensure continued safety and reliability whilst in service. I am withholding information as to the number of weapons manufactured under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Government Information relating to Defence, Security and International Relations.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which contractors and Ministry of Defence organisations designed each variant of the WE177 weapon; and when this work was carried out. [46825]

Mr. Spellar: Design work for WE177 was started over 30 years ago with the design for the first variant completed in 1963, the second in 1965, and the last in 1972.

The co-ordinating design authority for all WE177 variants was Hunting Engineering, with the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment as design authority for the warhead element. The Royal Ordnance Factories at Burghfield, Cardiff and Chorley, RAF Farnborough, and RARDE Fort Halstead assisted in the work, as did a number of other contractors. Given the age of the programme, it has not been possible to compile a full and accurate list.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 November 1997, Official Report, column 581, if the weights, sizes and yields of each type of the WE177 weapon are now declassified information. [47804]

Mr. Spellar: Information on the size and weight of all three variants of the WE177 bomb is unclassified and is listed. Technical details relating to the performance of the weapons, including yield, which would reveal information about our design capabilities, or aspects of current operational systems, or be of assistance to proliferators, continues to be covered by exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to Government information relating to defence security and international relations.

|---|---|---|
| Type A | 600lb | 112 inches long |
| Type B | 950lb | 133 inches long |
| Type C | 950lb | 133 inches long |

All variants had a diameter of 16.5 inches and a fin span of 24.5 inches.

Commachio Group Royal Marines

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Commachio Group Royal Marines is based; how many companies it comprises; what is the function of each company; and what plans he has for their relocation. [46820]

Dr. Reid: Commachio Group is based at RM Condor, Arbroath, and comprises an HQ Company and 3 Rifle Companies. The latter rotate in protecting the UK's strategic deterrent assets at HMS Neptune, Faslane, the RN Armament Depot Coulport, and during related road movements. Following public consultation, I approved earlier this year the Group's permanent relocation to HMS Neptune by April 2001.

HMS Ocean

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1998, Official Report, column 638, when he expects to receive details of the costs and the liability in respect of the damage to the tail shaft bearings of HMS 'Ocean'; and if the (a) costs and (b) inquiry conclusions will be made public. [47074]

Mr. Spellar: The Formal Inquiry currently underway into the cause of the damage to HMS Ocean's port shaft "A" bracket bearing is expected to conclude in the autumn of this year. The Inquiry is being conducted by the prime contractor, Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited. The costs of, and liability for, the damage will be the subject of negotiation between MOD and the company following the Inquiry and is not expected to be resolved before the end of the year.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1998, Official Report, column 638, what assessment his Department has made of the cause of the damage to HMS Ocean on her launch in October 1995; and what changes to operating arrangements have been made as a result. [47063]

Mr. Spellar: The hull damage sustained by HMS Ocean during her launch on 11 October 1995 was attributable to the accidental collapse of a forward launch cradle. It is the responsibility of the prime contractor Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited to ensure that launch arrangements are safe and acceptable and, where necessary, adapted to reflect lessons learnt from previous experience. The damage will not require any change to the proposed operating arrangements of HMS Ocean once she enters service.

SA80 and M16 Rifles

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the bullets used by British forces using (a) SA80 and (b) M16 rifles have tumbling action. [47044]

Dr. Reid: The large majority of bullets used by British Forces in SA80 and M16 rifles are known as ball or tracer rounds. Armour-piercing rounds are also used. These bullets are categorised as spin-stabilised, non-deforming bullets. All spin-stabilised bullets will tumble to some degree when they hit a human target.

UFOs

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of RAF Brawdy, Pembrokeshire in the investigation of sightings of unidentified flying objects. [47318]

Mr. Spellar: Brawdy ceased to be an RAF station on 31 March 1996 when the establishment was transferred to the Army.

Generally, my Department examines reports of unidentified flying objects only to establish whether there is any evidence that the United Kingdom's Air Defence Region has been penetrated by hostile or unauthorised foreign military activity. Unless a report reveals evidence of a potential threat from an external military source, no attempt is made to determine the precise nature of what might have been seen.

Underwater Monitoring

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the hydrophonic cables connected with SOSUS Network that extend from the ex-US Navy facility at RAF Brawdy, Pembrokeshire are currently used for underwater monitoring. [47319]

Dr. Reid: The sound surveillance system (SOSUS) cables extending from former US Navy Facility at RAF Brawdy are no longer used for underwater monitoring. The facility has now been passed to the Defence Estate Organisation for disposal.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effect on defence aviation of the sell-off of NATS. [47404]

Mr. Spellar: The Government intend to sustain the principle of equal access to national airspace for all classes of user, and to maintain a joint and integrated civil-military system of air traffic control. We will, therefore, ensure that future arrangements for NATS can continue to accommodate the existing close working relationship with the Ministry of Defence, although there would of course be some structural changes.

Training Aircraft

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons he chose the Grob 115D aircraft in preference to the Slingsby Firefly as the aircraft to be used by University Air Squadron and Air Cadet Experience. [47321]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 24 June 1998]: As I said in my announcement on 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 265–66, the Grob 115D was selected in preference to the Firefly because it offered best value for money. The Grob is better suited to the particular requirements of the University Air Squadrons and Air Cadet Air Experience Flights and is both quieter and cheaper to operate than the Firefly. Furthermore, the Grob was the preferred choice of the Royal Air Force for this task.

Territorial Army (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the 5 Shropshire and Herefordshire Light Infantry and the Royal Mercian & Lancastrian Yeomanry Territorial Army battalions. [47681]

Dr. Reid: The future role of all arms and services within the Territorial Army will be decided as part of the Strategic Defence Review. An announcement will be made as soon as possible, but it may be some time before we can say how individual units will be affected by the outcome of the Review.

Armoured Reconnaissance Vehicle

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take further steps to ensure that the projected multi-role armoured reconnaissance vehicle is delivered to the British Army on time. [47806]

Mr. Spellar: We will continue to work with our French and German partners to make sure that the contract for development and initial production of the Multi-Role Armoured Vehicle, which is currently under negotiation with the preferred bidder, includes the conditions necessary to ensure that deliveries are made to meet the requirements of the British Army.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many exercises to test procedures for dealing with accidents involving nuclear weapons are to be held by his Department during 1999; when and where these exercises will be held; and what are the titles of these planned exercises; [46800]

(2) how many exercises to test procedures for dealing with accidents involving nuclear weapons are to be organised on British territory by the United States Government during 1999; when and where these exercises will be held; what are the titles of the planned exercises; and if his Department will participate in all exercises. [46801]

Dr. Reid: The following Grade A, B and C nuclear weapon accident exercises are planned to be held in the United Kingdom in 1999:

Nuclear weapon accident exercises—1999

| Date | Exercise | Location |
|---|---|---|
| June 1999 | Exercise Dimming Sun[1] | Norfolk |
| To be decided | Exercise Bowling | Coulport |
| To be decided | RAF weapon convoy Standardisation | To be decided |
| To be decided | RAF Station NARO team Standardisation[2] | To be decided |

[1] Exercise Dimming Sun will be a joint UK/US nuclear weapon accident response exercise, the planning for which is being led by my Department. The exercise will test the response to an accident as described in the Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency plans

[2] RAF Station NARO teams provide immediate response forces for the air transportation of nuclear weapons

Note:

Details of minor exercises, organised at either UK or US unit level is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department plans to publish the third edition of the Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans. [46814]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 33.

Agency Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of the (a) Defence Analytical Services Agency, (b) Defence Postal and Courier Agency and (c) Naval Manning Agency; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each was first produced. [46799]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Brigadier Tweedie McG. Brown to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 29 June 1998:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Agency newsletters as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency (DPCSA).

DPCSA produces a monthly internal newsletter for its staff in the Agency and Postal and Courier personnel world-wide entitles "Post Notes". It was first published in April 1995 and it is currently classified Restricted.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Letter from Fabian Malbon to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 29 June 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about newsletters produced for the staff of the Naval Manning Agency as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency.

No regular Newsletter is produced for the staff of my Agency. A Newsletter dealing with the introduction of Investors in People (IIP) was produced in September of last year and it is likely that a further Newsletter on the same subject will be produced in September of this year. The security classification was, and will be, Unclassified.

I am replying to that part of your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence on staff newsletters which refers to the Defence Analytical Services Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of DASA.

The DASA weekly newsletter 'Grapevine' produced by the staff themselves on a rota basis, is unclassified.

The first edition appeared in 1994 and has been issued at approximately weekly intervals since. I have pleasure in enclosing a copy of a typical issue. I hope you find this information useful.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) number and (b) names of individual members of the armed forces killed while serving in Northern Ireland since 1982. [38405]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 20 April 1998, c. 462–65]: I should make it clear that the information given related only to those members of the armed forces killed by terrorist action while serving in Northern Ireland.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Traffic Policing

Ms Hewitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to set a police key performance indicator to reduce the rate of death and injury on the road. [46922]

Mr. Michael: The Government recognise the important contribution which traffic policing can make towards promoting community safety. We regard traffic policing as a central part of the police's responsibility for maintaining law and order, preventing and detecting crime, and reducing death and injury on the roads.

Traffic policing, however, is only one of the several types of policing which are crucial in tackling crime and disorder. The Home Secretary's national key objectives and key performance indicators are intended to reflect the Government's major initiatives and key priorities, and their number needs to be limited if priorities are to remain clear. Traffic policing should, though, be included in local objectives where police authorities consider that to be appropriate. Performance indicators for the police published by the Audit Commission include the number of road traffic accidents involving death or personal injury.

In 1987, the Department of Transport introduced a target to reduce casualties by one third by the year 2000 compared with the average for 1981–85. As at 1997, fatalities were down 36 per cent. and serious casualties were down 42 per cent. despite an increase in motor traffic of 52 per cent. The Government will be setting a new road traffic target for Great Britain for reducing casualties by the year 2010. It will be incorporated into a coherent road safety strategy, reflecting the Government's work on an integrated transport policy. The objective is to have a new road safety headline target and sub-targets agreed and set during 1998.

The Government are committed to reducing the number of fatalities and injuries which occur on our roads, and we are carefully considering a range of further measures to improve the safety of all road users against the background of our integrated transport policy.

Probation Service

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes there have been in the funding of the Probation Accommodation Grants Scheme operated by the Inner London Probation Service since 1 May 1997. [47065]

Ms Quin: Excluding grants for accommodation training, the Inner London Probation Service received £1,344,218 in 1997–98 and £1,308,742 in 1998–99 in Probation Accommodation Grants Scheme funding, which represents an improvement of £35,476 on what was originally envisaged in the previous Government's spending plans.

Since 1 April 1995, local probation services, not the Home Office, have been responsible for the administration of grants to the independent sector for offender accommodation (the "Probation Accommodation Grants Scheme"—PAGS). Prior to that date, the Home Office paid providers directly, regardless of their area of location.

When the grants were devolved, this was on the basis that payments to each probation service would be tapered over about five years until the proportion of the total accommodation grant paid to each service was in proportion to the total revenue grant paid to each service under the national cash limits formula. This has meant that some services have received stepped increases in their accommodation grants whilst others, including the Inner London Probation Service, have received decreased grants.

Victim Support

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provision of support for, and information to, the victims of mentally disordered offenders who by reason of their disorder are committed for medical treatment. [47010]

Ms Quin: Both the Home Office and the Department of Health are committed to improving the level of support and information provided to the victims of crimes committed by people with mental disorders. Due consideration needs to be given to confidentiality of personal information, but I hope the first results of the work we are undertaking will be seen in the next few months, in the form of a Department of Health leaflet for victims about the care and discharge arrangements for mentally disordered offenders.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47055]

Mr. Straw: No action zones have been established by my Department since 1 May 1997. The details of the pilot schemes we have set up in that period are:

1 Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords]

Incapacitant Sprays

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received that police officers in Cumbria used incapacitant spray in an inappropriate way; what assessment he has made of such reports; and if he will make a statement. [47213]

Mr. Michael: We have not received any reports or representations on this subject. I understand from inquiries made with Cumbria Constabulary following the tabling of this question that, since the force introduced CS sprays, no complaint about use of CS has been substantiated, and that the force has seen a drop of 14.4 per cent. in assaults on officers.

Child Safety Week

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives his Department will take to promote Child Safety Week on 22 to 28 June. [47196]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 582.

Football Hooligans

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had over measures to combat hooliganism by UK citizens travelling to football matches abroad. [46317]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend has had correspondence and discussions with the French Minister of the Interior, and there have been extensive discussions over many months between the British and French Governments, police and football authorities. In February, the Home Secretary hosted a European Union seminar on the policing of football, which was also attended by my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport and myself, at which 23 countries were represented. In March, we published the Government's strategy for the World Cup, a copy of which was sent to every hon. Member. The Government's aim throughout has been to ensure that every assistance is given to the honest and well-behaved spectator in France. Minimising hooliganism and ensuring a high level of co-operation with the French authorities are crucial parts of that.

Police operations in France during the World Cup are a matter for the authorities there, but there have been extensive discussions between British police and their counterparts in France. Police officers from England and Scotland are in France assisting the French police, and I am satisfied that arrangements for the rapid collection and dissemination of intelligence on possible offenders are in place and working.

Correspondence

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Under-Secretary of State expects to reply to the letters of 19 March and 12 May from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed about the treatment of Mr. James by the Prison Service and the response given by the Prison Service to inquiries from his prospective employers. [47821]

Ms Quin: Following my consideration of the correspondence, I understand that a meeting has been arranged on Wednesday 8 July for the right hon. Member to discuss Mr. James's case with Prison Service officials.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public registers which his Department have responsibility for. [47351]

Mr. Straw: My Department has direct responsibility for the following registers:

Index of Exempted Dogs (Dangerous Dogs Act 1991)[1]

Licensees and Certificate Holders under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986[1]

Official Roll of the Baronetage

Register of Forensic Pathologists

In addition, the Home Office has limited responsibility, by virtue of our supervision of the relevant local services and/or the governing legislation, for the following registers:

Electoral Registers (Representation of the People Act 1983)

Coroners' Registers of Deaths Reported (Coroners' Rules 1984)[2]

Registers of Burials (and Records of Disinterments) (Local Authorities' Cemeteries Order 1977)[2]

Registers of Grants (Local Authorities' Cemeteries Order 1977)[2]

Register of Cremations (Cremation Regulations 1930)[2]

[1] Not accessible to the public

[2] Information available to the public subject to approval of individual authority holding register.
The Data Protection Registrar, a Home Office Non-Departmental Public Body, is responsible for making available the Data Protection Register.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what progress has been made on the Code of Practice as defined in section 122 of the Police Act 1997; [47375]

(2) what plans he had to implement the Criminal Conviction Certificate. [47376]

Mr. Michael: We have decided to implement Part V of the Police Act 1997 which provides for the establishment of a Criminal Records Agency. When established, the Agency will be responsible for the issue of Criminal Conviction Certificates and other forms of certificate provided for in the Act. Many of the practical issues were not addressed at the time of legislation, but consideration is now being given to the options for phasing in the provisions of the Act and the timetable for implementation. As part of this process, and in full consultation with interested groups, further consideration will be given to the Code of Practice intended to inform the use of information provided by the Agency.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many subject access requests were received by the Metropolitan Police in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998 to date; and if he will make a statement; [47373]

(2) how many subject access requests involved the retrieval of personal data stored on the Police National Computer in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998 to date; and if he will make a statement. [47374]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is given in the table.

| | 1995–96 | 1996–97 | 1997–98 | 1998 to date |
| Number of subject access requests received by the Metropolitan Police Service | 9,461 | 15,036 | 19,962 | 3,923 |

The number of applications received which involve retrieval of personal data on the Police National Computer is not recorded.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the Interpretation of the Second Principle of the Data Protection Bill 1998 creates a link to the notification requirements of that Bill. [47364]

Mr. George Howarth: Notification to the Data Protection Commissioner is one way in which the purposes for which personal data are obtained may be specified in accordance with the second data protection principle.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the provision with respect to medical purposes in Schedule 3, paragraph 8 of the Data Protection Bill 1998 differs from the corresponding provision in Article 8(3) of the Directive 95/46/EC. [47363]

Mr. George Howarth: The Data Protection Bill [Lords] is intended to make clear how the general provisions in the Directive should operate in the United Kingdom. Paragraph 8 of Schedule 3 sets out the circumstances in which sensitive data may be processed for medical purposes. It is fully consistent with Articles 8.3 and 8.4 of the Directive.

Offshore Financial Regulatory System

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those who have (a) been asked to contribute to his review of the financial regulatory system in the Channel Islands and Isle of Man and (b) offered contributions; and if this review will hold public evidence sessions. [47726]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The detailed conduct of the Review is the responsibility of Mr. Andrew Edwards, in consultation with Home Office officials and the authorities in the Channel Islands and Isle of Man.

Mr. Edwards has had extensive consultations with the Island authorities, with private sector practitioners and with others in the Islands. In addition, he has consulted widely within the United Kingdom and elsewhere.

I understand that he has no plans to hold sessions open to the general public; but in the early stages of this Review Mr. Edwards issued statements to the media in the Islands inviting anyone who felt they had something to contribute to the Review to write to him at the Home Office. I understand that firms and individuals in the Islands have responded positively to this invitation.

Although this is an internal Review, the Home Secretary announced to the House on 20 January 1998, Official Report, columns 506–08, that a summary of its main conclusions would be published.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in prison in Wales are classified as mentally ill. [47845]

Ms Quin: The information is not available in the form requested. However, applying the percentage from the two studies of the prevalence of mental disorder in prisoners undertaken for the Prison Service by the Institute of Psychiatry to the population of the four prisons in Wales would suggest that some 900 people in prisons in Wales could be diagnosed as suffering from some form of mental disorder, including substance dependency or abuse.

Key Cutting

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 322–23, concerning key cutting, what the terms of reference are for the review process; and on what date the review will take place. [47297]

Mr. Michael: It is anticipated that a review of the Vehicle Key Cutting Code of Practice will take place in September 1998, six months after its launch, involving representatives of the police service and the key cutting industry bodies. This review would consider whether the existing monitoring procedures adopted by local beat officers and the industry bodies were working satisfactorily. Depending on the outcome, consideration could be given to extend the Code to other key types.

Recidivism

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to commission research comparing recidivism rates of prisoners leaving privately and publicly managed prisons. [46241]

Ms Quin: The Home Office Offenders and Corrections Unit monitors reconviction rates for each prison. The latest survey covered prisoners discharged in 1994, and included the privately managed prisons in operation at that time.

The present data are based solely on the prison from which a prisoner is discharged, irrespective of the time they have spent there. In many cases, the bulk of the total sentence will have been spent in establishments other than that from which a prisoner is discharged.

The Prison Service is currently examining ways of constructing more effective forms of measurement to improve our monitoring of recidivism.

TREASURY

UK Areas

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress being made in agreeing a new classification of United Kingdom areas for European statistical purposes. [48267]

Mrs. Liddell: Following extensive discussions, the Government Statistical Service has reached agreement with Eurostat, the Statistical Office of the European Union, on a revised classification. The Nomenclature of Units of Territorial Statistics (NUTS) provides a breakdown of the European Union's territory for producing regional statistics which are comparable across the Union. It has five hierarchical levels, and is built up from administrative units such as local government areas in the member states. A summary of the newly agreed UK structure is give in the table.

Proposed structure

| | Type of area | | | | Number of areas |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Level | England | | Scotland and Wales | Northern Ireland | |
| 1 | Government Office Regions | | Countries | Country | 12 |
| 2 | Counties (some grouped) | | Groups of unitary authorities | Country | 37 |
| 3 | Upper tier authorities (counties) | Groups of unitary authorities | Groups of unitary authorities | Groups of districts | 133 |
| 4 | Lower tier authorities (districts) | Individual unitary authorities | Individual unitary authorities | Individual districts | 443 |
| 5 | Wards | | Wards | Wards | About 11,000 |

In Scotland, Levels 2, 3 and 4 areas are combinations of unitary authorities, LECs or part thereof

At NUTS level 1, the classification now recognises the areas which will also form the boundaries of the Regional Development Agencies.

At NUTS level 2, the major changes agreed, compared with the current structure, are:

The separation of Cornwall and Devon into two separate areas, recognising the very different economic condition of the two counties, Cornwall's sparsity of population, geographical peripherality and distinct cultural and historic factors.

The Separation of London into Inner and Outer London, recognising the differences between the inner city and the outer fringe, as well as the fact that London was one of the largest level 2 areas in the European Union.

The two-way split of Wales to be on an east/west basis, rather than the current north/south structure. This reflects the evolving differences between the east and the less accessible western and Valleys areas.

Changes to boundaries in Scotland to recognise the area represented by Highlands and Islands Enterprise (HIE). This enables the structure to more closely reflect the uses to which NUTS-based statistics are put. The HIE area is defined by Act of Parliament and is currently recognised for economic development by the EU and the UK.

At NUTS level 3, as substantial increase in the number of areas has been agreed, for the existing 65 to 133, to reflect the changes in local government structures throughout the UK.

Further details are set out in the Government Statistical Service press notice issued today, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total value of Private Finance Initiative contracts signed since 1 May 1997; and if he will place a list of those contracts in the Library. [48268]

Unemployment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on unemployment of a one per cent. increase in average earnings. [47542]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The impact on unemployment would depend on why wages increased, and how employers, employees and others in the labour force responded to the increase in wages. For example, an increase in wages reflecting higher productivity need not have any effect on unemployment.

Public Sector Investment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for each year from 1978–79 to 2001–02 the expenditure by the Government on public sector net investment (a) in real terms in 1997–98 prices and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product. [46387]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 18 June 1998]: Figures for public sector net investment can be found in Table 4A.1 or Table 4.5 (for years beyond 1998–99) of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (EFSR). Projections for the GDP deflator and money GDP can be found in Table 4.1 of the EFSR. Historical figures for GDP can be found in Table 2.1 of Economic Trends. These publications can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Economic and Fiscal Strategy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update Table 318, page 128, of the Financial Statement and Budget Report March 1998, to include information published in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report (June 1998); and if he will make a statement. [46380]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 18 June 1998]: There has been no change to the outturn information for 1996–97 since the Financial Statement and Budget Report March 1998. Provisional outturn information by department for 1997–98 was published in the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (Cm 3988) on 19 June. There have been no changes to the 1998–99 Control Total, with the exception of those noted in Table 3A.1 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998 (Cm 3978).

Public Spending

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the Bank of England was first notified of the new plans for public spending and borrowing, as set out in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report (June 1998); and if he will make a statement. [46384]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England was informed of the Chancellor's statement on public spending prior to reaching its decision to raise interest rates on 4 June; [46533]

(2) if the Governor of the Bank of England was informed of the Chancellor's statement on public spending prior to the Monetary Policy Committee reaching its decision to raise interest rates on 4 June. [46534]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the Treasury representative present at the Monetary Policy Committee's meeting on 3 and 4 June was informed of the plans set out in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report; [46853]

(2) if his Department informed the Monetary Policy Committee of the plans set out in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report at or before its meeting on 4 June. [46852]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answers 18, 19 and 22 June 1998]: I refer to what the Chancellor of the Exchequer said in response to the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) at Treasury Oral Questions on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 1153.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual real terms growth of (a) total Government expenditure, (b) control total expenditure, (c) current expenditure and (d) capital expenditure, for (i) 1978–79 to 1982–83, (ii) 1982–83 to 1986–87, (iii) 1986–87 to 1991–92, (iv) 1991–92 to 1996–97 and (v) 1996–97 to 2001–02. [46386]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 18 June 1998]: Figures for current expenditure and capital expenditure can be found in Table 4A.1 or Table 4.5 (for years beyond 1998–99) of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (EFSR). Total Managed Expenditure is the sum of current spending and net capital investment. Figures for the Control Total up to 1996–97 are given in the Table B24 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report (March 1998). The figure for 1997–98 was published in the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (19 June) and the 1998–99 figure was given in the FSBR, with the revisions noted in Table 3A of the EFSR. Figures for the Control Total are available on a consistent basis only from 1984–85. This concept is not applicable beyond 1998–99, as from 1999–2000 a reformed control regime will be introduced. Projections for the GDP deflator and money GDP can be found in Table 4.1 of the EFSR. Historical figures for GDP can be found in Table 2.1 of Economic Trends. These publications can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Departmental Underspending

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which departmental areas, and for what reasons, there was underspend in 1997–98, compared with the spending plans as set out in the Financial Statement and Budget Report, March 1998; what was the size of the underspend; and if he will make a statement. [46403]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 18 June 1998]: Reasons for individual departmental underspends are matters for the departments concerned. Provisional control total outturn by department is shown in Table 1 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (PEOWP) (Cm 3988) published on 19 June.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what the financial markets would have charged for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link guarantee. [46969]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 June 1998]: The Government believe that the amount of finance required for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link is such that the financial markets would have been unable to provide the credit support which Government are to give.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the basis of the valuation of the Government's participation in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link; what is that value; and who prepared the calculations on behalf of the Government. [46858]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 June 1998]: The information requested was set out in the statement by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70. The Government's participation in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link was assessed using a model of London and Continental Railways' future finances prepared by the company and independently reviewed by external consultants.

Hospital Repairs

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to classify expenditure on hospital repairs as current or capital spending. [46849]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 June 1998]: Expenditure on hospital repairs will follow the classification rules for the national accounts.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what form the results of the Comprehensive Spending Review will be published; and if he will make a statement. [47862]

Mr. Darling: A White Paper setting out the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review will be published before the summer Recess.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in relation to consultation on departmental spending plans for the period 1999–2000 to 2001–2002; and if he will make a statement. [47863]

Mr. Darling: When setting up the Comprehensive Spending Review, Departments were encouraged to consult outside bodies where that would assist the conduct of the Review. Many representations have been made.

VAT (Art Market)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the consequences of VAT harmonisation on London's art market. [46320]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received representations from the British Art Market Federation and from members of the art trade, and am aware of concerns about the effects of harmonisation of VAT on imports of works on the UK art market.

Goods imported into the UK normally bear VAT at the standard rate (17.5 per cent.). Under the terms of EC law introduced in 1995, certain works of art, antiques and collectors' pieces imported into the UK are eligible until 30 June 1999 for an effective rate of VAT at importation of 2.5 per cent. After that date, the UK is obliged to increase the VAT rate to at least the normal minimum effective reduced rate of 5 per cent. No import VAT is due in the UK on works of art that are temporarily imported for auction and are re-exported.

This year, the European Commission will review the effects of the relevant EC legislation on the competitiveness of the Community art markets compared to third countries' art markets. The relevant Government departments are working with the British Art Market Federation to evaluate those effects, and will be closely involved in the Commission's review to ensure that the position of the UK's fine art market is properly represented.

Economic Forecasts

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will re-calculate tables (a) B24, (b) B21, (c) B17, (d) B14, (e) B13, (f) B11, (g) B9 and (h) B8 from the Financial Statement and Budget report of March 1998, on the basis of the information in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report of June 1998. [46361]

Mr. Darling: The Treasury normally publishes two forecasts a year, as required by the Industry Act 1975. The first of these forecasts for 1998 was published in the March Financial Statement and Budget Report (FSBR), and the second Industry Act forecast will be published later in the year. The Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (ESFR) included a summary update of the March 1998 FSBR, based on new spending plans and updated projections of aggregate receipts to reflect outturns available since the Budget. Information on the updated fiscal projections can be found throughout chapters 3 and 4 of the EFSR.

Third World Debt (Donations)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 1998, Official Report, columns 124–25, to the hon. Member for Perth (Ms Cunningham), what has been the administrative cost to his Department of accounting for postcards with money attached; what has been the average amount donated per donor; and how many responses have been sent to (i) members of the public and (ii) hon. Members and at what estimated cost. [45712]

Mrs. Liddell: The cost of processing postcards with money attached as a donation towards debt relief was estimated in March to be around £28,000. A rough calculation suggests that each donor has contributed, on average, around 50p.

Since January 1997, in response to postcards with money attached, around 4,500 responses have been sent to members of the public and over 1,600 responses have been sent to hon. Members.

Public Finance

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his cyclically adjusted estimates for (a) total managed expenditure, (b) general Government receipts, (c) public sector net borrowing, (d) public sector net cash requirement and (e) net public sector debt (i) in cash terms, and (ii) as a percentage of gross domestic product, for (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000, (3) 2000–01, (4) 2001–02, (5) 2002–03 and (6) 2003–04, assuming trend output is 1.5 per cent. above trend in the first half of 1997. [47135]

Mr. Darling: Table 4.1 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report set out the economic assumptions underlying the public finance projections. If output were 1½ per cent. above trend in the first half of 1997, then the assumptions in the EFSR imply that it would be approximately 2 per cent. above trend in 1997–98 as a whole. Cyclically adjusted estimates of the public finances can be calculated using the Treasury's estimates of the effects of the economic cycle on the public finances set out in Treasury Occasional Paper No 4 "Public Finances and the Cycle", published in September 1995. The effects of the economic cycle should not be significantly different between total managed expenditure and general government expenditure, or between public sector net borrowing and the public sector net cash requirement. The Treasury does not calculate cyclically-adjusted measures of public sector debt.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy with regard to allowing any unused AME margin to be allocated to departmental expenditure limits. [47121]

Mr. Darling: The Annually Managed Expenditure (AME) Margin is designed to meet increases above forecast in elements of AME.

Low Pay

Mr. Browne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many (a) men and (b) women working (i) part-time and (ii) full-time in Kilmarnock and Loudoun earn less than (1) £3 per hour, (2) £3.60 per hour and (3) £2.50 per hour; and in each case if he will give the percentage of the total number employed. [47078]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 June 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Desmond Browne, dated June 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on earnings in Kilmarnock and Loudoun.

The latest information, from the New Earnings Survey (NES) April 1997, is contained in the attached table. The NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff and in particular those who work part-time.

The extent of this bias may be estimated for Scotland by using data from the NES augmented by data from the Labour Force Survey. This suggests that the estimate of the proportion of employees earning below £3.00 and £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 3 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the country, and so it would be wise to treat these figures as broadly indicative rather than as precise estimates.

Gillian Merron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many people in the constituency of Lincoln earn less than the proposed national minimum wage, broken down by (a) gender, (b) age and (c) full- or part-time employment. [47092]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 24 June 1998]: The information requested falls witnin the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Gillian Merron, dated June 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on earnings in Lincoln.

The national minimum wage will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for employees aged over 21 and £3.00 for those aged 18 to 21, although there are a number of qualifications to this general observation.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £2.80 and £3.40 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates and I have provided supplementary data for these levels.

The attached table presents data from the 1997 New Earnings Survey (NES) for the parliamentary constituency of Lincoln. I cannot provide data for those aged 18–21 years who would earn below the proposed minimum wage since there were only 10 individuals in the NES sample for Lincoln.

The NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff and in particular those who work part-time.

The extent of this bias may be estimated for the East Midlands by using data from the NES augmented by data from the Labour Force Survey. This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of employees earning below £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 3 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the region, and so it would be wise to treat these figures as broadly indicative rather than as precise estimates.

PRIME MINISTER

European Policy

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what meetings involving the Cabinet Office and 10 Downing Street have taken place since 11 May to discuss the Government's approach to the European Union; and which other Government Departments were involved; [47556]

(2) if he will list the strategy meetings which have taken place since 11 May to discuss policy towards the European Union involving representatives from Departments, units or agencies other than his Policy Unit or Political Office; and if he will list the Departments or agencies represented in these discussions; [47557]

(3) if it is his practice to invite Foreign Office Ministers to attend discussions of European policy at Downing Street. [47553]

The Prime Minister: My staff and I have regular meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others on a wide range of subjects, and will continue to do so. As with previous Administrations, it is not my practice to provide details of confidential discussions.

Cabinet Ministers (Security)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will review the security arrangements for all Cabinet Ministers. [47683]

The Prime Minister: The security arrangements for Cabinet Ministers are reviewed regularly.

Public Sector Pay Review Bodies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current membership of the public sector pay review bodies. [48153]

The Attorney-General: There are no public registers for which my Department has responsibility.

SCOTLAND

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in his Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26645]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The costs of Ministerial overseas travel including those for officials accompanying Ministers are as follows:

This was in accordance with Treasury guidance to Departments on local pay bargaining arrangements for Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies. The Administration opened negotiations with its staff side on 15 June.

Higher Education

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of those aged (a) under 21, (b) 21 to 24 and (c) over 25 years and over, registered in Scotland, applied through UCAS for admission to a course of higher education for the (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996, (iv) 1997 and (v) 1998 entry cycles; what were the numbers of the population in Scotland aged (a) to (c) for (i) to (v); and what was the proportion of those applying as a percentage of the appropriate population cohort. [47267]

Mr. Wilson: Figures on Scottish domiciled UCAS applicants by age, and relevant Scottish population from 1994 to 1998, are given in the table. For 1997 and 1998, the most up to date figures are based upon applications processed by UCAS by 16 May 1997 and 17 May 1998. Not all applications have arrived by this date, therefore 1997 and 1998 figures are undercounts and not directly comparable with previous years.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Commission Documents

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what reviews she has undertaken of the European Commission's implementation of the Code of Conduct on Public Access to Commission Documents. [47459]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 446, about the steps the Government are taking to increase access to information about EC development projects.

It is for the Commission to review their implementation of the Code of Conduct on Public Access to Commission Documents. They collate annual statistics which are available on request. For 1997, these showed that 89.3 per cent. of the 745 admissible requests for documents requested were released. 11.9 per cent. of requests related to external affairs, including development.

Any cases of apparent maladministration in the Commission's implementation of its Code may be referred to the European Ombudsman.

EC Programmes (Developing Countries)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she has received the Environmental Resources Management report, "Evaluation of the Environmental Performance of EC Programmes in Developing Countries". [47458]

Clare Short: Further to my reply to the hon. Member's question on this subject, of 11 May 1998, Official Report, columns 24–25, my Department received the Environmental Resources Management report several months ago and we are still awaiting the European Commission's response. This is due within the next few weeks. We will comment on this response in due course.

Sudan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans (a) she and (b) the Under-Secretary have to visit the Sudan. [47338]

Clare Short: We have no plans to visit the Sudan. My Relief and Rehabilitation Field Manager has been to the crisis area twice since February and reported to me. Our Ambassador in Khartoum also visits the South and reports. A visit by me or the Under-Secretary would serve to hinder and not help the main aim at the moment, which is to get the maximum amount of food in as swiftly as possible to those who sorely need it.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the public registers which her Department has responsibility for. [47353]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development does not have responsibility for any public registers.

Coral Reefs

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the depletion of coral reefs; and what initiatives the Government are taking to prevent the destruction of coral reefs. [47811]

Mr. Foulkes: This Department recognises that depletion of coral reefs is a significant cause of poverty in developing countries, where poor coastal communities often lack land and employment and the coastal ecosystems offer the only accessible source of nutrition and income.

Degradation of coral reefs is occurring in many regions of the tropical oceans as the recently published World Resources Institute/World Conservation Monitoring Centre (WRI/WCMC) report "Reefs at Risk" makes clear. Traditional management systems in many small island communities have permitted sustainable use of reef resources for many years, but increasing population pressure and inappropriate development have contributed to the breakdown of these community-based management systems and a decline in the resource base. Modern arrangements for protection of coral reefs often aim to combine conservation with tourism and, unless carefully planned, can impose costs on the poor through loss of livelihoods. This Department is examining ways in which resources provided by coral reef biodiversity can be sustainably used to support people's livelihoods.

The United Kingdom is a founder member of the International Coral Reef Initiative (ICRI) and this Department has recently published a Manual of Coastal Resource Management in South Asia, following up earlier financial and technical support for the ICRI South Asia Region Coral Reef Management Workshop. We are also helping our partners in South Asia to protect their coral reefs by providing funds and expertise to the International Oceanographic Commission of UNESCO for the development of a South Asia region coral reef monitoring network, the first regional component of a planned global network.

The Government support the development of new approaches to the conservation and sustainable use of coral reef resources through research projects in the Caribbean investigating the biological and social impacts of coral reef protection, and the rate at which degraded reefs can recover when protected. We have funded research to develop a new technology for accelerating the recovery of degraded reefs through research in The Maldives, where coral rock is mined for use as building material. Reefs which had been bare of living coral organisms for 20 years became recolonised within a period of 12 months. We have recently supported work to improve the accuracy of remote sensing methods used in monitoring the state of the coral reef environment.

Our concern for the protection of coral reefs, and other tropical coastal ecosystems, is to help our partners stabilise and regenerate natural resources which are of significant importance to global efforts to eradicate poverty.

HEALTH

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to take to (a) prevent and (b) deal with overspending by primary care groups in the new NHS. [45482]

Mr. Milburn: Primary Care Groups will be accountable to health authorities for the way in which they discharge their functions, including financial matters. Guidance on management arrangements and risk management plans for PCG budgets will be issued in the summer.

If a Primary Care Group overspends, the overspend will be managed within the funds made available to health authorities generally, and to the National Health Service more widely, much as health authority overspends are handled now.

Trauma Patients

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated for trauma in each health authority area for the last five years for which figures are available. [46511]

Mr. Boateng: The number of patients treated for post-traumatic stress disorder drawn from the Hospital Episode Statistics for 1995–96, the most recent year for which figures are available, is in the table. Information for earlier years is not available in an equivalent form. However, it is likely that the figures reported for post-traumatic stress disorder under-represent the number of people treated for the psychological after-effects of trauma since other people may be diagnosed as suffering from depression, anxiety or an adjustment disorder.

Mental Health

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the components of the NHS will make recommendations for the placement in mental nursing homes of people with learning difficulties or mental health problems under the new arrangements set out in the White Paper, The New NHS (Cm 3807). [46509]

Mr. Boateng: The White Paper The New NHS makes no change in this respect. Clinicians, working where appropriate with the relevant social work professionals, will make decisions about the appropriate placing of people with learning difficulties or mental health problems within the health and social care systems.

Nurses (Working Holiday Visas)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when officials from his Department last met Home Office officials to discuss working holiday visas for nurses. [46502]

Mr. Milburn: Officials from the Department periodically meet officials from the Home Office and other Government departments to discuss a range of issues concerning the employment of overseas nurses. The last meeting which involved Home Office officials was held on 31 October 1995. In addition, Departmental officials have regular contact with officials from the Overseas Labour Service who are responsible for advising the Home Office on the acceptability of work permit applications from employers to fill shortage posts with overseas nationals. The last meeting was held on 4 February 1998.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential contribution of overseas nurses working in the United Kingdom on working holiday visas to addressing shortages in nursing provision. [46505]

Mr. Milburn: It is not the purpose of the working holidaymaker scheme to address skill shortages in the United Kingdom. A mechanism already exists, through the work permit scheme, for non-European Economic Area nationals to be employed in cases of skills shortages. Information on the numbers of overseas nurses registering with the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting is published in the statistical analysis of the UKCC's professional register 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997, copies of which are available in the Library.

Testosterone

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the standards relating to the permissible levels of testosterone in (a) edible and (b) medicinal products in the UK; and what procedures apply in circumstances where products are banned. [46802]

Ms Jowell: The use of hormones as growth promoters in animal production has been banned in the European Union since 1988. Any confirmed residue of testosterone in food resulting from the use of a growth promoter is illegal.

There are no standards relating to permissible levels of testosterone in medicinal products for human use in the United Kingdom. Currently, there are 14 licensed human medicinal products (capsules, injections, implants and transdermal patches) which contain testosterone, one of several testosterone esters or methyltestosterone as the active ingredient at amounts of 20–250 milligrams. Recommended doses are based on information obtained from clinical trials. The products are indicated mainly for treatment of conditions in males where testosterone supplementation is required, and are obtainable only on prescription.

In cases where there are concerns relating to safety, quality or efficacy of any licensed medicinal product, the marketing authorisation (MA) may be withdrawn voluntarily by the MA holder. Alternatively, the licensing authority may take steps to revoke or suspend the MA. Procedural provisions relating to the grant, renewal, variation, revocation or suspension of UK MAs are contained in the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations etc.) Regulations 1994.

The sale, supply and importation of medicinal products, and of animal feeding stuffs incorporating such medicinal products, which are the subject of a prohibition order under Section 62 of the Medicines Act 1968 are illegal, and a criminal offence by virtue of Section 67(3) of this Act. The maximum penalty is 2 years' imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine on indictment to the Crown Court.

Food Safety (Cheese)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the use by his officials of powers granted under the Food Safety Act 1990 to ban the sale of cheese without court proceedings; and if he will make a statement. [47070]

Ms Jowell: The powers to which the right hon. Member refers are conferred on Ministers. On 20 May 1998, I signed an emergency control order under section 13 of the Food Safety Act 1990 prohibiting commercial operations in respect of cheese from a Somerset producer, because I was satisfied that such operations involved or may have involved imminent risk of injury to health. A 12 year old boy had become seriously ill after eating cheese contaminated with e-coli. The source was traced to the producer who was the subject of the order.

One business made representations and attended a meeting at the Department. I responded to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), who initiated a debate on the matter, and to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) who made representations in the course of the debate, 17 June 1998, Official Report, columns 338–46. We have also received a letter from the Specialist Cheesemakers' Association, and as at 24 June 1998, three letters from hon. Members and one from a member of the public.

Waiting Times

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will collate and publish on a regular quarterly basis information showing (a) the number of people awaiting an out-patient consultation at an NHS hospital and (b) the number of out-patient consultations that have taken place in NHS hospitals in the previous quarter. [47133]

Mr. Milburn: No. A considerable amount of data on outpatient appointments are already collected and published in a quarterly statistical bulletin.

Drugs Misuse (London)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the level of liaison which exists between the boroughs of London in co-ordinating an effective strategy to combat drugs misuse; and if he will make a statement. [47341]

Ms Jowell: The Greater London Association of Directors of Social Services have, since 1993, co-ordinated a subgroup—the Greater London Drug and Alcohol Purchasers Group—for all directors of social services in London to discuss substance misuse issues.

The Greater London Drug and Alcohol Purchasers Group meets regularly with the Inner London Purchasers of Substance Misuse Services, which represents health authorities. This forum, known as the London Drug and Alcohol Purchasers Group, aims to ensure consistency in approaches to the treatment and prevention of drug misuse. The aim of the group is to standardise policies on pricing, treatment programmes and quality standards. It meets regularly with the London Drug Services Consortium, which represents the interests of voluntary and private sector providers of drug services in the London area.

In addition, the London Drug Policy Forum encourages joint working between these groups, the police, the probation and prison services and all those working in the provision of services for drug misusers. For example, it organises regular meetings for chairs of London drug action teams, and has recently produced a guide for local authorities on their role in tackling drugs misuse "Drugs in the Community—what local authorities can do".

All these groups are currently reviewing how they can work together more effectively to achieve the objectives of our new anti-drug strategy "Tackling Drugs to Build a Better Britain".

Elderly People (Discrimination)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has evaluated on discrimination against the elderly within the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [47588]

Mr. Boateng: Although allegations of age discrimination in the National Health Service have been made from time to time over a number of years, there is a lack of reliable evidence based research on the subject.

At the end of last year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State commissioned HAS 2000 to examine the care which acute NHS hospitals provide for older people, including claims about age discrimination. HAS 2000 are due to report at the end of this month. The Department will be evaluating the report, which will be published. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those categories of people eligible to be provided with electric wheelchairs at public expense; and what plans he has to review this provision. [47590]

Mr. Boateng: The National Health Service provides powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs for severely disabled people, including children, who can benefit from them. Each health authority assesses local needs and determines local eligibility criteria within the broad national framework that the severely disabled person is unable to propel a manual wheelchair outdoors, is able to benefit from the chair through increased mobility leading to improved quality of life, and is able to handle the chair safely.

NHS provision of electronically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs was introduced in 1996, at the same time as a voucher scheme to enable wheelchair users to contribute towards a more expensive wheelchair of their choice. The NHS Executive will shortly begin an evaluation of the operation of both these initiatives and it aims to complete the study by the end of the 1998–99 financial year.

Correspondence

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the volume of correspondence sent to and received from hon. Members by the Secretary of State for Health in the periods (a) 1 January to 26 March 1994 and (b) 1 January to 26 March 1998. [47689]

Ms Jowell: The information is not available in the form requested. The total volume of correspondence replied to by Ministers from this Department for the period 1 January 1994 to 31 March 1994 was 2,505. The total volume of correspondence replied to by Ministers for the period 1 January 1998 to 26 March 1998 was 3,585. From the records kept, it is not possible to distinguish between those replies addressed to hon. Members and those addressed to other individuals or organisations, although the majority of the replies would have been to hon. Members.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a code of practice with respect to the use of data-matching techniques which require access to medical or other administrative records held by health bodies in relation to anti-fraud initiatives in the NHS. [47370]

Mr. Milburn: General guidance on the use of person-specific information held by National Health Service bodies was issued in 1996 and the general principles were reinforced in the report of the Caldicott Committee in 1997. These principles apply equally to the use of NHS records in connection with anti-fraud work in the NHS. We will shortly be reviewing this guidance in the light of the Data Protection Bill and will clarify the circumstances in which information held by NHS bodies may be shared with non-NHS agencies.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Audit Commission to commence data-matching exercises using their powers under the Audit Commission Bill 1998; and if such matching will involve records held by local authorities. [47371]

Mr. Boateng: The Audit Commission Act 1998 consolidates existing legislation and does not introduce new powers. Auditors appointed by the Audit Commission have used data-matching techniques in local authorities for four to five years. They have recently extended this to a number of National Health Service pilot sites. The Audit Commission has no current plans to extend this to cross matching local authority and NHS records.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS money is spent on parallel trading in drugs. [47809]

Mr. Milburn: Full information on expenditure on parallel traded medicines by the National Health Service is not available. However, within the Family Health Services sector in England and Wales, the Pharmacists' Discount Inquiry estimates that, in 1997–98, 4.63 per cent. of the net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacies was in relation to parallel imported products. Over each of the six years 1992–1997, the corresponding figures were between 4.09 per cent. and 4.80 per cent. For 1997–98, this equates with a figure of some £197 million expenditure on such products, providing an estimated saving to the NHS of around £19 million.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of drugs for use in the NHS are imported from overseas. [47810]

Mr. Milburn: Records are not kept of the origin of drugs in the National Health Service. However, in 1997, pharmaceutical products worth £3,192 million were imported into the United Kingdom, with exports of £5,484 million. This includes pharmaceuticals used outside the NHS. The latest available figures (financial year 1996–97) indicate an expenditure of £4,735 million on the drugs bill in England. This figure includes community prescribed and hospital medicines.

Microbiological Research Authority

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answers of 21 July 1997, Official Report, columns 409–10, and 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 180, if he will now send to the hon. Member for Salisbury a copy of the final submission made to him under the quinquennial review from the Microbiological Research Authority Board; and if he will make a statement about that quinquennial review. [47843]

Ms Jowell: I understand that a copy of the final submission from the Microbiological Research Authority to the team undertaking the quinquennial review of the Microbiological Research Authority was sent to the hon. Member on 5 November 1997 and that he acknowledged receipt on 11 November.

The findings of the first stage of the review are still the subject of discussions by Ministers. We will make a statement when these are completed.

Tattoo Removal

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the National Health Service of tattoo removal for each of the last four years. [47592]

Mr. Boateng: The information relating to this specific procedure is not collected centrally on a routine basis. Within the current standard coding classifications used by the National Health Service there is no unique code or combination of codes for treatments specifically related to tattoo removal. This procedure is classified along with other procedures to remove skin lesions e.g. iron pigmentation.

Maternity Services (North Essex)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reach a decision on the future of maternity services in North Essex. [47890]

Mr. Milburn: A decision will be made on the future of maternity services in North Essex when we have considered carefully all the evidence following the objection by the local community health councils to North Essex Health Authority's consultation document 'Taking the Initiative'.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will provide hon. Members with an information pack on the millennium compliance of computer systems similar to that supplied to hon. Members on the euro on 15 July by the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe. [47011]

Mrs. Roche: I will send a suitable information pack to each hon. Member in a few weeks' time.

Mr. White: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons the original year 2000 Millennium conformance standard set by BSI was deficient in respect of real time requirements. [46500]

Mrs. Roche: The so-called Millennium Conformance Standard is not a standard in the strict sense, but a Published Document prepared by the British Standards Institution setting out Year 2000 conformity requirements. I understand that, following representations from the telecommunications industry about its interpretation, this document is being reviewed within BSI.

Small Businesses

Mr. Baldry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's policy objectives for small businesses. [47428]

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the current (a) objectives and (b) targets of the Government's small firm policies. [47144]

Mrs. Roche: The overall aim which underpins the Government's small firms policy is to enhance the competitiveness of small businesses by maintaining a supportive economic and business environment, and delivering high quality business support services.

More detailed policy objectives are currently being refined through a process of consultation, which includes listening to the views of representatives of small business. Our work is also being informed by the recent report of the Trade and Industry Select Committee on Small and Medium Sized Enterprises, and the small firms debate which was held in the House of Commons on 19 June 1998, Official Report, columns 606–76.

The Government's policies for small businesses will be set out in the Competitiveness White Paper to be published in the Autumn.

Newspaper Pricing

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legal advice she has taken concerning the relevance of the special circumstances found to have held in the European Court Case C-333/94 P Tetra Pak v. Commission to pricing strategies in the UK's daily broadsheet market. [42612]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 May 1998]: The Competition Bill sets the framework which prohibits anti-competitive behaviour and the abuse of dominance. Decisions in specific cases are matters for the independent regulator. It is not, therefore, for me to comment on how the principles of EC jurisprudence would apply in individual circumstances.

Insolvency Proceedings

Mr. Cranston: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she intends to take to revive the European Union convention on insolvency proceedings; and if she will make a statement. [47113]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The European Convention on Insolvency Proceedings was opened for signature between 23 November 1995 and 23 May 1996. The United Kingdom did not sign the Convention during that time. There are no proposals currently for the Convention to be revived.

Eastern Natural Gas

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received about the methods used by Eastern Natural Gas in acquiring new customers. [46587]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 22 June 1998]: My Department has received a number of representations regarding marketing methods used by gas suppliers, including some relating to Eastern Natural Gas. The Government believe that consumers who are sold gas contracts on the doorstep should have proper protection. I raised my concerns with the Director General of Gas Supply last year, and this led to Ofgas introducing, on 26 January, a new suppliers' licence condition to bring such activities under tighter control.

Among other things, the new condition includes rules on the proper selection and training of sales staff who are in direct contact with domestic customers, auditing of sales activities, schemes for paying compensation, and a ban on gas suppliers using agents who ask for payment in advance of arranging a supply of gas.

This initiative should help to further enhance consumer protection with regard to doorstep selling. I am, however, keeping the situation, including the need for further action, under review.

Employment Rights Act

Mr. Wills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the (a) total and (b) average amount of ex gratia payments her Department made in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997 under the Employment Rights Act 1996. [47072]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In the period between 22 August 1996, when the Employments Rights Act 1996 became effective, and the end of the 1996/97 financial year (a) the total paid under ex gratia arrangements in relation to claims under the Employments Rights Act 1996 was £13,160; (b) the average in that period was £1,880 per case (£1,196 per single payment).

In the 1997/98 financial year (a) the total paid under ex gratia arrangements in relation to claims under the Employments Rights Act 1996 was £24,666; (b) the average in that period was £2,242 per case (£1,542 per single payment).

Mr. Wills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the largest single ex gratia payment her Department made in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997 under the Employment Rights Act 1996. [47073]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The largest single ex gratia payment made in relation to claims under the Employment Rights Act 1996 in (a) 1996 was £3,210, and in (b) 1997 was £6,777.

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to assist manufacturers to increase the volume of British goods exported to foreign countries. [46600]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 23 June 1998]: The full range of Overseas Trade Services is available to help UK companies sell goods and services overseas.

Following the Export Forum's report last November, these are being improved and extended. A National Exporters Database will be introduced on 1 July and a new Export Sales Leads Service on 1 September. A new simpler system of Support for Exhibitions and Seminars abroad will apply to events opening after 1 April 1999.

New programmes of activity in some of the target markets identified by the Export Forum have already been announced, including the Export Explorer for Western Europe. New programmes in the remaining target markets will be launched throughout the year.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to promote private investment in British manufacturing industry. [46599]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 June 1998]: The Government are striving to promote high levels of investment in British industry, including manufacturing, through achieving economic stability, and creating a tax system that rewards enterprise. The Chancellor also recently announced three new venture capital funds totalling £240 million to support small and medium businesses, and this Department is working in partnership with business to raise the competitiveness of our firms, including looking at what else can be done to promote investment.

Dounreay

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations she held with (a) environment pressure groups, (b) local authority interest groups, (c) academic experts and (d) the Socialist Environment and Resources Association prior to her decision on the phased closure of Dounreay. [45774]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 17 June 1998]: My Department regularly receives and welcomes views from interested groups and individuals on a range of issues. In addition, I recently addressed the Socialist Environment and Resources Association. Nothing is more important than safety in all operations on nuclear licensed sites. Within this overriding requirement, the particular decision to accept no new commercial reprocessing at Dounreay was taken on economic grounds after considering the recommendation from the UKAEA.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the Irish Development Agency on the number of pharmaceutical companies leaving the United Kingdom to locate in the Republic of Ireland. [47817]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The factors which cause a company to leave a particular market are often complex and go beyond simply the efforts or effect of an investment body in another market.

I am unaware of any significant number of pharmaceutical companies leaving the UK to locate in the Republic of Ireland, although there have been instances of companies locating new investment projects or switching certain production there. This is a matter for their commercial judgment. However, the UK remains at the forefront of the pharmaceutical industry having the world's fifth largest industry by sales. But we are not complacent: both my Department and the Department of Health are working with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry to ensure that we retain our prominent position.

Biotechnology

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance her Department has given to the expansion of biotech companies in the last year. [47816]

Mr. Battle: My Department is committed to getting the climate right for the development of the UK's biotechnology sector. We support technology transfer through, for example, LINK, EUREKA, and SMART, and specific Biotechnology Challenges, to encourage the start-up and growth of new companies.

This assistance is complemented by support for the sector by other Government Departments and by the Research Councils.

Car Prices

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the latest figures for average retail prices for new cars sold in the (a) UK and (b) other European Union countries. [47411]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The European Commission produces a six-monthly report on car prices across the European Union, comparing the prices in each Member State of the best-selling models. I have placed a copy of the latest report in the Library of the House. The Commission's figures can also be found on the Internet at http://europa.eu.int/en/comm/dg04/aid/en/car.htm.

Lord Archer

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies were made of the DTI inspectors' report into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing; and if she will list the holders and locations of these copies. [47603]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The inspectors appointed to investigate dealings in the shares of Anglia Television Group Plc delivered 20 copies of the report to the Secretary of State in July 1994. No further copies have been made in the Department. All 20 copies are still held within the Department, other than copies disclosed to the Stock Exchange and the Securities and Futures Authority.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many persons were interviewed by her Department's inspectors in connection with the investigation into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-Super-Mare in respect of share dealing. [47703]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The inspectors conducted formal interviews with 22 witnesses in the course of their investigation in 1994 into dealings in the shares of Anglia Television Group Plc. Not all these interviews related to Lord Archer of Weston-Super-Mare.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the DTI inspectors' report into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing. [47602]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Reports of insider dealing inspections are not published. There are strict legal restraints on disclosure of information obtained in such inspections.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many hours were spent by her inspectors in the investigation into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-Super-Mare in respect of share dealing. [47867]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The information is not held in this form. As mentioned in an earlier answer, two independent inspectors were appointed under S.177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 to investigate dealings in the securities of Anglia Television Group Plc between 10 January and 21 January 1994. Their fees and disbursements amounted to about £215,000 (including VAT).

The investigation dealt with a wider range of matters than Lord Archer's dealing and accordingly the amount related thereto is not separately calculable.

European Working Hours Directive

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the European Working Hours Directive on retirement home managers who are required to be on call for 24 hours per day. [47453]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The consultation document on proposals to implement the EC Working Time Directive, issued in April 1998, contained an appraisal of the costs and benefits of these measures for workers and employers. A copy of this document is available in the Library of the House. No appraisal has been undertaken by my Department of the specific impact on retirement home managers.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. Rammell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for 1997. [45365]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The 24th Annual Report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997. Copies of the Report have been laid before Parliament.

Post Office

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action (a) the Government and (b) the Post Office will have to take to comply with the proposed EU Postal Directive. [47548]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The Government must transpose the Directive into UK law by February 1999. We shall need to modify the monopoly and introduce some other amendments. We expect to do this through secondary legislation, using the European Communities Act 1972. The final proposals will be announced later this year.

The Post Office is fully committed to complying with the Directive and is discussing with officials at the Department the precise arrangements which will be necessary.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many proposals for foreign acquisition and joint ventures by the Post Office since May 1997 (a) have been turned down and (b) are awaiting an answer from her Department. [47518]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: None.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to include accommodation and meals in calculation of employees' earnings for the purpose of the minimum wage. [47526]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: We have accepted the Low Pay Commission's recommendation that, with the exception of accommodation, benefits should be excluded from the calculation of employees' earnings for the purpose of the national minimum wage.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the impact on employment of the proposed minimum wage, assuming (a) half restoration of differentials, (b) three-quarters restoration of differentials and (c) full restoration of differentials. [47562]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The Government share the Low Pay Commission's view that a national minimum wage set at the level proposed should not lead to a significant impact on employment, and any pressure to restore pay differentials will be limited and localised.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the definition of a trainee for the purposes of exemption from the minimum wage. [47521]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: All those on formal apprenticeships will be exempt from the national minimum wage. The criteria for defining who is affected will be set out in the Regulations implementing the National Minimum Wage Bill.

Coal Mining

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the change in employment in coal mining which would result from licensing an additional 1,000 MW of gas-fired electricity generating capacity. [47525]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: An additional 1,000 MW of gas-fired electricity generating capacity could displace approximately 2.5 million tonnes of coal a year. The precise impact would depend on the extent to which both the new gas station and existing coal stations operated which, in turn, would be affected by the relative prices of coal and gas. The impact on employment in coal mining in the UK would depend on where generators whose electricity was displaced would have bought their coal.

Research Councils

Mr. Sawford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what systems are in use to evaluate the quality of research material produced using funding from the research councils. [46838]

Mr. Battle: The Research Councils operate a range of systems to evaluate the quality of research that they fund, commensurate with the aims of the research and level of funding.

At the individual project grant level, the Research Councils operate a system of peer review and grading of final scientific reports. In addition, project grants which result in publication in a scientific journal are automatically peer reviewed by the wider scientific community.

At the programme level (groups of projects in a related area), projects are additionally reviewed together and the added value of the combined research assessed by peer review.

Export Licences

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences were granted to British exporters in the twelve month periods (a) before 2 May 1997 and (b) after 2 May 1997. [47567]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 25 June 1998]: Statistics on decisions on export licences issued and refused for the second half of 1996 were placed in the Library of the House on 25 March 1998. Such statistics for the period 1 January to 1 May 1997 will be placed in the Library of the House soon. The Government are committed to report annually on the state of strategic export controls and their application since 2 May 1997, and I refer to the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 12 May 1998, Official Report, column 110.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the effect of the EU Code on Arms Exports on her Department's issue of export licences to British companies. [47568]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 25 June 1998]: Licences to export arms and other goods where export is controlled for strategic reasons are issued by the President of the Board of Trade, and the Export Control Organisation of the Department of Trade & Industry is the licensing authority. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by the DTI to other Government Departments with an interest, as determined by them in line with their policy responsibilities. These include the Foreign & Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence, and the Department for International Development. The EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports was formally adopted by the General Affairs Council on 8 June. Its provisions will be taken into account in export licensing decisions, as well as the export licence assessment criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. Under the Code, each Member State will circulate in confidence an annual report on its defence exports and on its implementation of the Code. Member States will discuss these reports and review the Code's operation.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the potential impact on United Kingdom public funds of British Nuclear Fuels' proposed joint purchase with the Morris Knudsen Engineering Company of the nuclear operations of Westinghouse Inc. [47881]

Mr. Battle: The Government and British Nuclear Fuels Plc. are agreed that the costs of the acquisition of Westinghouse will be met within BNFL's External Financing Limit and without affecting the Government's public expenditure targets.

De la Rue, Gateshead

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of grants of selective assistance and other regional incentives awarded to De la Rue Gateshead in the last four years; and if the terms of the grants for machinery allow for the transfer of equipment outside the United Kingdom. [47734]

Mrs. Roche: The company received an offer of Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) of £900,000 in May 1996 towards capital investment at its Gateshead premises. The Department has made no other offers of assistance for this site in the past four years.

The RSA offer provides for the recovery of grant should the company cease to use any of the assisted machinery at Gateshead.

Midland Bluebird Bus Company

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when a decision will be announced on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's ruling on First Choice having to sell Midland Bluebird bus company. [47549]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the acquisition by FirstBus Plc. of SB Holdings Ltd. was published on 21 January 1997. In line with the MMC's recommendations and the Director General of Fair Trading's advice, the then Minister for Corporate and Consumer Affairs, the hon. Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor), announced that FirstBus should be required to divest its subsidiary Midland Bluebird plus part of the Glasgow operations of SB Holdings.

FirstBus subsequently requested a review of the decision on the grounds that there had been important new developments in the Glasgow bus market since the MMC's report was published. I asked the DGFT for his advice, which he has given.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will announce her decision on FirstBus's request as quickly as is practicable.

Volvo Bus, Irvine

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what grants were given to Volvo Bus Corporation at the time of its relocation to Irvine; what assistance was received from the New Towns Commission; and if she will make a statement on its proposed relocation to Poland. [47737]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

Volvo's operations at Irvine commenced in 1974 when the company acquired the facility from Ailsa Trucks Limited. No records are available on the financial assistance, if any, offered to Volvo at that time.

We are obviously disappointed that the company's restructuring of its European industrial operations is likely to lead to job losses at Irvine in the medium term. However, inward investors are subject to exactly the same pressures as indigenous companies in today's global economy and occasional setbacks are unfortunately inevitable as competition intensifies and markets evolve.

It is important to stress that Volvo will remain an important contributor to the Ayrshire economy and my officials are in close contact with the company to discuss how the impact of the restructuring plans on the Irvine plant can be minimised.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Housing Association Audits

39. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what discussions he has had with the Comptroller and Auditor General concerning the audit of housing associations. [46355]

Mr. Sheldon: I meet regularly with the Comptroller and Auditor General to discuss a wide range of issues affecting the work of the National Audit Office. The Comptroller and Auditor General does not have the power to provide systematic assurance to Parliament that some £1.2 billion of public money spent annually by the social housing sector has been spent with due regard for issues of regularity, propriety, and value for money.

The fact that the National Audit Office has no rights of access to the records of housing associations represents a serious gap in accountability for public funds. One straightforward solution would be to require the Comptroller and Auditor General's access to be a condition of all grants to voluntary housing bodies.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list the public registers which the Commissioners have responsibility for. [47361]

Mr. Stuart Bell: None.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

2006 World Cup

12. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the prospects for England hosting the 2006 world cup finals. [46324]

Mr. Banks: I believe that the FA's bid to stage the 2006 World Cup is an excellent one and stands a very good chance of success.

National Lottery (Community Projects)

13. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to meet community groups to discuss national lottery funding for local community projects; and if he will make a statement. [46325]

Mr. Chris Smith: I and my fellow Ministers have regular contact with community groups. The National Lottery Bill, which will soon be an Act, will help to ensure that more Lottery money goes to small scale projects in local communities.

English Tourist Board

14. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will change the level of Government funding for the English tourist board to bring it in line with the average per capita allocations provided to (a) Scottish, (b) Welsh and (c) Northern Ireland tourist boards. [46326]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Comprehensive Spending Review means that we are looking critically at how to make the best possible use of public money, by the Department and by its sponsored bodies. No final decisions about future funding have yet been made.

Film Industry

16. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made on promoting film production at a European level. [46328]

Mr. Tom Clarke: During the UK Presidency of the European Union, the Government successfully hosted a major European Audiovisual Conference whose recommendations for promoting the European film industry are now being taken forward by the Commission and the Council. My department also promotes European film production through co-production agreements and through the £2 million European Co-production Fund.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has to promote the British film industry. [46327]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to "A Bigger Picture", the report of the Film Policy Review Committee issued on 25 March, which sets out a comprehensive action plan for an industry-Government partnership to promote the British film industry.

Tourism

17. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from the tourism and hospitality industry on the Government's policies towards the industry. [46329]

Mr. Chris Smith: I receive a wide range of representations from the tourism industry. Many of them come from members of the Tourism Forum and its working groups, with whom we are developing a strategy to maximise the benefits to the nation which tourism can bring.

NESTA

18. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the ways in which National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts will help young inventors. [46330]

Mr. Chris Smith: The means by which NESTA is to achieve its objects are set out in the National Lottery Bill currently before Parliament. NESTA will help talented people in the fields of science, technology and the arts achieve their full potential; it will help people turn inventions and ideas into products or services which can be exploited in the market place, and NESTA will contribute to public knowledge of science, technology and the arts. Programmes under all these headings could help young inventors but it will be for NESTA's Chair and Trustees to decide which particular programmes to run.

Creative Arts (Liverpool)

19. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to support the creative arts in Liverpool. [46331]

Mr. Chris Smith: Central Government funding for the arts is channelled through the Arts Council and the Regional Arts Boards. Liverpool received 27 per cent. of North West Arts funds for 1997/98, some £2.5 million. Organisations based in Liverpool also received around £1.5 million directly from the Arts Council for this period. The city has received £16.2 million in Lottery awards to the arts to date.

EU Audiovisual Conference

20. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent EU audiovisual conference in Birmingham. [46332]

Mr. Chris Smith: This conference was my Department's major EU Presidency initiative. It has been widely welcomed by the various sectors of the European audiovisual industry. A number of constructive and innovative ideas were identified in areas ranging from future employment, copyright and regulatory regimes, to European support for the audiovisual industries. These should help position the industry to take advantage of the opportunities opening up with the development of digital technology, and inform future thinking in Member States and the European Commission. Copies of the final conference report, when available, will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

New Opportunities Fund

21. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the board of the New Opportunities Fund will begin work. [46333]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to announce some appointments, including Chair, to the Board of the New Opportunities Fund when the National Lottery Bill receives Royal Assent on 2 July. I expect the Board to start work soon after.

National Lottery (Unclaimed Prizes)

22. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the total sum of unclaimed prizes in the national lottery; and what is the largest individual sum. [46334]

Mr. Banks: To date, just over £223 million in prize money has been unclaimed. The largest single unclaimed prize was just over £2 million. After 180 days prizes still unclaimed are paid to the good causes.

Independent Television Franchises

23. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to change the basis for determining the amounts paid for independent television franchises. [46335]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government have no plans to change the current arrangements for Exchequer payments made by Channel 3 and Channel 5 licensees under the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Channel 4

24. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning Channel 4; and if he will make a statement. [46336]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received no such representations. Channel Four is a central element in the Government's vision for the broadcasting industry in the digital future. We expect it to continue to play a vital role in providing distinctive and innovative public service programming of high quality.

Museum Admission Charges

25. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on admission charges to national museums. [46337]

Mr. Chris Smith: The March Budget settlement included £2 million to maintain free admission at the currently non-charging national museums and galleries. At the same time, the Heritage Lottery Fund announced a £7 million Access Fund, available to all museums and galleries for new access initiatives. I will make a further announcement next month.

Creative Industries

26. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the conclusions of the mapping exercise on the creative industries. [46338]

Mr. Tom Clarke: We are currently finalising the mapping exercise and will publish it as soon as possible.

Digital Terrestrial Television

27. Mrs Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the introduction of digital terrestrial television. [46339]

Mr. Chris Smith: I look forward to the successful launch of digital terrestrial services alongside digital services on cable and satellite later this year. Digital television will increase consumer choice and deliver the benefits of the information age to our living rooms.

Football Merchandise

28. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations the football task force has received on the prices of football merchandise. [46340]

Mr. Banks: The Football Task Force has received a number of representations on the cost of football merchandise. The remit of the Task Force specifically includes the investigation of marketing policies in football. The Task Force will be taking further representations from interested parties and is due to publish its report on all the commercial aspects of the game by the end of the year.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his proposals for the reduction of television licence fees for pensioners. [47560]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The Government's current Agreement with the BBC provides for a review of the arrangements for funding the Corporation after March 2002. We shall conduct that review in good time to allow decisions to be taken before then. The review will include a detailed consideration of the question of concessions, both for pensioners and others.

Ancient Monuments Laboratory

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many representations English Heritage has received (a) in favour of and (b) against its proposal to move its Ancient Monuments Laboratory to Fort Cumberland, Portsmouth; [47396]

(2) what estimate has been made by English Heritage of the cost of providing Library and other facilities in order to establish a centre of excellence if it relocates its Ancient Monuments Laboratory to Fort Cumberland, Portsmouth; [47400]

(3) how many people visited English Heritage's (a) Ancient Monuments Laboratory in London and (b) Central Archaeological Service in Portsmouth in the most recent year for which figures are available; [47398]

(4) what effect the proposed relocation of English Heritage's Ancient Monuments Laboratory will have on the amount of money in English Heritage's archaeology grants budget available for distribution in 1998–99 and 1999–2000; [47397]

(5) what information has been collected by English Heritage about the proportion of the professional staff in its Ancient Monuments Laboratory who would (a) be happy to relocate and (b) seek alternative employment in the event that the laboratory is relocated to each of the alternative locations considered in recent months; [47401]

(6) if English Heritage intends to consult the people and organisations which use the services of its Ancient Monuments Laboratory about its proposal to move the laboratory to Fort Cumberland, Portsmouth; [47395]

(7) which places were considered by English Heritage as possible future locations for its Ancient Monuments Laboratory; and in respect of each of these places what is the estimated (a) capital value plus conversion cost of the premises, (b) cost of relocating staff, (c) cost of capital equipment for the new laboratory, (d) annual running cost of the new laboratory and (e) annual cost of and time used for official travel by the laboratory's staff. [47399]

Mr. Banks: These detailed questions about the relocation of English Heritage's Ancient Monuments Laboratory relate to internal management proposals under consideration by English Heritage's Commissioners about the most efficient and effective deployment of resources to fulfil its archaeological responsibilities. These questions are therefore more appropriately answered by English Heritage itself, and I have asked its Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend. I will ensure that copies are placed in the Libraries of the House. Should English Heritage wish to pursue relocation, my Department would of course consider its business plan.

HMS Cavalier

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Heritage Lottery Fund regarding the future of HMS Cavalier. [47112]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Minister for Arts and I have not had any discussions with the Heritage Lottery Fund about the future of HMS Cavalier. However, we are aware of her status as the last surviving Second World War destroyer and of the case for her preservation. These issues were considered in detail during the recent Culture, Media and Sport Committee inquiry into the future of the ship. In this regard, we were pleased to hear of the National Heritage Memorial Fund award to Medway Council, in association with Chatham Historic Dockyard Trust, of £37,575 for a feasibility study of the case for preservation and relocation.

National Swim Week

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what initiatives the Government took to promote National Swim Week on 17 to 31 May. [47218]

Mr. Banks: Swimming has my full support, as it is one our healthiest recreational pursuits. I was therefore pleased to see the National Swim Week introduced throughout the country, as it gave youngsters an excellent opportunity to participate in the sport and helped to raise important funds for Cancer Relief.

Rugby League World Cup

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he has taken to host the Rugby League World Cup in the United Kingdom. [47605]

Mr. Banks: The Government are committed to work to bring major international sporting events to Britain and, through the English and UK Sports Councils, we fully support the efforts being taken by the Rugby Football League to stage the Rugby League World Cup at the earliest possible date. I understand that the RFL is due to present a draft eight-year programme of international competition, which includes a proposed four-year World Cup cycle, to the next meeting of the Rugby Football League's International Board later this year.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on progress in the upgrading of Wembley Stadium; and if he will name the alternative national stadium to be used during upgrading work at Wembley. [47606]

Mr. Banks: It is still early days, but I am very pleased with the progress to date, and in particular the way the English Sports Council, the Football Association and the English National Stadium Trust are working productively together in developing a new stadium of which the nation can be proud. The aim is for the current stadium to be demolished after the 1999 FA Cup Final, and for the new stadium to be completed by 2002. Decisions on alternative venues for events during construction of the new stadium are entirely matters for the governing bodies concerned.

National Lottery (Wales)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of projects allocated Heritage Lottery funding within Wales to date were unable to raise matching funding; and what is the total amount of resulting unclaimed funds. [47393]

Mr. Banks: The Heritage Lottery Fund is not aware of any projects in Wales which have been awarded grants but for which the required partnership funding has not been raised. There are therefore no resulting unclaimed funds.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of the Lottery funds allocated for Heritage projects has been spent in (a) Wales and (b) North Wales. [47392]

Mr. Banks: To date, the Heritage Lottery Fund has awarded £1.01 billion to 1,862 projects. Of this, Wales has received £23.27 million (2.3 per cent.) and North Wales has received £8.74 million (0.1 per cent.). Information on National Lottery awards is now available on the Departments website. www.lottery, culture.gov.uk.

WALES

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the pilot schemes announced since 1 May 1997 by his Department that involve local authorities in a lead or partnership capacity; if he will list each of the local authorities involved in each case; and what revenue and capital funding each local authority will receive through the pilot in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000 and (iv) 2000–01. [46053]

Mr. Win Griffiths [holding answer 15 June 1998]: The following are amongst the larger pilot schemes for which the Welsh Office is responsible.

Best Value

On 4 December 1997, I announced that 21 authorities, one police authority, and one combined authority had been chosen to test the best value framework in Wales in advance of the introduction of the Government's best value policy. No additional funding is being provided. These authorities were:

Blaenau Gwent County Borough Council
Bridgend County Borough Council
Caerphilly County Borough Council
City and County of Cardiff
Carmarthenshire County Council
Ceredigion County Council
Conwy County Borough Council
Denbighshire County Council
Flintshire County Council
Gwynedd Council
Isle of Anglesey County Council
Merthyr Tydfil County Borough Council
Monmouthshire County Council
Neath Port Talbot County Borough Council
Newport County Borough Council
Pembrokeshire County Council
Powys County Council
City and County of Swansea
Torfaen County Borough Council
The Vale of Glamorgan Council
Wrexham County Borough Council
Mid and West Wales Fire Authority
South Wales Police Authority

Social Exclusion

I announced on 1 May this year a Social Exclusion Programme for Wales which will feature up to 10 pilot projects consisting of small communities within different local authority areas. The participating authorities have not yet been chosen. £750,000 is available in 1998–99 for a mix of revenue and capital expenditure.

PFI Pathfinders

In June 1997, we announced support for 6 "pathfinder" PFI projects proposed by local authorities in Wales. The authorities were:

Blaenau Gwent County Borough Council
Ceredigion County Council
Denbighshire County Council
Newport County Borough Council
Pembrokeshire County Council
Wrexham County Borough Council

The project at Blaenau Gwent was subsequently withdrawn. Each authority has been offered assistance of up to £75,000 during 1997–98 and 1998–99 to help meet the costs of engaging professional advice to help bring these projects forward.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in Wales in each year from 1990 to 1997; what was the total number of maternities in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (i) in-vitro fertilisation, (ii) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (iii) other forms of assisted conception. [46928]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The available information on multiple maternities to Welsh residents recorded by the Office for National Statistics is as follows:

| | Twins | Triplets | Quadruplets | Quintuplets | Sextuplets | All maternities |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1990 | 397 | 11 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 38,264 |
| 1991 | 416 | 6 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 37,824 |
| 1992 | 423 | 8 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 37,237 |
| 1993 | 399 | 8 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 36,375 |
| 1994 | 431 | 11 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 35,122 |
| 1995 | 417 | 14 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 34,204 |
| 1996 | 436 | 12 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 34,603 |
| 1997 | 484 | 14 | 3 | 0 | 0 | 34,159 |

The only information on assisted conceptions leading to multiple births available from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority relates to those treated at licensed clinics in Wales rather than Welsh residents treated. The latest verified data, covering treatments in the period from 1 August 1991 (the start of the HFEA register) to 31 March 1996, record 42 multiple births.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47014]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Office supports the mainstreaming initiative recently launched by the Ministers for Women, which will address the gender perspective in policy making. The Government of Wales Bill gives the National Assembly for Wales a duty to take the principle of equality of opportunity for all into account in exercising its functions and to report annually on how it has done so.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47058]

Mr. Ron Davies: On 1 May this year, I announced a Social Exclusion Programme for Wales which will feature at least six, and up to ten, "demonstration projects" across Wales consisting of small communities within different local authority areas. The actual communities have not yet been selected. The total funding available for 1998–99 for this Programme is £750,000, which can be used for revenue or capital expenditure.

On 7 November 1997, I announced the creation of three NHS locality commissioning pilot schemes in the Blaenau Gwent, Taff Ely and Teifi Valley areas. The purpose of the initiative is to explore and evaluate alternative models of locality commissioning of health services; to identify robust and viable mechanisms for a primary-care-focused commissioning function; and to increase the degree to which groups of GPs and other primary care professionals, working with local government and others, are involved in commissioning health services for their patients. The lessons may inform the process of implementing the NHS Wales White Paper "Putting Patients First".

In July 1997, an additional £250,000 was provided for the continuation of the Welsh Office £3 million dental initiative, first launched in 1995, which has enabled Health Authorities to offer unprecedented levels of grant (up to £50,000 in some areas) to attract new dentists into those parts of Wales where they are most needed and for the expansion of the Community Dental Service.

Optec DD Factory

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for finding a new tenant for the previous Optec DD factory in Drury, near Buckley, Flintshire. [47417]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to him on 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 172, and 20 May 1998, Official Report, column 417.

I understand that the owner of the premises has instructed agents to market the property with a view to finding a new occupier. The property has also been entered onto the Welsh Development Agency's North Wales property database and, if appropriate, is being put forward for any projects by potential inward investors or indigenous companies.

Child Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list those (a) individuals and (b) organisations who have made representations to him on child care; and if he will make a statement; [47421]

(2) when he proposes to announce his new proposals for child care; and if he will make a statement. [47420]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I launched our Green Paper, "The National Childcare Strategy for Wales", on Monday 22 June.

Since I announced the Strategy last November, we have received representations on child care, either directly or through hon. Members from: (a) several individuals; (b) the following organisations: Chwarae Teg; Confederation of British Industry; Clybiau Plant Cymru; Kids' Clubs Network; Equal Opportunities Commission; Daycare Trust; Wales Pre-school Playgroups Association; Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin; Professional Association of Nursery Nurses; Vale of Clwyd Labour Party; Highway Methodist Playgroup; The Nursery, Nelson; and from my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Ms Morgan).

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the funding allocated to Wales for the Welsh child care strategy will be divided up; and who will be responsible for allocating the money to the different sectors. [47844]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The consultation document on the National Childcare Strategy for Wales (Cmnd 3974), which I launched on 22 June, set out in full our proposals, which include funding of over £2.5 million in 1998–99. This will support a range of immediate priorities and will assist in the establishment of child care partnerships in each local authority in Wales. Work is now under way by the Welsh Office to determine the specific allocations for local authorities and other agencies within the broad framework set out in the Strategy, and I hope to make a further announcement as soon as possible.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's role in (a) the setting of the level of the minimum wage and (b) its administration; and if he will make a statement. [47418]

Mr. Hain: The Government have accepted the Low Pay Commission's recommendations on the national minimum wage and the minimum wage will be implemented in April 1999. The Department will continue to play a full part in the decisions surrounding the national minimum wage and its administration.

Putting in place the national minimum wage is a key manifesto commitment, which, along with other measures such as the Working Families Tax Credit, and the tax benefits reform, forms part of the Government's strategy to promote work incentives and to "make work pay". It will remove the worst cases of exploitation in the workplace, which have no place in modern Britain/Wales.

River Dee Bridge

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the impact of the opening of the new River Dee bridge upon the Garden City, Queensferry, Shotton and Connah's Quay communities with specific reference to (a) the percentage decrease in traffic, (b) pedestrian safety and (c) levels of pollution; and if he will make a statement. [47423]

Mr. Hain: These are matters for Flintshire County Council who are responsible for this scheme.

Development Assistance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the restoration of full development area status to North East Wales; and if he will make a statement. [47906]

Mr. Hain: The European Commission has recently published new guidelines affecting the designation of Assisted Areas. The Commission has asked all Member States to submit, for their approval, new maps of Assisted Areas to take effect by 1 January 2000. A Review of the current Assisted Areas map will be announced shortly. The public will be consulted.

Higher Education

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of those aged (a) under 21, (b) 21 to 24 and (c) over 25 years and over, registered in Wales, applied through UCAS for admission to a course of higher education for the (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996, (iv) 1997 and (v) 1998 entry cycles; what were the numbers of the population in Wales aged (a) to (c) for (i) to (v); and what was the proportion of those applying as a percentage of the appropriate population cohort. [47265]

Mr. Hain: The information is given in the following tables.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Exhibitions

30. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to transport the millennium exhibitions throughout the United Kingdom. [46343]

Mr. Mandelson: It is too early for final decisions to be made about the future of individual exhibits beyond the year 2000, but there will be a substantial and diverse legacy from the Millennium Experience, and we hope that it might be possible for elements of the exhibits to be displayed elsewhere after 2000.

Millennium Dome

32. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of the millennium dome. [46347]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has worked to ensure that environmental concerns properly inform the decision making process for both the construction and the operation of the Millennium Experience at Greenwich, while recognising the time and financial constraints under which the project operates. Amongst other things, the Company's environmental plan, which is being developed in consultation with the London Borough of Greenwich, is issued to all tenderers and trade contractors.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many jobs he estimates will be created in the course of constructing the Dome at Greenwich. [46341]

Mr. Mandelson: The Dome is expected to create over 2,000 jobs during construction, on and off the site. A further 5,000 people will be employed in running the Millennium Experience during the Year 2000.

Millennium Experience

33. Mr. Randall: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how much public money he estimates will be spent on the millennium experience between now and the staging of the event. [46349]

Mr. Mandelson: The Millennium Experience is not being funded through taxation. The cost is being met roughly half by a National Lottery grant of £399m from the Millennium Commission, and the other half by private sector sponsorship and other commercial income including visitor revenue. To date, £104.5m of the £399m grant has been spent.

34. Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what assessment he has made of the economic impact of the millennium experience on the local economy. [46350]

Mr. Mandelson: An economic impact assessment was carried out as part of the planning application process for the Dome in October 1996. This study estimated that 10,000 jobs would be created as a result of the Millennium Experience, 2,000 on construction, 5,000 during the operation and a further 3,000 as a result of the effects on supplier companies and the effects of spending by an increased level of visitors in the area.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Funds

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) organisations and (b) projects which received funding under budget lines A-3024 and A-3104 for 1997. [46071]

Mr. Doug Henderson: EU budget lines A-3024 and A-3104 did not exist in 1997—the activities funded under these lines in 1998 came under budget line A-3030 last year. Details of individual grants made under A-3030 are contained in the Commission's "Report on Beneficiaries of Community Grants 1997", a copy of which I will place in the Libraries of the House.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish Government on the imprisonment of members of the Turkish National Assembly. [46516]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Our Embassy in Ankara has on several occasions raised the issue of the imprisonment of former Democracy Party members of the Grant National Assembly in its contacts with the Turkish government, and will continue to do so.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the (a) number, (b) grades, (c) originating department and (d) current roles of all civil servants assisting the Legg Inquiry. [47229]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Secretariat comprises six staff: a grade 6 officer from the Home Office (the Secretary); a grade 7 officer from the Lord Chancellor's Department (the Deputy Secretary); an executive officer; an administrative officer; and two personal secretaries, all from the Home Office.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the recent resolution from the Organisation of African Unity relating to Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement. [47574]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The authority of United Nations Security Council resolutions must be upheld. With the Governments of France and the United States, we have expressed concern to member states of the OAU at the recent resolution, and have called on them to fulfil their obligations under the United Nations Charter.

European Policy

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the strategy meetings which have taken place at Downing Street since 11 May to discuss policy towards the European Union to which he or Ministers in his Department were invited; [47555]

(2) if it is the practice for him to attend discussions of European policy at Downing Street. [47554]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Export Licences

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Ministerial directions he has issued relating to the issue of export licences for the sale of British manufactured goods to Argentina since 2 May 1997. [47569]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 25 June 1998]: There have been no such ministerial directions since 2 May 1997. We continue to consider export licence applications for Argentina in line with the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, and the Government's announcement of 3 April 1982, Official Report, column 638, which was reported by Mr. John Biffen, the then Secretary of State for Trade, on 5 April 1982, Official Report, columns 688–90.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) additions and (b) withdrawals since 2 May 1997 to the list of countries to which his Department will not grant an export licence for the sale of British defence equipment. [47828]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A summary of Government commitments regarding the application of strategic export controls, which includes all arms embargoes observed by the UK, has been laid in the Library. As noted in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. King) on 28 January 1998, Official Report, columns 273–74, an updated version of the summary will be laid in the Library annually (or more frequently if policy changes require a revision).

Licence applications for the export of conventional arms to all countries are considered on a case by case basis against the arms export criteria announced by right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, and the European Code of Conduct on Arms Exports adopted by the General Affairs Council on 8 June 1998.

Ramsgate-Ostend Ferries

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to seek to enforce EU Treaty obligations under Articles 90 and 86 and to secure the right for ferry passengers from Ramsgate to land freely in Ostend; and if he will make a statement. [47717]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The British Embassy in Belgium are pressing the Belgian authorities to take action to enable the Sally Direct passenger ferry service from Ramsgate to Ostend to commence as soon as possible. Whether the company has any remedies under the competition or other provisions of Community law is a matter for it and its advisers.

Drugs Trade

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to combat the drugs trade in Central Asia. [47326]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK EU Presidency has co-ordinated Commission and Member State activity under the EU Central Asia Drugs Initiative, established in response to an Anglo-French proposal. We have participated in, and given practical support to, EU project design missions.

Since 1995, the UK has provided £1.14 million for the UNDCP Central Asia programme. There will also be over £150,000 of drugs-related bilateral assistance to the region in 1998.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. [47330]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We continue to have concerns over the human rights situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. As head of an EU Ministerial Troika, I met President Kabila on 4 June. I welcomed President Kabila's assurances that his Government wish to promote and protect human rights, but made clear the extent of concern within the EU over a number of specific human rights issues.

South China Sea

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conflicting territorial claims in the South China Sea. [47383]

Mr. Fatchett: The Philippines, Malaysia and Brunei claim specific parts of the South China Sea, while China, Taiwan and Vietnam claim all of its islands, islets and reefs.

The South China Sea is regularly discussed at meetings under the auspices of the ASEAN Regional Forum and in a series of Indonesian-initiated regional workshops.

The UK takes no position on respective claims, but hopes disputes can be resolved peacefully.

Cuba

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Cuba to respect human rights and the conduct of elections. [47386]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: When my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State meets visiting Cuban Government Ministers and the Cuban Ambassador, she raises political reform and human rights among other issues, in line with the EU Common Position on Cuba. She will do so again when she meets the Cuban Vice Foreign Minister, Isabel Allende, in London on 29 June. Our Embassy in Havana regularly raise these issues with the Cuban Government.

Pakistan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of disclosure by Loral Space and Communications of information relating to the performance of Long March Rocheli on Pakistan's capability to deliver nuclear warheads. [47790]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The issues surrounding the disclosure by Loral Space, and others, of a report on Space Launch Vehicles to the Chinese is currently the subject of an investigation by the US Justice Department. It would not, therefore, be proper for us to comment on this investigation. We consider, however, that any information on Space Launch Vehicles which may have been passed to the Chinese would not immediately enhance Pakistan's current capability to deliver nuclear weapons.

Togo

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the conduct of the election in Togo. [47328]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are deeply concerned about the conduct of the Presidential elections in Togo. In particular, we deplore the many irregularities with the electoral process: unequal access to the media, problems with the voter list and polling cards, the suspension of the count, the confiscation of ballot boxes by the military, the resignation of the head of the national electoral commission, and the harassment of election monitors.

The UK as Presidency of the European Union issued a declaration on 26 June expressing these concerns and urging all parties involved to refrain from violence.

Africa (Embassy Services)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is provided by British embassies to businesses wishing to work in Francophone Africa. [47332]

Mr. Fatchett: British Embassies assist businesses wishing to work in Francophone Africa by providing information on overseas markets and finding local business contacts. They also help to promote products and services, give political and economic briefings, and assist British companies that wish to participate in trade fairs and missions. For instance, the British Embassy in Cote d'Ivoire and the DTI organised a trade fair and financial conference on 2–7 March this year. This was the largest UK trade promotion event in tropical Francophone Africa in the last ten years.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is provided by British high commissions to businesses wishing to work in Anglophone Africa. [47331]

Mr. Fatchett: British High Commissions assist businesses wishing to work in Anglophone Africa by providing information on overseas markets and finding local business contacts. They also help to promote products and services, give political and economic briefings, and assist British companies who wish to participate in trade fairs and missions.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is provided by the High Commission in South Africa to British exporters and investors. [47334]

Mr. Fatchett: The British High Commission in South Africa provides a full range of overseas trade services to British exporters and investors. In addition, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, together with the South African Minister for Trade and Industry, launched on 27 May, a new three-year campaign—"Britain and South Africa—partners in opportunity". This will include developing a gateway website about South Africa for potential exporters, and a new search and matching process "Active Partners", to match small and medium-sized firms in the UK and South Africa. My hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry will also lead a trade and investment mission to South Africa from 27 to 29 July, and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will co-host with the South African Minister for Trade and Industry a "Partnership Week" in Johannesburg from 14 to 17 September 1998.

Guinea Bissau

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the safety of British citizens in Guinea Bissau. [47325]

Mr. Fatchett: We broadcast several emergency messages via the BBC World Service urging Britons to leave Guinea Bissau and giving them advice about how best to do this. We believe that all British nationals who wished to leave Guinea Bissau have now done so.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the treatment of opposition parties by the Government in Guinea Bissau. [47327]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Guinea Bissau is a functioning multiparty democracy.

Multiparty legislative elections were held for the first time in 1994. They were judged to be free and fair by international observers. There are 11 political parties registered in Guinea Bissau, including the ruling African Party for the Independence of Guinea Bissau and Cape Verde (PAIGC), of which 6 have seats in parliament. An Electoral Commission in which all parties are represented was set up in march this year, in preparation for the next legislative elections due in November 1998.

North Korea

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of North Korea to respect human rights and the conduct of elections. [47385]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK does not have diplomatic relations with North Korea and no ministerial talks have been held. The question of human rights violations in North Korea was raised at official-level talks held in November 1997. Earlier rounds had covered our concerns at the consequences of personality cults and a description of the British electoral system.

The UK, as Presidency, also co-ordinated the EU's response to the DPRK's purported denunciation, which we cannot accept, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The DPRK has recently expressed an interest in political dialogue with the EU. We have replied that any talks would need to include the subject of human rights.

Eritrea (British Embassy)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will remove responsibility for Eritrean affairs from the British Embassy in Addis Ababa. [47382]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The responsibility for Britain's foreign policy towards Eritrea remains with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. There are no plans to replace the British Embassy in Addis Ababa as the superintending mission for the British Consulate in Asmara.

Iraq

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received relating to adverse health effects suffered by Iraqi people as a result of the use of depleted uranium shells to attack Iraq. [45759]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are aware of a number of recent media reports which have suggested that there has been an increase in the incidence of ill-health, particularly cancers and birth defects, amongst the population in southern Iraq which some have attributed to the use of depleted uranium (DU) based ammunition by Coalition forces during the Gulf conflict. These suggestions were also raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Kelvin (Mr. Galloway) during an adjournment debate on the Middle East on 27 March 1998, Official Report, columns 872–76. A copy of the Government's response to my hon. Friend, setting out the Government's position on this matter, has already been placed in the Library of the House.

More recently, on 24 May, the Iraqi Foreign Minister, Mohammed Said Al-Sahaf, wrote to the United Nations Secretary General, Kofi Annan, claiming the right to compensation from the UK for damage allegedly caused by the use of DU-based ammunition by UK forces during the Gulf War. In this letter, Mr. Al-Sahaf attributed a reported increase in ill-health in Iraq to the use of DU-based ammunition.

However, the letter contained no statistical information of any kind to substantiate these assertions. Since the Government have seen no epidemiological research data on the Iraqi population we therefore cannot comment on whether there may be an unusually high incidence of ill-health in southern Iraq. Furthermore, there is no evidence that the illnesses of the types listed in Mr. Al-Sahaf's letter—foetal malformations, bone deformities, hair loss, skin disease and child leukaemia—are uniquely associated with exposure to DU. We would of course consider carefully any medical or scientific data which was presented on this subject.

The UK Government responded to Mr. Al-Sahaf's letter on 16 June, rebutting Iraq's claims, in a letter from the UK's Permanent Representative at the UN, Sir John Weston, to Mr. Annan. I am placing copies of the Iraqi letter and Sir John Weston's response in the Library of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Allan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list, for each of the last four years, all departmental inquiries and reviews instigated by ministers which have been chaired by individuals outside his Department; and in each case if he will give the date of establishment and the name of the chairman. [46828]

Dr. David Clark: The only committee of inquiry or review established within the last four years in the Office of Public Service and chaired by an individual outside my Department was (in the then Office of Public Service and Science) the Committee to Review the Contribution of Scientists and Engineers to the Public Understanding of Science, Engineering and Technology, established in January 1995 and chaired by Sir Arnold Wolfendale FRS.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47012]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women on 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 557–58.

"Opening Up Quangos"

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has received to the consultation paper "Opening Up Quangos"; and if he will make a statement. [48002]

Dr. David Clark: I am pleased to report that the Government's consultation paper "Opening up Quangos" received a good response. Over 400 replies were received from a wide range of individuals and organisations and the great majority of respondents broadly supported the thrust of our proposals for keeping the number of quangos to a minimum and for making those which remain more open, accountable and effective. I believe this shows the wide support that exists for opening up this area of government hitherto perceived as undemocratic and unaccountable. Copies of all the responses received (apart from those where confidentiality has been requested) have been placed in the Library of the House.

The results of the consultation exercise—together with further proposals for improving the accountability and transparency of quangos—are published today in my paper "Quangos: Opening the Doors". The proposals in this paper take account of all the comments received during the consultation exercise.

The action proposed in "Quangos: Opening the Doors" will make the business of quangos more open and the appointments system more transparent and accessible. It will enhance the accountability of quangos to their stake-holders through increased consultation, open meetings and better links with local government. Taken as a whole, I believe that the reforms in "Quangos: Opening the Doors" will require all quangos to carry out their important work in line with the basic democratic principles by which we conduct public business in this country. The proposals provide a basis for quangos to command public confidence and attract new people into this important area of public life.

I am also pleased to announce the publication today of "Opening up Public Appointments" which provides details of the work in hand to support the Government's commitment to increasing the participation of under-represented groups in public life.

The Government have agreed, in principle, the proposal for a 50:50 ratio of women and men for public appointments and a pro rata representation of members of the ethnic minorities. A central feature of this work is a plan of action requiring all Government departments to set robust targets with the aim of reaching this overall goal. As part of this process, departments have drawn up individual plans which contain specific goals and objectives for increasing the representation of women and members of the ethnic minorities on the boards of public bodies. These cover the period 1998–2001 and will be updated annually. Future plans will specifically address the Government's overall commitments to increase representation.

Copies of "Quangos: Opening the Doors" and "Opening up Public Appointments" will be sent to all right hon. and hon. Members as well as being placed in the Library of the House. The papers will also be made available electronically over the Internet.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Epping-Ongar Rail Line

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make his decision on the sale of the Epping to Ongar rail line. [44889]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State has given his consent to the sale and letters informing interested parties, including the hon. Member, have been issued. I hope that all parties will now support Pilot in their efforts to provide the passenger rail service that we all want to see operating on the line.

Weald and Downland DBFO Project

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 442, what compensation has been paid to the four consortiums which tendered for the Weald and Downland DBFO project. [46697]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The claims from the Tenderers for the cancelled Weald and Downland DBFO project raised a number of detailed issues which will take some time finally to resolve. In the meantime, interim payments of £1.3 million (excluding VAT) have been made.

Newsprint Recycling

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with representatives of the paper industry concerning the recycled contents of newsprint; and if he will make a statement. [46823]

Angela Eagle: I met the Chief Executive and Company Secretary of Aylesford Newsprint on 12 January this year. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment met representatives of the Newspaper Publishers Association on 9 February.

We are committed to substantial increases in recycling, and are determined to see an increase in the amount of recycled newsprint used in newspapers.

We shall shortly be receiving the interim report of the Newspaper Publishers Association's working group examining the factors governing the optimum recycled content of newspaper. We expect to see the industry setting themselves stringent targets, and we will work with them to achieve them. We have not however ruled out the possibility of introducing legislation ourselves, perhaps under existing powers.

Local Government Reorganisation

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the bids for re-organisation costs for (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96, (c) 1996–97, (d) 1997–98 and (e) 1998–99, that have been made by local authorities subject to reorganisation on 1 April 1995, 1996, 1997 and 1998, and the proportion of the bids which were allocated supplementary credit approval cover for (a) to (e); and if he will list the capitalisation directions granted to those authorities in those same years. [47210]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies given on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 808–14, 3 November 1997, Official Report, columns 72–73 and 17 December 1997, Official Report, columns 199–200. These replies gave bids and allocations for 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98, revised allocations for 1997–98 made after the mid-year review and initial allocations for 1998–99. Supplementary credit approvals (SCA) and capitalisation directions have not yet been issued for 1997–98 or 1998–99. The capitalisation directions for earlier years have generally equalled the SCA issued unless the authority has sought a lower amount, or a higher amount which has not exceeded the net revenue element of the final audited application for SCA.

The table lists the bids for 1997–98 and 1998–99, and the SCAs for 1994–95 to 1996–97 and allocations for 1997–98 and 1998–99 expressed as a percentage of bid.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47052]

Angela Eagle: There have been no initiatives announced by my Department since 1 May 1997 to establish new area based regeneration "action zones". However, in the recent Budget statement, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced £15 million funding for New Deal for Communities pathfinder projects for 1998–99. My Department is taking forward the development of the New Deal for Communities initiative in England with the Treasury, the Social Exclusion Unit and other Government Departments. The exact location of these projects is yet to be decided.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave in reply to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) about Best Value pilots and the Joint Commissioning of new social housing schemes on 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 632–34.

UN World Environment Day

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives the Government took to promote the UN World Environment Day on 5 June. [47221]

Angela Eagle: Advertising specifically promoting World Environment Day ran in the national press and on radio on 4 and 5 June as an extension to the Are you doing your bit? advertising campaign which took place during March and April this year. My Department also launched its Climate Change Impacts programme. To draw further attention to World Environment Day, the Deputy Prime Minister, as President of the EU's Environment Council, visited both the Donana National Park in Spain and the site nearby caused by a serious spillage of chemical waste.

Cleaner Motor Vehicles

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had, and with whom, on the production of less-polluting motor vehicles. [47336]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Ministers from my Department have held discussions with vehicle manufacturers, component suppliers, environmental groups and trade associations on the production of less polluting vehicles. These discussions are being undertaken both within the context of the EU's strategy on $CO_2$ emissions and the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force which the Government have established, in conjunction with industry and other bodies, and which is looking in particular at what action can be taken to improve fuel efficiency and reduce vehicle pollution. These organisations have also been involved in discussions on the EU's Auto-Oil directives, which set more stringent emissions standards for new vehicles.

Shipping Industry

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the results of the working group investigating the shipping industry. [47320]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A shipping paper based on the work of the shipping working group will be published shortly after the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Government Vehicles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage the use of compressed natural gas in Government fleet vehicles. [47414]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government Car Service announced last year that they would be converting all the cars in their fleet to run on compressed natural gas or liquefied petroleum gas as the cars were replaced. The Government have also taken a number of other steps to encourage the use of road fuel gases more generally, including freezing the duty on these fuels in two successive budgets and providing funding for the Energy Saving's Trust's Powershift programme which aims to create a sustainable market for alternative fuels.

North West Water

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for the period from 1989 to date those works carried out by North West Water to achieve environmental improvements which were (a) required by statute and (b) undertaken without statutory requirement by the company; and if he will publish the cost benefit information on the works listed in each category. [47540]

Angela Eagle: Government set the statutory framework for water quality standards. The Environment Agency, through its monitoring and enforcement functions, has responsibility for ensuring that the water quality standards set by statute are met. It is for the privatised water companies to determine how those standards are met. In some cases, water companies may elect to exceed statutory requirements. The Director General of Water Services, as financial regulator of the privatised water companies, has responsibility for ensuring that water companies meet both statutory requirements and discretionary improvements in a cost-effective manner.

Information on the works undertaken to meet statutory requirements and discretionary improvements is not held centrally.

Advanced Driving Instructors

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost to the Driving Standards Agency of tests for advanced driving instructors in each of the last two financial years. [47509]

Ms Glenda Jackson: To qualify as an Approved Driving Instructor (ADI) it is necessary to pass a driving theory test, a practical test of driving ability and a practical test of instructional ability. Qualified ADIs are then subject to regular check testing of their continued ability to give instruction. The costs for the separate tests for the past two years were as follows:

|---|---|---|
| Theory test | 232,700 | 158,640 |
| Practical driving and instructional ability tests | 681,678 | 963,041 |
| Check tests | 786,939 | 1,332,614 |

Executive Agencies

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the payments per annum since 1992 to (a) those executive agencies with which his Department has framework contracts and (b) those non-departmental public bodies which are sponsored by his Department. [47455]

Angela Eagle: Net Voted expenditure (in £000s) for the years 1992–93 to 1997–98 by those executive agencies which are currently part of the Department, Transport and the Regions was as follows:

| Name of agency | 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 | 1996–97 | 1997–98 |

Nuclear Material (Trains)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what appraisal he has made of safety factors in relation to the carriage of nuclear waste by train in the United Kingdom. [47467]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The safety standards for the transport of nuclear waste and spent nuclear fuel are already extremely high. They are based upon the recommendations of the International Atomic Energy Agency and are reviewed on a regular basis to ensure that the excellent safety record is maintained. The Government are active in, and will continue to support, the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international bodies that regulate the carriage of radioactive material, including the Intergovernmental Organisation for International Carriage by Rail.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the level of radiation emitted from trains carrying nuclear material. [47432]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The radiation level from trains carrying nuclear material during normal operations is limited by Regulation to a maximum of 2 milliSievert/h at any point on the wagon outer surfaces, or the vertical planes projected from the outer edges of open wagons and to 0.1 milliSievert/h at a distance of 2 metres from those surfaces.

In a major study of road and rail transport (Radiation Exposure from the Normal Transport of Radioactive Materials within the United Kingdom, 1991 Review, by R. Gelder, National Radiological Protection Board Report NRPB-R255, ISBN 0 85951 351 3) the scenario of a householder living 100 metres from a marshalling yard where fuel flasks may be held for several hours, was assessed to give rise to a maximum annual dose of 6 microSievert. The maximum dose to persons living closer (50 metres) to a railway line with passing traffic (where exposure times would be very much shorter) was assessed to be very much lower. For comparison, the average annual dose in the UK due to natural background radiation is about 2000 microSievert.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, for each of the last five years, the number of accidents involving trains carrying nuclear material, within a five mile radius of Warrington. [47430]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 June 1998]: During the last five years there have been no accidents involving trains whilst carrying nuclear material in the Warrington area. There have, however, been three incidents involving trains transporting empty irradiated nuclear fuel flasks from Sellafield to UK nuclear power stations:

1. December 1994

A flatrol carrying an empty flask was derailed at Walton Old Junction.

2. December 1995

Electrical arcing was observed from a wagon attached to a nuclear flask train (but not itself carrying a flask) whilst in Arpley sidings.

3. March 1998

A buffer wagon (not a flatrol carrying a flask) was derailed following a low speed collision at Arpley sidings.

In no case was there any release of radioactive materials.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average number of trains per week carrying nuclear waste which pass through Warrington. [47431]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 June 1998]: Nuclear waste as such is not generally transported by train through Warrington. However, flasks carrying irradiated nuclear fuel regularly pass along the west coast main line through Warrington. There has never been a radiological incident involving the release of radioactivity from these trains.

An average of 2 trains per week, carrying between them an average of 9 flasks per week, pass through Warrington carrying irradiated nuclear fuel from UK nuclear power stations to Sellafield. A similar number of empty flasks is also transported through Warrington in the return direction.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how many rail journeys are undertaken each year in the United Kingdom in which radioactive material is carried from (a) Sellafield, (b) Dounreay, (c) Hartlepool, (d) Dungeness and (e) Hinkley Point. [47745]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For the calendar year 1997, the number of such journeys are estimated as follows:

(a) Sellafield: 133

(e) Hinkley Point: 72.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent measurements he has evaluated in respect of the level of radioactivity found on the outside of rail wagons used for the transport of radioactive material. [47715]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Measurements of non-fixed contamination on the outside of rail wagons used to transport irradiated fuel flasks by UK operators have shown no instances of contamination exceeding the regulatory limit of 4 Becquerels/cm$^2$ $\beta\gamma$ during the period January 1997 to the end of the first quarter of 1998.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government's consultation document on energy efficiency will be issued. [47800]

Angela Eagle: The Government plan to issue a consultation paper later this summer on policy options for meeting the UK's climate change targets. This will focus on the Government's legally binding target to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–2012, and also look at measures which could deliver the Government's aim of reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. on 1990 levels by 2010. The scope for greater energy efficiency in business, the public sector and households will be an important feature of this paper.

Air Traffic

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the estimated change in air traffic into and out of the United Kingdom over each of the next five years. [47586]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority's latest base case air traffic forecasts for commercial flights within UK airspace for the next five years are shown in the following table:

| Year | Number of Commercial Flights (000s) |
|---|---|
| 1998–99 | 1,734.0 |
| 1999–2000 | 1,758.8 |
| 2000–2001 | 1,813.3 |
| 2001–2002 | 1,891.8 |
| 2002–2003 | 1,973.0 |

Council Ward Boundaries

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions each year since 1983 the Local Government Commission for England has conducted an interim (non-periodic) review of council ward boundaries; for which councils; and for what reasons. [47682]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1992, when the Local Government Commission was established, it has undertaken no non-periodic reviews of council ward boundaries, other than those associated with local government structure reviews.

Greenwich Peninsula (Cable Car)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contracts have been signed in relation to the proposed cable car across the Thames at Greenwich peninsula. [47784]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The proposed cable car across the Thames at the Greenwich peninsula is a private-sector project. The company promoting it, Meridian Cable Cars Limited, has already obtained planning consent and is in discussions with the New Millennium Experience Company in regard to a lease for the area where it would 'land' close to the Dome. Whether the project goes ahead depends very much on the promoter's ability to raise the necessary funds.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the operating capacity of the Jubilee Line extension will be on 1 January 2000 in (a) trains and (b) passengers per hour. [47788]

Ms Glenda Jackson: By 1 January 2000, LT plan to be able to run 24 6-car trains per hour in each direction on the Jubilee Line Extension. This will provide a capacity of well over 24,000 passengers per hour in each direction.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the Jubilee Line extension. [47789]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Tunnelling and tracklaying for the Jubilee Line Extension are complete. The new trains are in service on the existing Jubilee Line. Work on station fit-out and electrical and mechanical equipment is well under way. On-site testing of the signalling and communications software has begun. LT have undertaken a thorough review of the programme and plan to open the entire line in spring 1999.

Greenwich Peninsula (Bathing Facilities)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to provide bathing facilities on the Greenwich peninsula. [47785]

Angela Eagle: None.

Globe Conference

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Globe Conference held in Aarhus, Denmark. [47782]

Mr. Meacher: I attended the Aarhus Conference for Parliamentarians, "Our Common European Garden in 1998", for the Ministerial Panel, organised by Globe Europe on 22 June. The conference reaffirmed the central role played by Parliamentarians in progressing sustainable development, and was a useful contribution to the Aarhus Environment for Europe Conference which began the following day. Parliamentarians from 37 countries agreed a set of conclusions from the Globe Conference, covering the Environment for Europe conference, sustainable development in Europe, endocrine disrupters, climate change and energy efficiency, and the Aarhus Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision Making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters.

Endocrine Disrupting Chemicals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what checks are presently carried out on (a) approved chemicals and (b) chemicals for which approval is sought to assess their potential for endocrine disruption. [47779]

Angela Eagle: Pesticides represent the major class of chemicals for which formal approval is required before they can be used and which may be present in the environment. The UK Control of Pesticides Regulations (COPR) (1986) (amended) is currently operated alongside the EC Plant Protection Products Directive (91/414/EEC), which is implemented in the UK by the Plant Protection Products Regulations (1995) (amended). Annex II to the Directive states that possible effects on all aspects of reproductive physiology in both males and females, as well as possible effects on pre-natal and post-natal development, must be investigated and reported.

Approved chemicals are subject to a review procedure, which may include assessment of their endocrine disrupting potential.

For veterinary medicines, all applications for marketing authorisations must meet statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. In this context, safety includes to the operator as well as the health and welfare of the treated animal, to the consumer of any food products from treated animals and to the environment.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent research the Government have initiated into endocrine disrupting chemicals. [47777]

Angela Eagle: New research programmes, totalling over £3 million, to study (a) trends in male reproductive health and the possible influence of chemicals and (b) endocrine disruption in the marine environment have been initiated jointly by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, other Government Departments and Agencies and the European Chemical Industry Council.

In addition, DETR has initiated research into non-reproductive effects of endocrine disruption in wildlife and recently contributed to an Environment Agency led study of the effects of endocrine disrupters on reproduction in wild fish.

Government Departments and Agencies also support a range of projects on chemicals with known or suspected endocrine disrupting properties including tributyltin (TBT), dioxins, furans and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs).

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the chemicals (a) known to cause endocrine disruption and (b) suspected of causing endocrine disruption. [47778]

Angela Eagle: The Institute for Environment and Health and the Environment Agency have listed some individual substances within the following chemical categories as having endocrine disrupting activity; naturally produced female sex steroid hormones, synthetic steroid hormones, phytoestrogens (naturally occurring chemicals found in plans), polychlorinated organic compounds, organochlorine pesticides, organotins, alkylphenols, alkylphenol ethoxylates (short chain), phthalates and biphenolic compounds. Within each category there are also related substances suspected of having endocrine activity, but for which the data are not yet adequate to allow a definitive conclusion.

Other categories of substances, including some pesticides, are also suspected of having endocrine disrupting activity.

Green Ministers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the content of, and decisions reached at, the third meeting of green ministers. [47780]

Mr. Meacher: On 8 June, Green Ministers met for the third time, to consider the next stage of the Greening Government Initiative.

We agreed that we should continue to meet three times a year. Starting in the next Parliamentary Session in the Autumn, we will announce our main programme of work for the coming year to progress policy integration, environmental appraisal and greening operations.

Ministers are keen to find the best way of publicly reporting progress. We discussed a number of options and will reach a final view in the light of the forthcoming report on Greening Government by the Commons Environmental Audit Committee.

Green Ministers considered the role of sustainable development indicators. We welcomed the work that had already been done involving a large number of stakeholders both within and outside Government and emphasised the need to ensure that the links between economic, social and environmental areas are easily understood.

We also noted progress in implementing the green operations model policy and improvement programme and green transport plans. Now that these plans were in place Government Departments needed to play a leading role across the UK in helping green business operations.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Ministers attended the Third Meeting of Green Ministers; and which Ministers were represented by officials. [47781]

Mr. Meacher: I chaired the third meeting of the group on 8 June 1998 and the following Green Ministers attended:

| Department | Green Minister |
|---|---|
| Agriculture, Fisheries and Food | Jeff Rooker MP |
| Culture, Media and Sport | Mark Fisher MP |
| Defence | John Spellar MP |
| Environment, Transport and the Regions | Glenda Jackson MP |
| Foreign and Commonwealth Office | Derek Fatchett MP |
| Health | Tessa Jowell MP |
| Home Office | Mike O'Brien MP |
| Law Officers | The Lord Falconer QC |
| Lord Chancellor's | Geoff Hoon MP |
| Office of Public Service | Peter Kilfoyle MP |
| Social Security | John Denham MP |
| Trade and Industry | John Battle MP |

Note:
The Scottish and Welsh Offices were represented by Henry MacLeish MP and Peter Hain MP respectively

The Chancellor's Departments, the Department for Education and Employment, the Department for International Development and the Northern Ireland Office were represented by officials.

Public Participation Convention

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he plans to take to implement the Convention on Public Participation, Access to Information and Access to Justice. [47774]

Mr. Meacher: On behalf of the UK, I signed the UNECE Convention on Public Participation, Access to Information and Access to Justice on 25 June 1998. The Convention will become legally binding when we ratify it. We are developing our strategy on how best to implement the Convention and we will have the necessary measures in place before ratification.

Our consultation paper on a revised sustainable development strategy highlighted access to information and public participation as important for the achievement of sustainable development and we will be considering these issues further in light of the consultation responses.

The Government's proposals for a new Freedom of Information Act will also be an important measure for the implementation of the Convention.

Sellafield

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the representations from other countries his Department has received since 1 May 1997 in respect of the Sellafield reprocessing facility. [47746]

Angela Eagle: Since 1 May 1997, the Department has received the following representations in respect of the Sellafield reprocessing facility, the Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant (THORP): one letter from Germany, one from France, one from Ireland and two from Denmark.

Millennium Experience Site

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the cost of decontaminating the Millennium Experience site at Greenwich to date. [46345]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on 30 July 1997, Official Report, column 412.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what impact he expects the Millennium Experience at Greenwich to have on the local transport system. [46344]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 1 June 1998, Official Report, columns 33–34.

Green-Field Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much green-field land he estimates has been sold, and for how much, in England in each of the last five years. [47735]

Mr. Raynsford: Information is not held centrally on the amounts and value of green field land sold.

Non-fuel-powered Cars

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on public funding to manufacturers to establish or expand (a) fuel cell, (b) electric and (c) solar car or component factories in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [47725]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Funding to develop new technologies for the automotive industry is available under the DTI Foresight vehicle LINK programme and fuel cells are also supported under the Advanced Fuels Cells Programme.

The DETR is providing £6.5 million to the Energy Savings Trust's Powershift programme to help stimulate the market for alternative fuels by providing grants towards the purchase of alternatively fuelled vehicles produced with proven technology which is already in the market place.

The DTI provides Regional Selective assistance for the safeguard and creation of jobs in Assisted Areas. All manufacturing industries could be eligible for support except those which are subject to special EU restrictions.

Housing (Planning Permission)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning permissions have been granted in each of the last five years in England for developments of (a) up to 100, (b) up to 500 and (c) up to 1,000 homes. [47724]

Mr. Raynsford: I regret that the information requested is not available. Information on the number of applications granted for planning permission for minor and major dwellings developments is available from my department's quarterly statistics of planning applications. Figures for 1993 to 1997 are shown in the table.

Applications granted for planning permission

Thousands

| Year | Minor dwellings developments[1] | Major dwellings developments[1] | All dwellings developments |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1993 | 38.4 | 7.1 | 45.4 |
| 1994 | 40.6 | 7.1 | 47.7 |
| 1995 | 37.6 | 6.3 | 43.9 |
| 1996 | 34.6 | 5.8 | 40.4 |
| 1997 | 35.5 | 6.0 | 41.4 |

[1] A major dwellings development involves the construction of 10 or more dwellings or, where the number is not given in the application, the area of the site is more than 0.5 hectares. A minor dwellings development is one which does not meet the criteria for major development

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the amount of (a) $CO_2$, (b) $SO_2$, (c) $NO_x$, (d) fine particulates, (e) black smoke and (f) radiation emitted as a result of the burning of 25 mt. coal per annum in power stations. [47608]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency has advised that the quantity of pollutants emitted from burning 25 million tonnes of coal are estimated to be as follows:

(a) Carbon dioxide: the quantity of $CO_2$ released will be dependent on the ash content of the coal but is likely to be approximately 55 million tonnes per annum.

(b) Sulphur dioxide: the quantity of $SO_2$ released will depend on the sulphur content of the coal utilised, the relative proportions of coal burnt at power stations fitted with Flue-Gas Desulphurisation units compared with unabated stations and the extent to which other abatement techniques are introduced. Depending on these factors the quantity of $SO_2$ released is likely to be between 340 kilotonnes and 510 kilotonnes per annum.

(c) Oxides of nitrogen: following completion of the current improvement programme to reduce emissions, releases of nitrogen oxides from coal fired power stations are likely to be approximately 160 kilotonnes per annum.

(d) Fine Particulates: the quantity of particulates released will depend to some extent on the quality of coal burnt, the relative proportions of coal burnt at power stations fitted with Flue-Gas Desulphurisation units compared with unabated stations and the extent to which plants are able to reduce emissions as a result of the ongoing improvement programme. Based on current performance, the quantity released is likely to be approximately 14 kilotonnes per annum.

(e) Black smoke: the term black smoke refers to the extent to which a sample of air is able to blacken a filter. The quantity released will depend on similar factors to those affecting the release of particulates and is estimated very approximately to be 6.25 kilotonnes per annum.

(f) Radiation: the amount of radiation released, depending on the ash content of the coal and flue gas clean-up measures, is estimated very approximately to be 0.5 Tera-becquerels (TBq) per annum.

Benefit Fraud (Data Matching)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage local authorities to use data matching techniques with respect to benefit fraud which also require access to medical records, as provided for by the Audit Commission Bill 1998. [47380]

Mr. Raynsford: Whilst we welcome any progress in counteracting all types of fraud, it is for the Audit Commission and local authorities to decide the best approach to adopt in any particular case, having regard to their statutory powers and to the measures available to them, including data matching techniques.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47355]

Angela Eagle: This information is not held centrally.

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the consultation paper on leasehold reform. [47721]

Mr. Raynsford: Later this year.

Ramsgate-Ostend Ferries

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to facilitate the landing of Sally Line passengers from Ramsgate in Ostend; and if he will make a statement. [47716]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is liaising with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in pressing the Belgian authorities to take action to enable the Sally Direct passenger ferry service from Ramsgate to Ostend to begin as soon as possible.

Wembley Park Underground Station

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made in upgrading Wembley Park Underground Station as part of the preparations associated with the bid to host the World Cup in 2006. [47719]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following the Deputy Prime Minister's announcement of a Public/Private Partnership for London Underground and an additional £365 million of funding for London Transport over the next two years. LT and the Government have been considering together what additional investment projects should go ahead in the next two years. London Underground has proposals for a comprehensive redevelopment of Wembley Park Station, including improved platforms, canopies, ticket hall, staircase and walkway. Subject to that review, and securing substantial contributions from outside parties, London Underground has indicated that construction of the Wembley Park Station redevelopment could start in 1999–2000.

Cycling

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent steps

he has taken to encourage (a) (i) Ministers, (ii) officials and (iii) employees of his Department and (b) other Ministers to use bicycles. [47834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The upper limit on salary advances to staff for purchase of bicycles and associated equipment was increased in April 1998. Staff cycling to work on National Bike to Work day were welcomed at DETR headquarters buildings with a bike breakfast. Further encouragement to use bicycles for business travel should stem from Green Transport Plans being developed for DETR premises.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of journeys to work in London are made by bicycle. [47831]

Ms Glenda Jackson: According to the Department's most recent National Travel Survey 1994–96: for that period, an average of 2.7 per cent. of people living and working in London, travelled to work by bicycle.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of dedicated cycle lanes separated from other traffic there are in London. [47830]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Taking together the London Cycle Network, the Thames Cycle Route, the priority (Red Routes) programme and other measures on London's trunk roads, approximately 225 miles of cycle lanes were in place by March 1998. Specific information on dedicated routes separated from other traffic is not held centrally, nor are details of cycle lanes provided by highway authorities on local roads outside of the LCN and red route Network.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that trains arriving in London terminals are able to carry bicycles. [47836]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In general, services arriving in London are able to carry bicycles except during the morning commuter peak. It would be impracticable to require franchisees to make facilities available on all services because, on busy local and commuter networks, passenger capacity is of prime importance to both operators and passengers. The provisions in the franchise agreements therefore strike a balance between the desire for operators to accommodate cyclists whilst acknowledging that it may not always be possible for them to do so. The Franchising Director, as part of his remit under the Objectives, Instructions and Guidance issued last year, discusses with franchisees the provision of space for bicycles on new trains.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of his Department's buildings in London have parking racks for bicycles available for use by visitors. [47833]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Bicycle parking facilities are available at Eland House, Ashdown House (V), Great Minister House, Riverwalk House and St. Christopher House. The facilities are available to all Departmental employees, pass holders and visitors on a first come first served basis. There are no reserved spaces.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with Westminster Council about bicycle traffic in the vicinity of the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement. [47835]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Deputy Prime Minister met representatives of Westminster City Council in March 1998 to review progress on the "World Squares for All" Masterplan. The Masterplan covers the main routes in the vicinity of the palace of Westminster, and makes a number of proposals to assist cyclists.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of journeys to school in London are made on bicycles. [47832]

Ms Glenda Jackson: According to the Department's most recent National Travel Survey 1994–96: for that period, an average of 1.3 per cent. of children aged 4–16 living in London, travelled by bicycle for the purpose of education.

Irish Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the cost of monitoring pollution levels in the Irish Sea in each of the past 10 years. [47739]

Angela Eagle: A number of agencies collaborate under the National Marine Monitoring Plan in monitoring pollution in the seas around the United Kingdom. It is not possible to disaggregate the activities in respect of any particular area of the sea.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total tonnage of sewage sludge dumping in Liverpool Bay in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [47740]

Angela Eagle: These figures are set out in the Reports of the Group Coordinating Sea Disposal Monitoring, published by the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS) in their Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report series, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the level of algal blooms in Liverpool Bay. [47743]

Angela Eagle: There is a high level of nutrient input into Liverpool Bay. This supports the growth of algal and the development of intense and regular algal blooms. The occurrence of these blooms in Liverpool Bay has been known for sometime and is reported in a variety of Environment Agency publications. Some of these bloom can cause a nuisance through foam formation on beaches but blooms of harmful algal which produce toxins do not occur.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) statutory and (b) non-statutory bodies that have monitored pollution levels in the Irish Sea in each of the past 10 years. [47744]

Angela Eagle: A number of monitoring reports covering the Irish Sea have been produced over the past 10 years. The information contained in these are drawn from different Government Departments, Agencies and other organisations who carry out monitoring under the UK National Monitoring Plan. The main reports are as follows:

1) Irish Sea status report produced by the Marine Pollution Monitoring Management Group (MPMMG) in 1987 (R. R. Dixon Lowestoft);

2) A review of radioactivity in the Irish Sea (Kershaw et al Lowestoft 1992);

3) Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS) Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report No. 32.

In addition, a new Irish Sea Quality Status report is being developed by both the UK and Irish Governments for incorporation within the Oslo and Paris Commission's (OSPAR) Quality Status Report 2000. This will be the first overall assessment of the marine environment in the North East Atlantic area since the 1992 OSPAR Convention came into force.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on co-operation between the United Kingdom Government and the Irish Government on monitoring pollution in the Irish Sea. [47742]

Angela Eagle: My Department has been working with the Department of the Environment and the Department of the Marine of the Republic of Ireland for a number of years. These Departments, together with the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, funded a three-year project to review research and monitoring in the Irish Sea, under an Irish Sea Science Co-ordinator. His third report was published in 1995 and identified gaps in research on the Irish Sea. These conclusions have informed my Department's decisions on funding research in this area.

In addition, the relevant Government Departments in the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, and in the Republic of Ireland are jointly taking the lead in the production of a Regional Quality Status Report on the Celtic Seas, including the Irish Sea. This report is one of the five regional reports on which the Quality Status Report of the North East Atlantic, which is being prepared by the OSPAR Commission, will be based.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the Jonus programme; and what are the future funding levels for the programme over the next five years. [47791]

Angela Eagle: The Jonus I research programme, which ended in December 1995, has led to a better understanding of the flux of nutrients (particularly nitrogen) from the land, through the Humber and Wash, to the North Sea, especially in relation to the nitrification/denitrification processes in estuaries. The work has indicated that algal blooms of phytoplankton only occur when tidal energy is below a certain level and light levels are sufficiently high. The data collected from Jonus I, together with data collected from similar work conducted under the Southern Nutrient Study (Sonus), has also been analysed under a modelling contract which ended on 31 October 1997. A follow-on Jonus/Sonus modelling contract was let in early 1998 and is scheduled to end on 31 March 1999. In addition, the Jonus II programme, which ends on 28 February 1999, aims to quantify the impact of nutrients discharged from land-based sources on the Irish Sea and from the Thames.

The estimated funding, supported by a number of agencies, is £148,000 for the follow-on Jonus/Sonus modelling contract and £487,955 for Jonus II.

Decisions remain to be taken on what further work would be justified in this field.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if information on marine pollution collected by (a) the Environment Agency, (b) the MAFF and (c) local authorities is collected on a central database. [47741]

Angela Eagle: Under the UK National Marine Monitoring Plan, a central data base is being set up by the Environment Agency, with the support of My Department. This holds all the relevant data collected under the plan from 1993.

Plankton Recording

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the international 60-year programme of continuous plankton recording around the British Isles. [47736]

Angela Eagle: The continuous Plankton Recorder Survey was started by Sir Alister Hardy in the North Sea in 1931. It is now operated by the Sir Alister Hardy Foundation for Ocean Science in Plymouth. The survey is funded by an international consortium. My Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are long-term supporters of this work. They met approximately 40 per cent. of the costs of the core survey in 1997. The survey is one of the most important sources of information about long-term trends in the marine environment. Recent work suggests that changes in plankton frequency over recent decades may be linked to changes in the temperature of the North Atlantic.

Algal Blooms

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the locations of algal blooms in United Kingdom waters ranked in order of severity. [47792]

Angela Eagle: Regular monitoring of coastal waters for the presence of potentially harmful algae is carried out under the EU Shellfish Hygiene Directive by the three UK Fisheries Laboratories. Reports of the results from each monitoring site, including the absence or concentration of toxic algae when present, are published annually and are available from the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS).

Rural Transport Grant

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to apply the rural sparsity criteria used to allocate the £50 million rural transport grant to the calculation of standard spending assessments. [47571]

Ms Armstrong: Standard spending assessments (SSAs) take account of the population living in wards and enumeration districts in which the density is between 0.5 and 4 persons per hectare, and those in which the density is less than 0.5 per hectare, with the latter being given a double weight. The support for rural public transport takes account of the population living outside built-up areas of 3,000 or more people.

We have no plans to change the measure used in the calculation of SSAs.

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria were used to define rural sparsity in the allocation of the £50 million rural transport grant. [47572]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In this year's Budget, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced additional spending of £50 million a year for rural public transport in the UK. England's share (under the well-established Barnett formula) is £41.7 million. Of that amount, £4.2 million will be devoted to rural community-based transport schemes, £5 million to a rural bus challenge competition for local authorities later this year, and £32.5 million to local authorities for the subsidy of rural bus services.

Under Special Grant proposals now laid before the House, the £32.5 million will be distributed in proportion to the rural population in each eligible local authority area. 'Rural population' is defined as those living outside built-up areas of 3,000 people or more as shown by the 1991 census.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria determined the shift of resources in standard spending assessments from shire areas to metropolitan areas in the current financial year. [47573]

Ms Armstrong: The standard spending assessments of the shire areas increased by £662.7m in 1998–99 (on a like for like basis); those of the metropolitan areas increased by £386.9m. The criteria used in the calculation of standard spending assessments are based on objective indicators and the most up-to-date information available is used for all authorities. The same formulae apply to all authorities with the same responsibilities for services. We treat authorities all on a fair and consistent basis.

Ministerial Helicopter Travel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times, and on which occasions, he and his Ministers have travelled by helicopter during the current month; and at what cost to public funds. [48034]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister travelled by helicopter during part of his visit to the Donana National Park when, at the invitation of the Spanish Government, he viewed the environmental damage caused by a leak of toxic waste. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment travelled by helicopter to address the Institute of Wastes Management Centenary Conference. On neither occasion was there any cost to public funds.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the total unemployed workforce are aged over 25 years; and what targets he has set under the New Deal to reduce unemployment for those aged over 25 years. [47723]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The proportion of all claimant unemployed who are aged over 25 is currently 74 per cent. One of this Government's objectives is to increase the proportion of adults unemployed for more than two years who find jobs and leave unemployment through the New Deal for people aged 25 and over.

Teachers Pension Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what charges are made by the Prudential Insurance Company for the management of the Teachers Pension Scheme; and if he will place the management agreement for that scheme in the Library. [47596]

Dr. Howells: The Teachers' Pension Scheme is a statutory scheme for which the Secretary of State retains responsibility. The administration of the scheme is carried out under contract by Capita Business Services Ltd. The Prudential Insurance Company is the appointed provider of the scheme's Additional Voluntary Contribution (AVC) arrangements. Those arrangements are governed by the Teachers' Superannuation (Additional Voluntary Contributions) Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/2924). No charge is levied by Prudential under these arrangements, although their administration costs are met by a 1 per cent. deduction from the AVC contributions paid by individual teachers.

University Students (Residence)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students who went to university resided at home with their parents, as a percentage of the total, in each year since 1990 including 1998 to date. [47720]

Dr. Howells: Comprehensive data on the number of university students who resided at home with their parents are not available in a consistent form for the period requested. Available information is that from local education authorities in England and Wales which provide data on the number of mandatory award holders studying in the United Kingdom who are eligible for the parental home rate of grant. Numbers of award holders eligible for the parental home rate of grant and the percentage of mandatory award holders this represents are given in the table for academic years 1990–91 to 1996–97 (provisional), the latest year for which information is available.

Mandatory awards in England and Wales[1,2]: academic years 1990–91 to 1996–97[3]
Students eligible for the parental home rate of grant[4,5]

| Academic year | Award holders eligible for the parental home rate of grant[6] (thousands) | Percentage of award holders eligible for the parental home rate of grant[6] |
|---|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 38.9 | 8.1 |
| 1991–92[7] | 49.8 | 9.1 |
| 1992–93 | 65.9 | 10.2 |
| 1993–94 | 78.7 | 10.9 |
| 1994–95 | 88.3 | 11.6 |

[4] Excludes placement year sandwich students
[5] LEAs can exceptionally give the parental rate to students who live away from the parental home but who could, in their opinion, conveniently attend their course from the parental home
[6] Data for 1991–92 do not include information on approximately 8,600 awards made by the London Residuary Body for which information on rates of grant is not available

Education Action Zones

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those schools included in the education action zones announced on 23 June which currently have grant-maintained status. [47823]

Mr. Byers: There are six schools in the first tranche of Education Action Zones which currently have grant-maintained status. One of the Zones, East Basildon, has a grant-maintained school as its leading partner. The Schools are:

All Saints CofE Primary School, Calderdale
Barstable School, East Basildon
Chalvedon School, East Basildon[1]
Friars Primary School, Southwark
Northlands Junior School, East Basildon
Reay Primary GM School, Lambeth

[1] Leading partner in Zone.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what index of social deprivation his Department used in determining the winning bids for education action zones announced on 23 June: [47824]

(2) if he will list the criteria used in assessing the winning bids for education action zones announced on 23 June. [47825]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State selected the 25 education action zones on the basis of recommendations from his advisory panel. The criteria used by the panel were three: social deprivation, as indicated by free school meals data; the innovative quality of the strategies proposed by the partnership; and on an assessment of the ability of the proposers to deliver school standards.

Higher Education

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of those aged (a) under 21, (b) 21 to 24 and (c) 25 years and over, registered in England, applied through UCAS for admission to a course of higher education for the (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996, (iv) 1997 and (v) 1998 entry cycles; what were the numbers of the population in England aged (a) to (c) for (i) to (v); and what was the proportion of those applying as a percentage of the appropriate population cohort. [47272]

Dr. Howells: Figures on English domiciled UCAS applicants to full time first degree, HND and DipHE courses in the UK by age and relevant English population from 1994 to 1998 are given in the table. Final applicant figures are shown for 1994 to 1997 together with the latest available, as at 16 May, in the current application cycle for 1998 entry, compared with corresponding figures as at 17 May 1997. The latest figures show that applications from young people so far this year are 1.6 per cent. higher than at the same stage last year. Even when population movements are taken into account the rate of applications is similar to last year. Furthermore, while mature applicant members are down, demographic factors have affected these. Another factor may be the strong labour market.

English domiciled UCAS applicants to full time first degree, HND and DipHE courses in UK by age and relevant English population 1994–1998

| Age group/year | Applicants | Population | Proportion (%) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Age under 21 | | | |
| 1994 | 222,739 | 1,751,839 | 12.7 |
| 1995 | 222,764 | 1,689,185 | 13.2 |
| 1996 | 223,989 | 1,654,311 | 13.5 |
| 1997 | 246,716 | 1,693,590 | 14.6 |
| 1997[1] | 232,681 | 1,693,590 | 13.7 |
| 1998 | 236,302 | 1,776,522 | 13.3 |
| Age 21 to 24 | | | |
| 1994 | 35,005 | 2,822,061 | 1.2 |
| 1995 | 35,121 | 2,717,868 | 1.3 |
| 1996 | 31,617 | 2,583,813 | 1.2 |
| 1997 | 34,615 | 2,460,902 | 1.4 |
| 1997[1] | 26,104 | 2,460,902 | 1.1 |
| 1998 | 23,096 | 2,354,387 | 1.0 |
| Age 25 and over | | | |
| 1994 | 46,892 | 11,231,696 | 0.4 |
| 1995 | 48,098 | 11,369,756 | 0.4 |
| 1996 | 44,858 | 11,506,630 | 0.4 |
| 1997 | 48,082 | 11,568,986 | 0.4 |
| 1997[1] | 35,830 | 11,568,986 | 0.3 |
| 1998[1] | 30,241 | 11,562,875 | 0.3 |

The English population cohorts used are aged 18 to 20, 21 to 24, 25 to 39 and are mid-year estimates. The ages of UCAS applicants are as at 30 September in year of entry.

These give the proportion of the age group shown who applied in the given year. Because some of the age group may apply in later years, the proportions do not indicate the full take up of higher education over time by these age groups.

The latest available figures for 1998 entry are as at 16 May and comparable figures for 1997 are given as well as final totals of applicants for that year. Final applicant figures are given for earlier years.

Class Sizes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average class size of schools in Cumbria on 30 April in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [44898]

Mr. Byers: The information in the form requested is not available centrally.

School Classes (Age Mix)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of five, six and seven-year-old school children currently being educated in classes containing a mixture of pupils from more than one age group. [44305]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 June 1998]: Provisional figures for numbers of children in key stage one classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary schools in England in January 1998 show that 345,000 or 21 per cent. of these children were in mixed age classes.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cull Ewes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the cull ewe trade with France is not able to use the abattoirs (a) MUS in Douai, (b) CVD in Rungis, (c) Ovimpex in Rungis, (d) SNVC in Cedex, (e) Macquet in Fruges and (f) Moreville in Fruges. [47270]

Dr. John Cunningham: It is the responsibility of the French authorities to designate the premises in France which can handle ewe carcases.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the earliest date the cull ewe trade can recommence. [47268]

Dr. John Cunningham: Under the Specified Risk Material Regulations 1997, the spinal cord of older sheep must be removed in authorised abattoirs or cutting plants. This requires the carcase to be split. Exports of carcases of cull ewes can take place once all such materials (and other specified risk material) has been removed.

We have recently issued proposals for statutory consultation to amend the Regulations to allow export of ewe carcases with spinal cord intact to premises designated by the French authorities to remove the spinal cord under French domestic controls on specified risk materials. The earliest date when exports of carcases with spinal cord intact can commence is dependent on the laying before Parliament of the amending Regulations following completion of the statutory consultation period. We would expect this to be during July, subject to the consultations being concluded without issues being raised which would require further work and to Parliamentary approval.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the meetings, together with the dates and the subjects discussed, which were held with the French Government to discuss the cull ewe trade in the context of the SRM ban. [47269]

Dr. John Cunningham: This has largely been pursued through correspondence, although the Agricultural Attaché at the British Embassy, Paris, and the Chief Veterinary Officer have been in contact with French veterinary authorities to pursue this point.

Policy Reviews

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the policy reviews his Ministry is currently carrying out; and when he expects the results of each will be made public. [47264]

Dr. John Cunningham: The information requested is as follows:

| Review | Results to be made public |
|---|---|
| Review of food from Britain | summer 1998 |
| Review of the UK legislation on the disposal of animal waste | summer 1998 |
| Review of the current rules on quarantine of imported pet animals | summer or early autumn 1998 |
| Review of the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme | autumn 1998 |
| Review of fishing vessel licensing | December 1998 |
| Review of the future funding of regulatory arrangements for pesticides | December 1998 |
| Review of the public analyst arrangements in England and Wales | by end of 1998 |
| Review of the nitrate sensitive area schemes | by 1 April 1999 |
| Review of environmentally sensitive areas, stage IV schemes | June 1999 |
| Review of access provisions of agri-environment schemes | during 1999 |
| Review of the meat and livestock commission | 1999 |
| Review of salmon and freshwater fisheries | by end of 1999 |
| Review of tuberculosis in cattle and badgers | [1] — |
| Review of raw cows' drinking milk policy | [2] — |

[1] Krebs Committee reported December 1997; decision on action to be taken will follow

[2] Consultation announced November 1997; Ministerial announcement in due course

In addition, operational matters are regularly reviewed and there is a rolling programme of policy evaluations.

Quarantine

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when public consultation on the proposals of the Advisory Committee on Quarantine will (a) begin and (b) end. [47866]

Mr. Rooker: The public consultation will commence after the report of the Advisory Group on Quarantine has been published in the summer or early autumn, and is expected to last for two or three months.

Pig Farming

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pig farmers he has met in the last four months to discuss the present state of the sector and its future prospects. [42999]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 21 May 1998]: My colleagues and I have met several pig farmers and their representatives in the last four months.

Growth Promoters

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the increase in body weight over any given period of time of (a) pigs and (b) poultry fed a diet which includes antibiotics as growth promoters when compared with the same types of animals fed a diet which excludes such growth promoters. [46981]

Mr. Rooker: The Department does not hold this information. Figures from the National Office of Animal Health Ltd. which represents manufacturers of feed additives authorised as growth promoters indicate that dietary enhancers improve feed conversion efficiency of farm livestock by between 3 and 6 per cent. and increase daily liveweight gains by 5 per cent. to 8 per cent., according to species.

Cheese

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the Department of Health about the use by his officials of powers granted under the Food Safety Act 1990 to ban the sale of cheese without court proceedings; and if he will make a statement. [47069]

Mr. Rooker: I fully support the recent exercise of powers under s.13 of the Food Safety Act by the Minister for Public Health in respect of cheese from a Somerset producer, for the reasons set out by her in the recent Adjournment Debate on 17 June 1998, Official Report, columns 342–46. It was for this reason that I attended the debate.

BSE

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the (a) number, (b) grades, (c) original department and (d) current roles of all civil servants assisting the BSE inquiry. [47230]

Mr. Rooker: Total staff at the Inquiry is currently 83. This includes a number of casual staff engaged on specific short term tasks.

Ten civil servants have been seconded to assist with the BSE Inquiry.

| Grade | Department | |
|---|---|---|
| G5 | Treasury Solicitor's Department | Solicitor to the Inquiry |
| G5 | D.E.T.R | Secretary to the Inquiry |
| G6 | D.T.I | Head of Analysis Branch |
| G7 | D.E.T.R | Deputy to the Secretary |
| SEO | D.E.T.R | Head of a Witness Team |
| SEO | D.E.T.R | Office Services Manager |
| SEO | Cabinet Office | Website and IT Manager |
| SIO | Cabinet Office | Press Officer |
| HEO(D) | Cabinet Office | Analysis branch member |
| EO | Cabinet Office | Deputy Office Manager |

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the likely savings to his Department arising from the transfer of current responsibilities for food safety to the proposed Food Standards Agency. [47591]

Mr. Rooker: Resources currently devoted to food safety and standards work will be transferred to the Food Standards Agency when it is established. There will therefore be no savings to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Poultry

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of permitting the use of vaccines for poultry which are permitted for use in other EU member states. [47446]

Mr. Rooker: Vaccines for poultry which are licensed in another member state may be the subject of applications for marketing authorisations in the United Kingdom. In cases where vaccines have already been authorised in accordance with Directive 81/851/EEC in another member state, marketing authorisations may be granted in the United Kingdom by a process of mutual recognition.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require imported turkey meat to be labelled with details of (a) vaccines which have been administered to such poultry and (b) vaccines which have been administered which are not approved for use in the United Kingdom. [47447]

Mr. Rooker: I have no powers to do so. The vaccines in question will have been authorised in the member state in which they were administered.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require imported poultry meat to be labelled with information about whether the meat has been subject to residue testing. [47451]

Mr. Rooker: No. Residue testing is a legal requirement for all EU member states and for third countries wishing to export here.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require imported poultry meat to be clearly labelled to show if (a) meat and bone meal and (b) animal proteins have been used in the feeding of such poultry. [47445]

Mr. Rooker: I have no such intention. However, when appropriate, UK producers and retailers are free to provide additional indications voluntarily on domestic production where they consider this will improve marketability of their products.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require imported poultry meat which is packed or processed in the United Kingdom to carry on-pack information about (a) its source and (b) its compliance or otherwise with United Kingdom health and welfare standards. [47443]

Mr. Rooker: Food labelling regulations require an indication of the place of origin of a food if failure to give such particulars might mislead a purchaser to a material degree about its true origin or provenance. In the case of processed foods, the place of origin is generally taken as the place it last underwent a substantial change.

There are no proposals to extend labelling requirements to cover compliance with national animal health and welfare standards.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require imported poultry meat to be labelled with its country of origin. [47442]

Mr. Rooker: The labels on pre-packaged poultrymeat must give an indication of its country of origin when imported from outside the Community. The UK is in the process of taking steps to require this information to appear on labels, tickets or notices near where unpackaged poultry is offered for sale.

There are no plans to require poultrymeat of Community origin to indicate its country of origin on labelling, although all poultrymeat produced in the Community must include the registered number of the slaughterhouse or cutting plant which supplied the product (except where cutting and boning is carried out at the place of sale). These registered numbers are pre-fixed with the initials of the member state concerned.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that the charge for residue testing under European Union Directive 96/43/EC does not exceed the costs of testing. [47452]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 186, for background to this issue. He will wish to note, however, that the charge per tonne of poultrymeat is incorrectly stated as £1,0461; it should have read £1.0461.

The non-implementation of the requirement of Council Directive 96/43/EC to impose the minimum charge on the poultry industry is not an option. We have assured the industry that we will seek to re-negotiate this charge should the opportunity arise.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the import into the United Kingdom of meat from poultry which has been fed on meat and bone meal. [47444]

Mr. Rooker: No. The ban on meat and bone meal in poultry rations in the United Kingdom is to prevent cross contamination of ruminant feed with meat and bone meal incorporated into feed for other farm animals. It does not have any bearing on the poultry meat itself and there is therefore no basis on which it would be reasonable to extend these controls to imports.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will restrict the import of poultry meat which has been subject to antibiotic growth enhancers. [47449]

Mr. Rooker: Additives, including antibiotic growth promoters, incorporated in animal feedingstuffs are controlled throughout the European Union under Council Directive 70/524/EEC. This provides that no additive may be used in animal feed unless it meets a requirement that, at the level permitted in feedingstuffs, it does not adversely affect human or animal health or the environment. Approved additives may be freely marketed in the European Union and there would be no justification for restricting the import of poultrymeat which had been subject to approved antibiotic growth promoters.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to restrict antibiotic growth enhancers in poultry production. [47448]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are giving careful consideration to recommendations made by the Agriculture Committee and the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology which concern the use of antibiotic growth promoters. Neither Committee made a specific recommendation relating to the use of antibiotic growth promoters by the poultry industry. The Government are advised on this issue by the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee (VPC). In addition, the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food is reviewing the food safety implications of antimicrobial resistance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures she has introduced to conduct audits of the disability living allowance reviews and appeals in respect of particular medical examiners. [46292]

Mr. Denham: All the doctors who complete medical examinations for the Benefits Agency Medical Services in connection with Disability Living Allowance reviews have their work subjected to regular audit. Random samples of statistically significant numbers of cases from the work of all doctors are examined for the quality of the history, examination findings and the opinions given, according to nationally determined standards. When the quality of the work of an individual doctor is questioned this will be subject to targeted audit and remedial action taken to remedy any deficiencies identified. Similarly, the work of newly appointed doctors is subject to targeted audit until the auditors are satisfied with the quality of work being produced.

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the likely yield less charges of an approved personal pension plan based solely on rebated national insurance contributions; and on what assumptions of future growth that estimate is based. [47595]

Mr. Denham: Over time, an appropriate personal pension plan based solely on rebated national insurance contributions should yield after charges an amount broadly equivalent to the additional pension derived from SERPS. The reduction in yield allowed for in the rebate structure as a result of charges, based on the assumptions used by the Government Actuary's Department (GAD) in calculating the age-related rebates, is estimated at 1.4 per cent.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the percentage of employees in each decile of employees' incomes who do not contribute to personal or occupational pensions. [46491]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

The table contains information based on the 1996 General Household Survey (GHS), using deciles of the earnings distribution derived from the GHS sample.

Percentage of employees who are not current members of an occupational or personal pension scheme, by earnings decile

| 2 | 72 |
| 3 | 63 |
| 4 | 52 |
| 5 | 41 |
| 6 | 29 |
| 7 | 24 |
| 8 | 15 |
| 9 | 10 |
| 10 | 9 |

Notes:

1. Percentages rounded to the nearest 1 per cent.
2. Excludes some individuals who did not know if they were members, but thought it possible.
3. Includes people who are not current members, but have been members in the past and therefore have some deferred pension rights.
4. Information relates to earnings not income.

The pensions review is considering ways of encouraging people to contribute to second pensions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of the basic retirement pension in 1999–2000 if uprated in April 1999 in line with (a) prices and (b) average earnings. [45825]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 15 June 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Forecast expenditure on basic Retirement Pension (RP) is £32 billion in 1998/99. The additional cost of uprating by earnings in April 1998 is provided in the table.

The additional cost of uprating retirement pension and linked benefits by earnings in 1998/99

| | Contributory RP only | Contributory RP and linked benefits |
|---|---|---|
| Gross cost | 170 | 200 |
| Means-tested benefit offset | –40 | –50 |
| Net cost | 120 | 150 |

Notes:

1. Forecast expenditure on RP has been taken from the 1998 Social Security Departmental Report rounded to the nearest £ billion. Government expenditure plans for future years (1999/2000–2001/2002) will be published after the completion of the Comprehensive Spending Review.
2. Estimates in the table are rounded to the nearest £10 million. Totals may not agree due to rounding.
3. National Insurance Fund benefit costs were estimated by the Government Actuary's Department.
4. Means-tested benefit offsets were calculated using the 1995/96 Family Resources Survey and the May 1996 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, both uprated to 1998/99 prices, benefits and earnings levels, and calibrated to the forecasts underlying the 1998 Departmental Report.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the potential impact of rebate-only approved personal pension plans on future means-tested social security entitlements and expenditure. [47730]

Mr. Denham: Based on the assumption used by the Government Actuary in "Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes Review of Certain Contracting-out Terms" (Cm3888) an individual investing only the National Insurance Contribution rebate in an appropriate personal pension (APP), would receive a pension broadly equivalent to that which they would otherwise get from the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS). The actual amount of pension payable would depend on the costs and performance of each individual pension scheme.

Both the annuity derived from a rebate-only APP and the additional pension derived from SERPS are taken fully into account in claims for means tested benefits. So the numbers of future rebate-only APPs taken out in place of SERPS should have little or no impact on future means tested Social Security entitlements and expenditure.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information she has collated on lapse rates from approved personal plans by (a) provider, (b) region and (c) socio-economic group; and what extra information on lapse rates she has sought in the course of the Pensions Review. [47727]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. As part of the Pensions Review, we have sought information from the Personal Investment Authority (PIA). PIA figures state that for all personal pensions sold through company representatives, approximately one third had lapsed within three years. Approximately one quarter of those sold through independent financial advisers had lapsed within three years.

We are seeking further information on lapse rates for the Pensions Review.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many approved personal pension plans were active in each of the last four years; how many were terminated before retirement; and how many new plans were taken out. [47598]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the number of occupational pensions subject to transfer to personal pension plans in the last five years; how many of these transfers were caused by early leavers transfers; and whether the past practices of early leaver benefits will be covered in the Pensions Review. [47593]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available relates to contracted-out schemes and is set out in the table.

The Report of the Pension Provision Group covered some aspects of early leaver benefits and we are considering this Report as part of our Pensions Review. We will publish a Green Paper later this year.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent present rules for means-tested benefits include paid-up or lapsed personal plans in the calculation of savings; and what plans she has to review these rules. [47731]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The value of funds held in a personal pension scheme are fully disregarded, as is the value of the right to receive a personal pension at a future date. There are no plans to review the disregard.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the total number of active approved personal plans which are financed solely by rebated national insurance contributions in each of the last four years. [47594]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many subject access requests were received by the Contributions Agency in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998 to date; and if she will make a statement. [47367]

Mr. Denham: The number of subject access requests received by the Contributions Agency is:

| Year | Requests |
| 1995–96 | 13,229 |
| 1996–97 | 22,586 |
| 1998 to date | 5,993 |

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of delay caused by the introduction of the new computer at the Contributions Agency; and if she will make a statement. [46752]

Mr. Denham: The introduction of the new computer system at the Contributions Agency is a matter for George Bertram, the Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with further details.

Letter from Alan Fisher to Mr. Peter L. Pike, dated 25 June 1998:

George Bertram is the Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency and is responsible for answering questions about all operational matters relating to the Agency and their new National Insurance Recording System 2 (NIRS2) computer system. In the absence of Mr. Bertram, I have been asked to reply to your question about our assessment of the delay caused by the introduction of the new NIRS2 system and to make a statement.

Contributions Agency and Andersen Consulting are committed to ensuring, that by working together, every effort is made to introduce the new system at the earliest possible occasion whilst minimising any disruptive impact on our customers.

Our plans assess possible impact on our customers in the event of delay and outline the steps that will mitigate such impacts. We regularly review these plans to make sure that they reflect the current status of system implementation and have a strategy to inform both customers and the pensions industry as to how delays in the introduction of the system will affect them.

In a very small number of cases complex Retirement Pension and Widows Benefit claims will be finalised when supplementary information is available from the new system. Payment will be made meanwhile on the basis of available information.

Our service to pension providers and scheme administrators has also been affected, but we are in close touch with the Industry and have set up direct contact facilities for the personal pension providers in order to identify and resolve issues relating to policy holders.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will place a copy of the code of practice, which relates to data matching by her Department with respect to benefit fraud, in the Library. [47368]

Mr. Field: The use of data matching is an important weapon in the fight against benefit fraud. We are now looking to extend this technique across Government through the use of powers contained in the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Act 1997. We want to extend data matching in a way which places significant additional obstacles in the path of fraudsters whilst at the same time ensuring that citizens' rights are properly protected. Consequently, these powers will not be used until the DSS Code of Practice for Data Matching has been published.

We will be seeking the views of Liberty and the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux on the draft Code of Practice. We shall also be placing a copy of the consultation document in the Library of the House, and the views of hon Members will be most welcome.

We anticipate that the Code will be published by early October.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to use data matching techniques with respect to benefit fraud which require access to medical records, as provided for by the Audit Commission Bill 1998. [47369]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Audit Commission Act 1998 does not confer powers on my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State to gain access to medical records, whether in support of a data matching exercise or otherwise.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the initiatives undertaken by her Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47059]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Area based initiatives, including Action Zones and pilot schemes, which place a premium on local partnership and co-ordination are a key feature of many of our plans for the future. They also form the basis of much of the progress we have made in improving services and targeting facilities, resources and opportunities.

We are involved in a number of centrally sponsored pilot schemes throughout the country and these are listed. In addition, local managers are encouraged to develop initiatives in partnership with local authorities that promote improved services for the customer.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her policy in relation to benefit payments in respect of housing being purchased under rental purchase schemes; and if she will make a statement. [47194]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Provisions already exist, within the Housing Benefit scheme, to cover payments under rental purchase agreements.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average housing benefit paid per dwelling by region for (a) council housing, (b) housing associations and (c) private rented properties. [47204]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The latest information available is set out in the table.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the conclusions of the review of the Child Support Agency. [47901]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have been looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support scheme to see where improvements can be made and we will shortly bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals.

Pensioners

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage and number of (a) pensioners and (b) pensioners on income support are (i) in receipt of disability living allowance, (ii) in receipt of attendance allowance, (iii) registered blind and (iv) registered deaf. [47917]

Minimum Wage

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the earnings disregards limits for means-tested benefits will be revised to take account of the announcement of minimum wage rates. [47732]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Friend to my written answer to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 620.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will express the present earnings disregards limits for each means-tested benefit in terms of permitted hours of work under the proposed minimum wage rates. [47733]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Earnings disregards rules achieve a balance: encouraging those people who wish to work to do some part-time work without creating a disincentive to take up full-time work, or increasing their dependency on benefit. The information requested is set out in the tables.

National minimum wage—basic rate

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when her Department will start to review the cases of people subject to the Benefit Integrity Project prior to 9 February. [47566]

Mr. Denham: The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 25 June 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when her Department will start to review the cases of people subject to the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) prior to 9 February

Ministers announced on 17 June that certain cases decided under the BIP before 9 February would be re-examined. The cases affected are those where the decision to reduce or remove benefit was made on the basis of the customer's statement alone, and where the customer has not exercised their right to ask for a review of the decision. The Benefits Agency is aware of the commitment to bring this in as quickly as possible. Work is already underway to identify how we might best proceed, recognising the particular sensitivities surrounding this work.

The intention is to write to customers giving them the opportunity to apply for their case to be re-examined. At the same time, we need to notify them that there is no guarantee of a positive outcome to a review of the BIP decision, but we need to do that in a way that does not deter them from applying for a re-examination if that is their choice. We want to consult disability organisations about the wording of the letter and the proposed procedures, all of which will have to be cleared by legal advisors within the Department. It is vital that we get this right and that, of course, will take time.

The Agency is currently recruiting additional staff from mainstream Disability Living Allowance to deal with this work, and again we are looking at this to ensure that these moves have the minimum impact on our other customers.

I hope you find this information helpful and that it explains why we are not yet in a position to set a firm start date for the exercise. I will, of course, write to you again as soon as the matter has been decided.

Benefits Agency Medical Services

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specialist training and guidance on (a) fibromyalgia, (b) cystic fibrosis, (c) ME/CFS and (d) MS is offered to examining medical practitioners employed by the Benefits Agency Medical Services. [46520]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefits Agency Medical Services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 25 June 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what specialist training and guidance on (a) fibromyalgia, (b) cystic fibrosis, (c) ME/CFS and (d) MS is offered to examining medical practitioners employed by Benefits Agency Medical Services (BAMS).

It may be helpful if I explain that all BAMS' medical examiners are required to hold a full medical degree and must be fully registered medical practitioners. BAMS also require their employed doctors to have at least three years post registration experience, including one year in general practice and at least six months experience of psychiatry or rehabilitation/occupational medicine. Alternatively BAMS require five years post registration experience as a principal (or equivalent) in general practice.

The role of the BAMS doctor is to assess the effects of a customer's disability and to provide advice to the Adjudication Officer, who will consider all the evidence available and determine entitlement to benefit.

All BAMS doctors are given additional training in carrying out this specialised type of assessment. As fibromyalgia, cystic fibrosis, ME/CFS and MS are commonly encountered conditions they are covered in the training. Guidance is given to examining doctors relevant to the analysis of the needs of people with disabilities and this is published in the Disability Handbook. This guidance is based on the consensus view of the medical profession at the present time and is periodically updated. BAMS doctors are also expected to keep abreast of developments in the medical field. Where deficiencies of knowledge or understanding are identified, via our routine monitoring of casework, relevant guidance or training is provided on an individual basis.

I hope you find this reply is helpful.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evaluation his Department has made of the spray suppression procedures for heavy goods vehicles in (a) Portugal, (b) France, (c) Belgium, (d) Germany and (e) Holland. [47768]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None; however, spray from goods vehicles is a problem recognised by several EU member states. Discussions are planned by the European Commission to look at the whole problem.

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to deal with problems arising from spray emanating from heavy goods vehicles; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current procedures; and if he will make a statement. [47766]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The UK has led the way in the development of spray suppression equipment. Indeed, the standards for EC Directive 91/226EC, on spray suppression, were largely based on the UK requirements. Further development of spray suppression devices has proved difficult because of the problems in accurately measuring spray which makes the assessment of the efficiency of the equipment difficult to gauge. However, spray from goods vehicles is a problem recognised by several EU Member States. Discussions are planned by the European Commission to look at the whole problem.

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the findings of the research undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory on the measurement of spray from vehicles and its effect on vision. [47767]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A published version of the Report on the research carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory into spray suppression will be available within the next six months. A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Nuclear Discharges

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what new measures he proposes to improve the monitoring of discharges into the Irish Sea from the United Kingdom's nuclear facilities. [47695]

Angela Eagle: Radioactive discharges from UK nuclear sites are subject to rigorous and stringent monitoring requirements under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. Nuclear site operators must take and analyse samples of effluent for radioactivity.

The Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Action (SEPA) take independent samples for analysis as a check. The operators' results and those of the environment agencies are made available to the public.

In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) has carried out extensive monitoring of the marine environment since the early 1960s and each year the monitoring programme is scrutinised to ensure that it is effectively targeted. Monitoring methodology is constantly reviewed, so that the most appropriate techniques are used. Research work is also carried out into the various chemical and physical processes that affect the pathways of radioactivity back to man.

A summary of the main findings of the Environment Agency's monitoring programmes is published annually in a report called Radioactivity in the Environment. The last report published covered the year 1996. The results of the radioactivity monitoring programmes undertaken by MAFF and SEPA are published jointly in a report called Radioactivity in Food and the Environment. The last report published covered the year 1996. Copies of both reports can be found in the Library of the House.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives his Department is supporting for pensioners' concessionary fares for travel by bus and rail. [47677]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Concessionary fares are a matter for individual local authorities. All but a few have a scheme for pensioners which covers travel by bus; a number of schemes provide for travel on local trains. The franchise agreements which govern the provision of rail services protect the price and the benefits of the Senior Railcard, which offers a one-third discount on a wide range of rail fares nation-wide. The question of concessionary fares is being considered as part of the review of integrated transport policy.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what measures are planned by his Department to achieve (a) the EU 12.5 per cent. target and (b) the national 20 per cent. target to reduce carbon dioxide emissions in each of the sectors identified in the European Commission's First Analysis report; [47575]

(2) to what extent his target of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010 will be realised by combined heat and power generation. [47576]

Angela Eagle: We intend to issue a consultation paper in the summer on policy options for delivering our climate change targets. This will focus on our 12.5 per cent. legally binding commitment from Kyoto as well as considering how we might move beyond that towards our domestic aim of a 20 per cent. reduction in $CO_2$ emissions by 2010. We will be looking at the scope for savings from improved energy efficiency by business and in the home; lower transport emissions; and an increase in the electricity generated from renewables. Combined heat and power (CHP) will also play an important part in helping us meet our targets. We have published a report which shows the economic potential for CHP is between 10,000 and 17,000 Megawatts (MW), depending on the assumptions made on future energy prices, users' required rate of return on investment, and other factors. Every 1,000 MW of CHP can reduce carbon emissions by up to 1 million tonnes per year. We will set a firm target as part of the new UK Climate Change Programme.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he proposes to promote investment in combined heat and power generation; and if he will make a statement. [47577]

Angela Eagle: The government strongly promote the widest use of combined heat and power (CHP), for its environmental, business and other benefits to the country. CHP is encouraged through my Department's Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme, the Energy Saving Trust, the Private Public Partnership, the Capital Receipts Initiative, and other programmes.

The Government's provisional proposals for electricity generation consent, following the Review of Energy Sources, reflect the importance they attach to the environmental and other benefits of CHP.

Local Authority Bus Companies

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give those local authority bus companies whose finances are sufficiently sound freedom from controls in respect of borrowing for capital investment. [48012]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The only such controls concern the terms on which Public Transport Companies may borrow from the owning local authority; there are no plans for change. Otherwise there are no controls on borrowing by a PTC on the strength of the business.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46683]

Angela Eagle: Each of the queries has been divided into regular surveys (carried out annually unless otherwise stated) and ad-hoc or one-off surveys. They are listed by alphabetic order of the division involved in the survey. 'Potential New Policies' is a wide brief—all reviews/ research into guidance have been included. Surveys begun prior to 1 May 1997 but not completed until after that date are included with a note; some of the later research is not yet completed.

The majority of these surveys are not to the general public, but to the Local Authorities and Businesses concerned in the use and implementation of policies; they do all, however, relate to the perceived reaction from the public. Some of the listed surveys relate to just one survey carried out, others to two or more surveys carried out under the same project.

(i) regular surveys

Making a Corporate Commitment—measures top management attitudes to energy efficiency policies

Survey of Municipal Waste Management—monitors progress towards targets set for recovery and recycling of municipal waste

(i) regular surveys

Deflators for Construction Output (quarterly)—this survey monitors current policy and will advise future policy in the construction industry both environmentally and economically Impact Assessment of the Best Practice Programme on Buildings—monitoring trends & attitudes to maximise the effectiveness of energy efficiency initiatives

(ii) ad-hoc surveys

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the rail links between Ebbsfleet and Charing Cross to carry both Channel Tunnel and other services between the completion of stages 1 and 2 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link; and if he will make a statement. [48200]

Ms Glenda Jackson: After completion of the first section of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link to Fawkham Junction, scheduled for 2003, Eurostar services will run not between Ebbsfleet and Charing Cross but via the Section 1 infrastructure and then existing domestic lines between Fawkham Junction and Waterloo. These domestic lines will have been subjected to upgrading works to increase capacity to 4 trains per hour in each direction and, as a result, there will be no adverse impact on existing domestic passenger services.

Gloucestershire Structure Plan

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the South West Regional Planning Conference regarding Gloucestershire's Structure Plan; if he plans to accept Gloucestershire's revised allocation of 50,000 houses between 1991 and 2011; and if he will make a statement. [47748]

Mr. Caborn: The then Secretary of State issued Regional Planning Guidance for the South West (RPG 10) in 1994 which included a provision for Gloucestershire of 53,000 houses on the advice of the South West Regional Planning Conference. The Conference is currently preparing a draft strategy for the period to 2016 and officials of the Government Office for the South West attend as observers on behalf of the Secretary of State.

The requirement for housing will be tested at the forthcoming Structure Plan inquiry which is due to begin on 8 September.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Railtrack's application for an order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 in respect of the Thameslink 2000 Project. [48434]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions announced on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–84, that agreement had been reached on a statement of principles that will ensure the completion of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. The new Thameslink 2000 station is an integral part of work on the CTRL at St. Pancras and in order to take full account of the continuing detailed contractual and financial arrangements the Secretary of State has decided to defer until 29 January 1999 the date by which he must give notice of an intention to hold a public inquiry into the proposed Railtrack (Thameslink 2000) Order. I hope that it will be possible to take a decision before that date and it will not be delayed unnecessarily. London and Continental Railways and Railtrack remain contracted to complete the Thameslink 2000 Project, subject to obtaining the necessary consents.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lyric Theatre

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will publish Sir Richard Eyre's report on the future of lyric theatre in London. [48433]

Mr. Chris Smith: Sir Richard Eyre's report on the future of lyric theatre in London is published today and copies have been laid before both Houses.

Seaside Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 1 June 1998, Official Report, column 45, which aspects of British seaside tourism the forum working groups are examining. [46094]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Domestic Working Group is looking particularly at resort regeneration, but as with all the other Working Groups, much of the work is as relevant to seaside tourism as to other parts of the industry. For example, the Domestic Tourism Working Group is also looking at ways of improving standards of accommodation and hospitality; meeting consumer needs; how the domestic market is packaged and promoted; the image of England as a holiday destination; the dissemination of information; barriers to taking domestic holidays; and visitor management.

The Working Groups, their Chairmen and summaries of their areas of interest are as follows:

List of tourism forum working groups

Business Tourism Working Group

Chair: Michael Hirst, Chairman, Joint Hospitality Industry Congress. Looking at what action might be taken to enhance the contribution of business tourism to the UK tourism industry and the wider economy.

Communications Strategy Working Group

Presentation of Heritage and Culture Group

Chairman: David Quarmby, BTA/ETB Chairman. Not a Forum Working Group as such; pre-dates creation of Forum. Looking at presentation of our heritage and culture, especially to attract overseas visitors.

Visitor Attractions Working Group

Chairman: John Lee, ETB Board member and Chairman of the Association of Leading Visitor Attractions. Set up to identify ways to maximise the value to tourism of the visitor attractions sector.

Whitehall Issues Working Group

Chairman: Ken Robinson, Director of the Tourism Society and Operations Director of the New Millennium Experience Company. Established to consider how policy issues affecting the industry in various Government Departments might be influenced, but has not met.

Widening Access Working Group

Chairman: Jeremy Logie, Chief Executive, British Hospitality Association. Considering what action the industry might take to improve accessibility to all people with a desire to experience UK tourism.

Strategic Planning Working Group

Chaired by the Secretary of State. Looking at the development of tourism in the longer term.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what overseas marketing the British Tourist Authority has carried out of British seaside resorts as tourism destinations in the past three years. [46720]

Mr. Tom Clarke: In the last three years, the BTA has conducted hundreds of different campaigns and marketing activities, many of which have a seaside element. Seaside resorts feature in BTA's own print and in the print of others, distributed to overseas customers through BTA's network of 43 overseas offices.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47053]

Mr. Tom Clarke: This Department has not undertaken any such initiatives since 1 May 1997.

Single Occupancy Supplement

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will introduce legislation to limit or abolish the single occupancy supplement in hotels in the United Kingdom. [48006]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The Government have no plans to introduce such legislation.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about the single occupancy supplement; and if he will list them. [48005]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 29 June 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have received a number of representations from hon. Members, members of the public and organisations, including the Single Travellers Action Group. Ministerial colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry have received similar representations.

Sustainable Tourism Initiatives

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has to promote sustainable tourism initiatives. [47699]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Government have recently undertaken a nationwide consultation exercise on sustainable tourism. We have received over 300 responses and these are currently being analysed. They will feed into the development of the new strategy for tourism which my Department will launch later this year and will help update the UK Sustainable Development Strategy which will be published by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, also later this year.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if his review of the future funding of the BBC will include consideration of a scheme for a universal pensioners' concessionary television licence fee. [47679]

Mr. Fisher: The forthcoming review of the arrangements for funding the Corporation after March 2002 will include a detailed consideration of all the options for concessions, both for pensioners and others.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46690]

Mr. Chris Smith: We have undertaken consultation exercises on the following subjects. It is our policy to place the results of the consultations in the Library where appropriate.

Broadcasting Events of National Significance (on criteria to guide the listing of events under the Broadcasting Act 1990)

"The People's Lottery" for comments on the Bill and later for general comments

Access to Museums and Galleries—Consultation Paper on Draft Code of Practice

Television: the Digital Future (jointly issued by DCMS and the DTI's Radiocommunications Agency)

Provision of an additional bank holiday to mark the Millennium

Definition of a British Film (included in the Film Policy Review Group Report)

Tourism—Towards Sustainability.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what arrangements have been made to allow the New Opportunities Fund and the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts to undertake preparatory work before the passage of the National Lottery Bill [Lords]. [48315]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Lottery Bill, currently awaiting Royal Assent, will establish the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) and the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts (NESTA).

NOF will be the distribution body for the new good cause for health, education and the environment. In its first three initiatives, it will support healthy living centres, out of school hours learning and childcare, and training in information and communications for teachers and public library staff, along with the creation of digital learning materials.

The aim of NESTA will be to promote talent, creativity and innovation by helping talented people reach their full potential, helping turn good ideas into marketable products and services, and raising public appreciation of the value of science, technology and the arts.

Parliamentary approval for the preparatory costs of these new services will be sought in the main Estimate for the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (Class X, Vote 1, Section 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £525,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47362]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The Department has responsibility for the following, which could be described as public registers:

Statutory List of Buildings of Architectural or Historic Interest

Schedule of Ancient Monuments.

DEFENCE

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas for which the Government intend to apply an exemption to the right of access to personal data, as defined in the Data Protection Bill 1998; and if he will make a statement. [47381]

Mr. Spellar: Since the Ministry of Defence is a large organisation which holds many different types of records on individuals, a number of the exemptions contained in the Bill will apply from time to time. One of the exemptions, the Combat Effectiveness exemption contained in Schedule 7 part 2, applies exclusively to the Armed Forces. This exemption is unlikely to be widely employed. The MOD also intend to apply the exemption in Section 27 of the Bill, which has as its purpose the safeguarding of national security. We anticipate that most Service personnel will have access to much of the information we hold about them, providing it is held on a relevant filing system as defined in the Bill, and provided that granting access does not compromise the rights of third parties.

Horizon 2000 Frigates

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the total cost of the project definition, development and production of the full complement of Horizon 2000 common new generation frigates to the Royal Navy; what were the original estimates; when the acceptance of the first of class by the Fleet is due to take place; and what was the date originally planned. [47807]

Mr. Spellar: It is currently expected that 12 Horizon class frigates will be ordered for the Royal Navy, although this is, of course, subject to the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review. The Horizon programme MOU signed by the three nations (UK, France and Italy) in 1994 originally envisaged an in service date of 2002. The current tri-national in service date is 2004, although this is kept under review. The estimated programme cost to the UK is commercially confidential, but we expect the entire programme, including full production of 22 ships for the three nations, to remain within the original cost estimate of some £6 billion to £8 billion. The contract for completion of the design and build of the three first of class Horizon frigates, i.e. one for each nation, is expected to be placed next year.

Exercise Proper Watch

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the scenario of the exercise, Proper Watch, in 1989; on what dates and where it took place; if the United States Department of Defense took part; and if he will place a copy of the results of the exercise in the Library. [46819]

Dr. Reid: Exercise Proper Watch took place at RAF Bentwaters in May 1989. The exercise tested the procedures in place for responding to the crash of a US transport aircraft carrying nuclear weapons. The United States response forces participated in this exercise. A classified report on the exercise does exist, but for the reasons my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence gave to the hon. Member on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 470, and under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice of Access to Government Information, I am not prepared to release the report.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 437, if he will assess the advantages of publishing the digest of the submissions by (a) Service and (b) Ministry of Defence civilian personnel earlier than the publication of the White Paper on the Strategic Defence Review. [46816]

Mr. George Robertson: A digest of submissions from Service personnel and MOD civilian staff to the Strategic Defence Review is being prepared. It will provide a context for some of the decisions in the Review. I therefore see no advantage in publishing the digest earlier than the White Paper.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 569, for what reasons it was not possible to publish the Strategic Defence Review in the first half of the year. [48167]

Mr. George Robertson: It was not possible to publish the Strategic Defence Review in the first half of the year because final decisions had not been taken.

Permanent Joint Headquarters

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) operations and (b) exercises Permanent Joint HQ has (i) planned and (ii) taken an active role in executing since it was established. [47300]

Mr. George Robertson: Since its establishment in April 1996 the Permanent Joint Headquarters has planned 31 operations and overseen the execution of 23. It has also participated in 15 major exercises, of which it had the lead in planning 6.

Bosnia

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date British ground forces were first deployed in Bosnia as part of UNPROFOR. [47299]

Mr. George Robertson: The main body of the United Kingdom ground forces were first deployed in Bosnia on 18 November 1992. However, reconnaissance, activation and advance parties had arrived several weeks earlier.

Police Training

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's involvement in international police training, with particular reference to that in countries seeking to re-establish democratic systems; and what is his Department's budget for this work. [47301]

Mr. George Robertson: The Ministry of Defence gives assistance to the police forces of other countries from time to time, mainly through the provision of places on training courses in the United Kingdom or through training by members of the UK Armed Forces.

Requests for assistance are considered in the light of the Government's wider foreign policy, and we take account of the human rights and ethical records of the requesting nation's police and armed forces. All training provided by the MOD reflects the principles of the rule of law, good government, civilian control of military forces and support to democracy.

My Department has no budget dedicated specifically to international police training, although on occasion overseas police assistance has been funded from the Defence Military Assistance Fund.

RAF Chicksands

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to allow empty houses at the RAF base at Chicksands in Bedfordshire to be used for local authority housing. [47702]

Mr. Spellar: The potential Service requirement for vacant Service Families Accommodation at RAF Chicksands is currently under review. A decision on this will be made once the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review is known. Based on this decision Annington Homes, which own the properties, will be in a position to decide their future use.

Defence Committee Report

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make his response to the Second report from the Defence Committee on the draft Visiting Forces and International Headquarters (Application of Law) (Amendment) Order 1998 (HC 521). [47611]

Mr. George Robertson: The response was sent to the Committee yesterday.

Defence Estate (London)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce the defence estate in London. [48484]

Mr. Spellar: We have been considering the scope for further rationalisation of our property holdings, in London and elsewhere, in the context of the Strategic Defence Review. In continuation of that work, my Department will be drawing up a Strategic Development Plan for the defence estate in the Greater London area. Work on the plan will involve a thorough examination of site values and costs, linked to their condition and utilisation, with a view to identifying opportunities to meet defence requirements more cost-effectively. Any specific proposals for unit moves that may arise from this work will be subject to further study and consultation in the normal way. Existing studies, such as those relating to RAF Northolt and RAF Uxbridge, will be fully taken into account.

Challenger 2

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rotherham of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 72, if he will make a statement on the current status of the Challenger 2 programme. [48596]

Mr. Spellar: I am pleased to announce that The Royal Scots Dragoon Guards have become the first regiment to be fully equipped with the Challenger 2 main battle tank. This is a significant milestone in the Challenger 2 programme.

Emergency Provisions Act

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she intends to publish the report by Mr. J. J. Rowe QC on the operation during 1997 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996; and what conclusions she has reached concerning the future of the Act in the light of Mr. Rowe's report. [48481]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have received Mr. Rowe's report. It is being published today and copies are being placed in the Library of both Houses. I note that Mr. Rowe is of the firm view that the provisions of the Act are still needed, and am reassured that he concludes that the security forces have operated the powers properly and carefully.

Mr. Rowe fulfils a very important role and I am most grateful to him for his work. The Government agree that the powers are still necessary; Parliament too has endorsed this view by the enactment in April of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1998, which extends the life of the 1996 Act and obviates the need this year for Continuance debates.

However, under powers vested in me by section 62 of the 1996 Act I may, by order approved by resolution of each House, lapse any of the temporary provisions of the Act at any time. Therefore I will, as always, keep the continuance of the provisions under review.

Mr. Rowe's Report on the operation of the Act during 1997 will inform Parliament's considerations when the Act, or any of its provisions, is next debated.

Training and Employment Agency

Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets have been set for the Training and Employment Agency for Northern Ireland for the period 1998 to 2001. [48482]

Mr. Worthington: The following targets have been set for the Agency:

1. All 16 and 17-year-olds leaving school will be offered the opportunity of a training place; 65 per cent. of those leaving the Jobskills programme will transfer to employment or to other education or training opportunities; and 65 per cent. of entrants to the programme will achieve a qualification at NVQ level 2 or equivalent.
2. 25 per cent. of 16 to 24-year-olds involved in an Agency training programme will initially enter a Modern Apprenticeship or transfer to a Modern Apprenticeship on completion of level 2 training.
3. To publish a skills survey each year of the Corporate Plan.
4. To ensure that CDP projects increase the achievement rate of their agreed productivity targets from 65 per cent. in 1998–99 to 85 per cent. in 2000–2001.
5. To increase the number of local organisations achieving Investors in People (IiP) status from 120 to 300.
6. To ensure that overall Agency spend in Training and Social Needs areas is no less than 60 per cent. of Agency programme budget.
7. To achieve a score of 500 against the Business Excellence Model by the year 2001.
8. To maintain the Agency's IiP standard and accreditation following reassessment in August 1998.
9. The Agency will contribute to the achievement of the national targets set for New Deal in terms of employment outcomes and employability. We will publish details as soon as they become clear.
10. The Agency will set targets for lifelong learning on an annual basis as the initiatives under lifelong learning emerge and develop.

Copies of the Targets have been placed in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Service Delivery

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his plans for improving the delivery of public services. [48477]

Dr. David Clark: I am pleased to inform the House that I am announcing today, as part of my wider Better Government initiative, the launch of Service First—the new Charter programme. Service First is the Government's programme to improve public service delivery. It places a new emphasis on promoting responsiveness, quality, effectiveness, and cross-sectoral working. It has been designed to meet the real needs of people, following an extensive and wide-ranging consultation exercise over the last twelve months into the future of the Citizen's Charter programme. Details of the new programme have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Authorities (Pilot Schemes)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the pilot schemes announced since 1 May 1997 by his Department that involve local authorities in a lead or partnership capacity; if he will list each of the local authorities involved in each case; and what revenue and capital funding each local authority will receive through the pilot in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000 and (iv) 2000–2001. [46391]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 18 June 1998]: The Better Government for Older People programme, launched on 5 June, aims to improve public services for older people by better meeting their needs, listening to their views, and encouraging and recognising their contribution. The programme seeks to promote partnership at both a national and local level and is being co-funded by a consortium of five organisations—the Cabinet Office (OPS), Age Concern, the Anchor Trust, the Carnegie Third Age Programme, and the Warwick University Local Authorities Research Consortium.

The programme has established 28 local pilots across the UK. Each pilot is led by a local authority but includes partners from central Government and the voluntary, community and private sectors. The pilot authorities are:

Bolton Metropolitan Borough Council
Bury Metropolitan Borough Council
Coventry City Council
Devon County Council
Hartlepool Borough Council
London Borough of Hackney
London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham
London Borough of Harrow
Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea
London Borough of Lambeth
Middlesbrough Borough Council
City of Newcastle upon Tyne
North Yorkshire County Council
Nottinghamshire County Council
Oxfordshire County Council
Sheffield City Council
Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council
Warwick District Council
Watford Borough Council
Waverley Borough Council
Wolverhampton Metropolitan Borough Council
City of York Council
Scottish Borders Council
South Lanarkshire Council
Stirling Council
Isle of Anglesey County Council
Rhondda Cynon Taff County Borough Council
North Down Inter-Agency Partnership.

The aim of the programme is to develop best practice. As such the pilots will receive no revenue or capital funding. However, small grants, or 'seed money' may be available to fund specific activities aimed at encouraging community involvement in the pilots.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46688]

The Attorney-General: There have been no such projects in my Department.

PRIME MINISTER

Policy Reviews

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Prime Minister how many of the policy reviews initiated by the Government since May 1997 have been completed within the planned timetable. [45443]

The Prime Minister: The timetables of Government reviews are often subject to change to take account of changes in remit or circumstance and are a matter for the responsible Ministers. An up to date list of Government reviews has been placed in the Library. Of the 146 reviews, 63 have already been completed, 40 within the originally planned time-scale.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the summits and EU ministerial meetings over which the United Kingdom has presided in 1998; what discussions on the millennium compliance of computer systems took place at each; and if he will make a statement on the initiatives that were decided on. [46646]

The Prime Minister: A list of the Councils being held under the UK's Presidency of the European Union was deposited in the Library of the House earlier this year. The UK has also presided over the G8 Summit and Foreign Ministers' meetings, and the Asia-Europe summit.

The Government attach great importance to tackling the Millennium Bug problem. They have worked hard to raise awareness in each of these fora and to encourage practical action. In the EU, we ensured the issue was addressed in a wide range of relevant fora: we raised it for instance at the Telecoms Councils on 26 February and 19 May, the Internal Market Council on 30 March, the Industry

Council on 7 May, and at the European Conference on 12 March. We organised a major conference in London on 8 May to draw attention to the Bug's cross-border implications and to encourage the sharing of best practice among member states. We also raised the issue at the Cardiff European Council. The Conclusions of the Council include a call for effective national compliance programmes and for a further progress report to the Vienna Summit in December.

At the 3–4 April Asia Europe Meeting, leaders highlighted the importance of international co-operation to ensure millennium compliance, particularly where failures would cause social and economic dislocation.

At their 15–17 May Birmingham Summit, G8 leaders recognised the seriousness of the threat posed by the Millennium Bug. The G8 communique agreed to take urgent action and to share information, among ourselves and with others, that would assist in preventing disruption in the near and longer term. The G8 would work closely with business and organisations working in those sectors, who would bear much of the responsibility to address the problem. The G8 would work together in international organisations, such as the World Bank to assist developing countries, and the OECD, to help solve this critical technological problem and prepare for the year 2000. Heads agreed that G8 officials should meet to pursue the issue. I announced that the UK was giving £10 million to the World Bank Trust Fund to help poorer developing countries develop strategies to combat the problem.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Power Stations

Mr. Pound: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the Independent Assessor's finding that the closure of generating capacity at three power stations by National Power and Powergen could reflect a reluctance to relinquish claims to existing power station sites in order to retain their market position; and if she will make a statement. [47324]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 25 June 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–72, concerning the Government's proposals following the Energy Review.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Fearn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) in which sectors of the United Kingdom's offshore waters exploration for oil and gas is currently taking place; [47694]

(2) how many (a) United Kingdom and (b) non-United Kingdom operators are currently exploring for oil and gas in United Kingdom offshore waters; [47698]

(3) how many (a) United Kingdom and (b) non-United Kingdom operators produce oil or gas from United Kingdom offshore waters. [47697]

Mr. Battle: Details of areas currently under Petroleum production licence are published in Volume II of the annual Energy Report (the 'Brown Book'), which is available in the Library of both Houses. There are, in addition, 35 current exploration licences, which allow the holders to carry out survey work (but not drilling) in any area not subject to a production licence.

On-site exploration—mainly seismic data acquisition or exploratory drilling—is a relatively short-term process and actual locations therefore change rapidly, but exploration is taking place, or in preparation, in all sectors of the North Sea, to the north and west of Scotland, and in the Irish Sea. There is no current on-site exploration activity on licensed areas south of England or in the south-west approaches.

In accordance with the Hydrocarbons Licensing Directive, no distinction is drawn between United kingdom and non-United Kingdom companies as operators of partners in the award of administration of licences. The statistics for licence operators in both categories on Petroleum Production licences and producing fields are as follows:

| | Current petroleum production licences | Producing offshore oil and gas fields |
|---|---|---|
| Current total | 550 | 187 |
| Operating companies: | | |
| UK | 10 | 6 |
| Non-UK | 30 | 19 |

Includes UK registered companies with non-UK parents

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the United Kingdom Government intend to fulfil their commitment in the OECD Ministerial Statement on the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment of 28 March concerning a period of assessment and further consultation; what steps have been taken in this respect; and if she will make a statement. [48048]

Mrs. Roche: Officials from the Department and from other relevant Government Departments are continuing their on-going consultations with business, unions, local government, non-governmental organisations, and others interested in the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI). We will participate in planned EU-wide meetings with trade unions and non-governmental organisations in September. We are also considering options for further consultations with developing countries.

Sellafield

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the representations from other countries her Department has received since 1 May 1997 in respect of the Sellafield reprocessing facility. [47747]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 June 1998]: Since 1 May 1997 I have responded to one representation from the Government of the Republic of Ireland about safety issues at UK nuclear sites, including Sellafield. In addition, officials of my Department have responded to two letters from individuals in Ireland, and also to one from an individual in Germany who raised a number of issues, including safety at the Sellafield site.

Midland Bluebird Bus Company

Mr. Canavan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the future ownership of the Midland Bluebird Bus Company. [47842]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, will announce her decision as quickly as is practicable on FirstBus's request for a review of the decision of the then Minister for Corporate and Consumer Affairs that it should be required to divest its subsidiary, Midland Bluebird, plus part of the Glasgow operations of SB Holdings.

EU Research Council

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the outcome of the European Union Research Council on 22 June. [48479]

Mr. Battle: I chaired the meeting of the EU Research Council on 22 June 1998.

The Council made useful progress on the negotiations on the Fifth Framework for Research Technological Development and Demonstration Activities 1998–2002 (FP5), achieving consensus in a number of areas and maintaining momentum against the tight timetable for introducing FP5 by the end of this year. This Council consolidated the achievements of our Presidency in pressing forward these negotiations.

The Council reached a "common position" on the proposed decisions on the rules governing participation in the Framework Programmes and the dissemination of results, which are essential for implementing the programme. Although formal decisions could not be made at this stage, the Council reached broad consensus on the scientific and technological content of three of the ten specific programmes that give detailed effect to FP5, and on the underpinning general provisions broadly common to these programmes. It also took note of the progress made in negotiations so far on the distribution of funding within each of the specific programmes, which will be the subject of further consideration under the Austrian Presidency.

The Council also agreed conclusions on the management of Community RTD programmes that reflect the agreement reached at the Colloquium of EU research ministers that I chaired on 28 April. An important aspect of these conclusions is the Commission's undertaking to report on the progress made in meeting performance targets, adopting new management approaches and on plans for future improvements.

The Council agreed a resolution aimed at strengthening the links and complementarity in space research between the EU and ESA. A parallel resolution was adopted by the ESA Council on 23 June. The resolution represents a significant step towards increased co-operation in this field between the EU and the European Space Agency.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his most recent assessment of the accuracy of electoral registers at the end of their lifespan. [47712]

Mr. George Howarth: The information required for such an assessment to be made is not held centrally.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been fined for failing to comply with the requirement to register for electoral purposes in each of the last 10 years. [47713]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1988 there were three prosecutions and in 1989 there were 13 prosecutions, although we have no information as to their outcome. Data for this summary offence have not been collected centrally since then.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the amount of canvassing carried out in each local authority area to compile electoral registers; and how many areas carry forward names from the previous year's register for (i) one year and (ii) longer than one year. [47704]

Mr. George Howarth: "Compiling the electoral register 1996", published by the Office for National Statistics last year, looked at the main canvass procedures adopted by local authorities, the number of reminder stages and whether, and in what circumstances, names of non-responders were carried forward.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent on advertising electoral registration by central Government in each of the last 10 years. [47714]

Mr. George Howarth: Expenditure for England and Wales was as follows:

| Year | Expenditure (£) |
|---|---|
| 1988–89 | 472,000 |
| 1989–90 | 481,000 |
| 1990–91 | 541,000 |
| 1991–92 | 648,000 |

The figures available for Scotland and Northern Ireland are as follows:

| Year | Expenditure (£) Scotland | Northern Ireland |
|---|---|---|
| 1994 | [1]28,000 | 11,000 |
| 1995 | 59,000 | 10,000 |
| 1996 | [1]15,000 | 5,000 |
| 1997 | 73,000 | 5,000 |

[1] Includes publicity for absent voting

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the extent of non-registration on the electoral register of (a) those in privately rented and furnished accommodation, (b) New Commonwealth citizens, (c) those who had moved in the past year, (d) black people, (e) those aged under 17 years, (f) those aged 21–24 years and (g) those living in inner London. [47708]

Mr. George Howarth: The most recent information available is set out in "Electoral registration in 1991", published in 1993, which provides estimates for all seven categories listed.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the extent of dual electoral registrations by (a) students, (b) owners of second homes and (c) others. [47705]

Mr. George Howarth: The information needed for such an estimate is not available.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for electoral registration statistics to be compiled by parliamentary constituencies. [47707]

Mr. George Howarth: Electoral registration statistics are already compiled by parliamentary constituencies, as well as by local government areas. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) published figures for the 1998 register on 23 April 1998, in an ONS Population and Health Monitor (reference EL 98/1), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of overseas voters and service voters who live abroad. [47706]

Mr. George Howarth: The total number of overseas electors and service voters (whether serving in the United Kingdom or overseas) included on the 1998 register was published by the Office for National Statistics in "Population and Health Monitor" EL 98/1, copies of which are in the Library. Figures for the number of registered services voters posted abroad are not held separately.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if his Department holds copies of all the certificates signed by Cabinet Ministers since 1984, under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984; [47377]

(2) how many certificates have been signed to date under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984. [47378]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 29 June 1998]: In 1986, the then Home Secretary made a determination in respect of all data held by the Security Service. In accordance with that determination, the Security Service has not registered under the Act.

Certificates under section 27 of the Data Protection Act relate to exemption from the provisions of Part II and sections 21 to 24 of Part IV of the Act, for the purpose of safeguarding national security.

I understand that no such certificate has been signed by a Home Secretary and that none are held in my Department.

Youth Justice Board

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made with arrangements to establish the Youth Justice Board. [48480]

Mr. Straw: Following my announcement at Second Reading of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] on 8 April 1998, Official Report, column 376, that I intended to establish the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales from 1 October 1998 (if the Bill receives Royal Assent early enough), advertisements for the Chair and 11 other Board Members appeared in the press from 19 April.

Over 750 applications have been received (for the post of Chair, member or both), and the competitions are being conducted in line with guidance from the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments ('Nolan' procedures). The selection panel for the post of Chair was chaired by David Omand, Permanent Secretary of the Home Office, with John Halliday, Director of Criminal Policy Home Office; Tom Luce, Head of Social Care Policy, Department of Health; and two independent assessors: Sir Terence Harrison, Chairman, Alfred McAlpine plc., former Chief Executive, Rolls-Royce; and Mrs. Gill Pitt, general education inspector, Northamptonshire, Inspection and Advisory Service, former primary headteacher.

Following advice from the selection panel, I am pleased to announce that the Chair of the Youth Justice Board will be Norman Warner, chair of the Task Force on Youth Justice and, until he takes up his appointment, senior policy adviser, Home Office.

The panel selecting the 11 other members of the new Board is expected to provide advice in the summer, and Mr. Warner is participating in the selection process.

The setting up of the Youth Justice Board as an executive non-departmental public body is a significant step forward in delivering the Government's commitment to tackling youth crime and reforming youth justice. The Task Force on Youth Justice is likely to complete its work in July and will then be wound up.

Deportation

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people aged 65 years or over are currently subject to deportation orders; and how many people aged 65 years or over have been deported or removed in each of the last three years. [46691]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 29 May, there were 54 persons aged 65 years or over who had deportation orders signed against them but who had not been removed from the United Kingdom.

The available information on persons who were aged 65 years or over when they were removed, or departed voluntarily, following deportation or illegal entry action is given in the table. Comprehensive information on persons aged 65 years or over when removed under port procedures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Removals[1] as a result of deportation or illegal entry action of persons aged over 65 years[2], 1995–1997[3]

| | 1995 | 1996 | 1997[3] |
|---|---|---|---|
| Persons removed from the United Kingdom as a result of deportation action[4] | 22 | 25 | 18 |
| Persons removed from the United Kingdom as a result of illegal entry action[4] | 4 | 10 | 9 |

[1] Includes persons departing 'voluntarily' after deportation or illegal entry action had been initiated against them

[2] Covers persons aged over 65 years on the date they were removed or departed 'voluntarily'

[3] 1997 data are provisional

[4] Enforcement action may have been initiated in an earlier period

Murder Victims (Support)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support his Department offers for the relatives of murder victims; and if he will make a statement. [47435]

Mr. Michael: In addition to the support provided by state funded services, including the National Health Service, Social Services, the police and other criminal justice agencies, the Home Office funds two national voluntary organisations which are able to offer practical help and emotional support to the families and friends of murder victims, both in the immediate aftermath of the murder and on a longer-term basis. In 1998–99, the Home Office grant to Victim Support will amount to £12.7 million, and the grant to Support After Murder and Manslaughter (SAMM) will amount to £43,000.

The Home Office also produces a pack called "Information for Families of Homicide Victims", which contains leaflets on a number of subjects. The pack is handed to friends and relatives by the police at the earliest suitable opportunity following the murder.

SCOTLAND

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47018]

Mr. McLeish: We are addressing the gender perspective in policy making through the cross-Departmental mainstreaming initiative which the Ministers for Women launched on 18 May. New guidelines have been formulated after wide consultation which the Scottish Office will adapt to suit Scottish circumstance and issue to all Scottish Office staff. The guidelines require Departments to:

consider how policy proposals affect women consult with women's organisations and act upon that information to ensure that policy decisions reflect the views and interests of women.

The Scottish Office will contribute to an Annual Report to Parliament setting out progress on mainstreaming the women's perspective into Government policy making. The first report will be published after the end of this financial year.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47057]

Mr. Dewar: There have been no action zones established by my Department since 1 May 1997. Pilot schemes, covering particular geographical areas, which have been established in Scotland are listed in the following table.

Employment

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he plans to encourage the retention and expansion of high-skilled jobs in Scotland. [47441]

Mr. Wilson: The creation and retention of high-skilled jobs is very important for the future of the Scottish economy and of its international competitiveness. This requires action by Government and their agencies on a number of fronts, including education and training, the attraction of appropriate international investment in Scotland, and the encouragement of new high-tech companies.

Our education and training initiatives include Higher Still, Modern Apprenticeships, Skillseekers, the Scottish University for Industry and a range of other measures to encourage lifelong learning. In order to meet the skills needs of industry, Scottish Enterprise is currently reviewing its own approach to skills development and we intend to draw together its findings and other recent work to create an overarching Skills Strategy for Scotland.

Our inward investment strategy is targeted particularly on high value-added sectors such as aerospace and biotechnology, electronics, software and design projects. Project Alba is a particularly important fruit of this approach. In encouraging the creation and development of new high-tech companies, I attach particular importance to the Foresight initiative, which is encouraging companies throughout the UK to look at the opportunities created by new technology. Scottish Enterprise's Technology Ventures scheme is also an important initiative designed to promote commercialisation of the fruits of academic research, by facilitating links between business and the research base in our higher education institutions.

Small Businesses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) small and (b) medium sized businesses his Department has helped to start since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [47415]

Mr. Hain: Under the enterprise programme managed by the TECs in Wales and funded by the Welsh Office, over 1,500 new business starts have been assisted since 1 May 1997. All can be categorised as small firms.

I am keen to see more good quality businesses established throughout Wales—and to this end a new Business Starts Programme has recently been launched under Business Connect. Further planned action in this area will be set out in the "Economic Agenda for Wales" which will be published shortly.

William Crompton and Fiona Ovis

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors underlie the length of time taken to review the case of the murders of William Crompton and Fiona Ovis; and if he will make a statement. [47434]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Dyfed Powys Health Authority initiated an Independent Review Panel under the NHS complaints procedure, to inquire into the healthcare circumstances relating to the case. I understand that the authority has received legal advice to the effect that the report of the panel should not be made available pending the outcome of a retrial in relation to alleged offences arising from the deaths.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46687]

Mr. Ron Davies: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Department routinely consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, White Papers and discussion groups on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. I have therefore confined my reply to 3 major exercises.

Between March and June 1998 a major consultation exercise was conducted inviting views on "Modernising Local Government in Wales". A series of 7 consultation papers, which were placed in the Library of the House has attracted over 200 responses to date. When all the responses have been received and analysed, the analysis and copies of all responses will be placed in the Library. The results of the consultation will inform the White Paper I intend to publish in the summer.

Three pieces of research have been conducted since 1 May 1997 in relation to the National Assembly for Wales. In June 1997 qualitative research was carried out to help determine the most effective cover for the Devolution White Paper. In April 1997 quantitative tracking research was used to establish shifts in awareness in the run up to the Referendum in Wales. In March-April 1998 qualitative research was conducted among the general public to explore information needs in relation to the forthcoming National Assembly elections.

A public consultation exercise was undertaken by the Welsh Consumer Council on behalf of the Welsh Office to gauge views relating to the production of a new Patient's Charter for Wales. The results will be published in the Autumn.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Moral Studies

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will expand the National Curriculum to introduce school students to the study of modes of reasoning about morality which do not emphasise the idea that obedience is the primary virtue. [48176]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) is currently piloting draft guidance for schools on promoting pupils' spiritual, moral, social and cultural development. The guidance makes it clear that moral development involves acquiring both the capacity for moral reasoning, and a determination to obey moral rules derived from shared values. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked QCA to review the National Curriculum for the year 2000. The review will incorporate recommendations on education for moral and social responsibility from the Advisory Group on Education for Citizenship.

Correspondence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Derbyshire of 25 April on behalf of his constituent, Mr. A. Mundin, of Belper about compulsory school uniform. [48217]

Dr. Howells: Unfortunately, the original letter appears to have gone astray. A copy, however, was received in the Department on 29 June 1998 and therefore a reply will be issued within five working days.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with UK Vice Chancellors in respect of the advantages of eliminating differences in the level of fees paid by students for similar university courses from different parts of the UK. [48255]

Dr. Howells: The Government's policy is that, subject to a maximum of £1,000, the level of the annual contribution towards tuition fees for eligible home full-time undergraduates should depend on the student's own and his or her parents' or spouse's income. This inevitably means that there will be differences in the level of contributions made by students for similar university courses. The only exceptions we are proposing relate to students in the fifth and subsequent years of medical and dental courses and the special concession which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, intends in relation to Scottish students on the fourth or additional year of honours degree courses in Scotland where those are a year longer than comparable courses elsewhere in the UK.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, made clear in the House during the Third Reading debate on the Teaching and Higher Education Bill that he would be happy to join my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, in talking to the Vice-Chancellor of Edinburgh University and other vice-chancellors, but he has received no further approach to do so.

New Deal

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps will be taken to ensure that employers engaged in the New Deal adhere to the standards set under the terms of their employer agreement; and what action will be taken against those firms who are found to be exploiting New Deal recruits. [47755]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The employer is given a copy of the Employment Agreement once it has been signed and prior to the New Deal participant starting on the option. This sets out the full terms and conditions of the Employment Option. A copy is also issued to the New Deal employee at the time they start on the Employment Option.

The personal adviser will remain in contact with both the employer and the employee throughout the option and will take up any concerns that arise with the employer. A confidential New Deal Information Line has also been set up for participants who have concerns about any aspect of New Deal.

If an employer fails to meet the terms and conditions of the agreement, the Employment Service (ES) following discussion with the employer, may terminate the agreement and recover payments already made. Employers suspected of being in breach of existing legislation or statutory duties will also be reported by the ES to the appropriate authorities for action. An employer whose agreement is terminated will not be allowed to participate again in New Deal until they are able to satisfy the ES that they will be able to fulfil the terms and conditions applicable at the time.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) voluntary and (b) public organisations have currently signed up to the New Deal in (i) Coventry, (ii) the West Midlands and (iii) England. [47756]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the West Midlands 24 voluntary organisations and 34 public sector companies have signed Employer Agreements to date. Of these, two of the voluntary organisations and four of the public sector companies are based in Coventry. In England, over 10,500 employers have signed Employer Agreements. A breakdown of this number into private sector, voluntary and public sector organisations is available only at local level.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many CSA cases are currently awaiting assessment. [46564]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Ms Gisela Stuart, dated 29 June 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency cases currently awaiting assessment.

The number of cases awaiting assessment at 31 May 1998 was 283,152. This is made up of approximately 110,000 backlog cases which are over 52 weeks old (down from 225,000 at the start of 1997/8) and 173,000 work on hand cases under 52 weeks old (down from 180,000 in the same period). In total, this represents a 30 per cent. reduction in the number of cases awaiting assessment.

In addition to the cases awaiting assessment, there are also around 128,000 cases where the parent with care was in receipt of Income Support prior to the launch of the Agency in April 1993. Any parent with care in this group who wishes to pursue maintenance as part of the Government's New Deal for Lone Parents or for any other reason will be taken on by the Agency.

The reductions in the numbers of cases outstanding have been achieved at the same time as the workloads of the Agency have been increasing. In 1997/98 the Agency cleared 595,000 maintenance applications—an increase of two-thirds on the 357,000 cleared in 1996/97. At the end of May 1998 our live and assessed caseloads stood at 784,160, compared with 609,800 in May 1997 (an increase of 29 per cent.) and is expected to rise to around 1.2m by 2003/04.

I hope this is helpful.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she is taking to minimise fraud in the transition from family credit to the working families tax credit. [46202]

Mr. Field: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Answer I gave on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 623–24.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the projects undertaken by her Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if she will place the results of the research in the Library. [46680]

Mr. Field: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Department routinely consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, White Papers and discussion groups on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. It is our normal practice to make the findings of all projects in the Department's Research Programme available to the public, including placing copies in the Library.

In my Written Answer to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 11 May 1998, Official Report, columns 29–30, we provided a list of the focus group projects which the Department has undertaken since 1 May 1997 to explore qualitatively public attitudes to existing and future policies.

Two additional focus group studies have been commissioned since then:

Attitudes to methods of making benefit payments.

Attitudes to survivors benefits.

Work commissioned under our ongoing call-off contract with Social and Community Planning Research has included studies on attitudes to lone parents working; to child support arrangements following relationship breakdown; and views on proposals for partners of Jobseeker's Allowance claimants.

Since 1 May 1997, we have also tested public attitudes quantitatively. A small-scale telephone poll was undertaken exploring attitudes to welfare reform issues, and we have on occasion commissioned questions for inclusion in the Office for National Statistics Omnibus Survey which have allowed us to test quantitatively attitudes to particular policy areas. Questions have been asked about sickness and disability benefits, lone parents working, financial top-ups, conditions attached to receipt of benefits, partners of the unemployed.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will make a statement on the numbers of claimants affected by the changes to council tax benefit regulations introduced on 1 April; [47424]

(2) how many households in London have been affected by the changes to council tax benefit regulations introduced on 1 April; and what percentage of the total this figure represents. [47425]

Mr. Keith Bradley: An estimated 8,000 claimants will be affected by the restriction of Council Tax Benefit in properties in Band F and above in 1998/99. The long-run estimate of those affected is 66,000.

Information for those households affected in London is not available. However, in Greater London the long-term estimate of those claimants affected is 28,000. This represents approximately 40 per cent. of the total affected by the changes.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the degree of flexibility available to staff implementing the jobseeker's allowance in relation to imposing conditions on a client's claim; and if she will make a statement. [47405]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The conditions of entitlement for receipt of Jobseeker's Allowance are set out in legislation. Adjudication Officers make decisions on entitlement to Jobseeker's Allowance within this framework. Their decisions are monitored regularly by the Chief Adjudication Officer who reports annually on the standards achieved.

An extensive programme of research has been commissioned as part of the evaluation of Jobseeker's Allowance. The findings will be available in the Summer of 1999 and will enable us to consider what changes need to be made to ensure that the design and operation of the benefit meets the principles set out in the Welfare Reform Green Paper.

Social Fund Grants

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans she has to allow the reclaiming of expenses for hospital visits by spouses whose income is at the level of income support; [48083]

(2) if she will review the problems faced in meeting the costs of attending specialist hospitals by families whose income is just above income support levels. [48084]

Mr. Denham: Social fund community care grants can be paid to people on Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance to help with travelling expenses to visit a partner in hospital. Any award is subject to the level of priority which can be sustained from the district budget, and the circumstances of the particular case. Grants for visits to a child in hospital would normally be given a high priority.

In addition, social fund crisis loans can be paid to people, whether on benefit or not, where the applicant needs help with fares to hospital for treatment for the applicant or a member of their family. Such a payment would have to be the only means of preventing serious risk or serious damage to the applicant or a member of their family. The Hospital Travel Costs Scheme, administered by the Department of Health, provides financial help to patients in receipt of Income Support and, where deemed medically necessary, an escort for travel to hospital for treatment under the care of a consultant.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 9 June 1998, Official Report, columns 545–46, concerning the BIP, for what reasons she was unable to list the operational and legal issues that have prevented a review of BIP cases prior to 9 February 1998. [45770]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 June 1998]: On 17 June, we announced that action will be taken to look again at Benefit Integrity Project cases decided before 9 February 1998, where a decision to reduce or remove benefit was based solely on evidence provided by the claimant and where the claimant did not seek a review of the decision.

In order to make this announcement legal issues needed to be resolved relating to: our scope to take review action on cases that had already been reviewed as part of the Project; how and when the claimant should be involved, and what sort of decisions might be made. Operationally, we also needed to identify the scale of the exercise and how it might be conducted sensitively, without raising false expectations. Claimants need to be fully informed about the possible outcomes of a further review of their entitlement but in such a way that they are not dissuaded from exercising their right to have their case looked at again if that is what they choose. We are currently finalising the details of this new exercise.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to realign local Benefits Agency boundaries so as to make them coterminous with local authority boundaries. [47490]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Peter Mathison, its Chief Executive. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Goggins, dated 29 June 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what plans there are to re-align local Benefits Agency (BA) boundaries so as to make them co-terminous with local authority boundaries.

As part of our ongoing effort to improve customer service we are looking together with our colleagues from the Employment Service at the boundaries of the two agencies and local authorities, with a view to seeking further alignment where possible.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ritual Slaughter

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to seek implementation of the EU Slaughter Directive which would outlaw the slaughter of animals without pre-stunning at open air festivals. [46765]

Mr. Morley: Directive 93/119/EC on the protection of animals at the time of slaughter or killing is not clear as to whether religious slaughter is permitted outside of slaughterhouses. The Directive was implemented in GB by the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995. The Regulations permit the slaughter of animals elsewhere than in slaughterhouses without stunning for reasons of religion. Such slaughter must be carried out in accordance with specific legal requirements, by a licensed slaughterman and in the presence of an authorised person. More recently, the European Commission has stated that in its opinion open-air religious slaughter is in fact prohibited by the Directive. We therefore intend to reconsider the position, in consultation with all those with an interest, later this year.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce measures for the labelling of meat to identify at the point of sale meat which has been ritually slaughtered. [46766]

Mr. Morley: Meat from animals slaughtered to provide food for the religious communities is already identified at the point of sale. It is the Government's intention to discuss with representatives of the religious communities all aspects of religious slaughter, including the entry onto the general market of meat from animals slaughtered without prior stunning.

Farmers (Late Payments)

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of payments due in December 1997 to farmers (a) have not been paid to date and (b) were paid late; and if he will make a statement. [46947]

Dr. John Cunningham: Under the Arable Area Payments Scheme in England, 99.51 per cent. of applicants received payments due by 31 December 1997 (representing 99.12 per cent. by value). As at 1 June, 0.025 per cent. of applicants are yet to receive payments (representing 0.011 per cent. by value).

EU Subsidies

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward, from September 1998, the payment of those European Union hill farming subsidies available to United Kingdom agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [46942]

Dr. John Cunningham: There are two subsidies specific to hill farmers: Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances (HLCAs) and the Less Favoured Area (LFA) supplement under the Sheep Annual Premium (SAP) scheme. HLCAs are paid in the spring. The SAP LFA supplement is paid in two stages in tandem with payments of the basic premium, after rates for the latter have been fixed in Brussels. For the 1998 scheme year, we expect to pay a 90 per cent. advance of the LFA supplement over July and August and the balance next April. The agriculture departments try to make all subsidy payments as early as possible.

Mr. Alick Barnes

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if in respect of the case involving Mr. Alick Barnes, Loyton Farm, Bampton, Devon, and his application for European Objective 5b funding, he will (a) approve disclosure of the documents requested by Mr. Barnes and (b) agree to discussions between his officials and Mr. Barnes; and if he will make a statement. [47138]

Dr. John Cunningham: A request for disclosure of papers has already received from Mr. Barnes' solicitors. This is being considered, with the other Departments with an interest in the case, and a reply will be sent as soon as possible. As regards a meeting with officials, it is not clear that any issues arising from Mr. Barnes' application for Objective 5b funding remain to be resolved. But if Mr. Barnes wishes to write to explain why he thinks that a meeting would be helpful, such a request will of course be considered.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47013]

Mr. Morley: The Department had guidelines in place designed to ensure that those involved in the development of policy consider the possible differential effects which their proposals may have on men and women and to take action where these effects cannot be justified.

No differential effects have been identified during the course of preparation of any of the legislation introduced in this session of Parliament for which the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible.

The Department's guidelines will be reviewed once we receive new guidelines, which are being worked up as part of a cross-departmental initiative which the Ministers for Women announced on 18 May.

Primates

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of Article 9(5) of Regulation 338/97/EC in relation to primates' journey times; [47337]

(2) for what reasons his Department does not impose maximum journey times for non-human primates. [47323]

Mr. Morley: In relation to animals, Article 9(5) of Regulation 338/97/EC requires that Community rules on protection of animals in transport are complied with. These rules, implemented in Great Britain by the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997, do not set maximum journey times for animals other than farm animals and horses. However, no animal may be transported in a way that causes or could cause injury or unnecessary suffering. Strict rules cover the construction, maintenance and use of the receptacles and means of transport used. For example, receptacles in which primates are transported must provide adequate space for the animals to stand in their natural position; be constructed and maintained in such a way as to prevent the animals from suffering undue exposure to noise and vibration and must provide adequate ventilation and air space.

Fish Stocks

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by species of fish, the dates when the stocks in fishing grounds around the United Kingdom will be fished out at current rates of depletion. [47454]

Mr. Morley: Approximately half of the fish stocks in the North East Atlantic assessed by the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES) are considered to be above safe biological limits. This means that they are above the level necessary to avoid an increasing risk that they will fail to reproduce themselves. The remaining stocks are at or below this level so cautious fisheries management is necessary to ensure that these stocks are not overfished and remain at or return to a safe level. With such management, no stocks around the UK are predicted to be fished out in the foreseeable future.

Cumberland Rum Butter

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of EU Commission Regulation 623/98 on the manufacture of Cumberland Rum Butter; and if he will make a statement. [47772]

Mr. Rooker: Commission Regulation (EC) 623/98 amends Commission Regulation (EC) 577/97 relating to standards for spreadable fats and the protection of dairy designations. From April 1999, "Cumberland Rum Butter" and all other alcoholic butters (including brandy and whisky butters) may only be so described if they contain sufficient butter to meet a minimum milkfat level of 34 per cent. The UK was opposed to the adoption of arbitrary compositional rules of this kind.

The Regulation will, however, have no effect on those rum and other "butters" sold with 34 per cent. or more milkfat. Products which do not contain enough butter to meet the minimum milkfat level may also continue to be sold, but may need to be relabelled to ensure that their different composition is clear to consumers. It is not possible to estimate the likely impact of such relabelling on sales or production of these products but the Department is working closely with the relevant companies to find ways to minimise problems for UK manufacturers.

Feeding Stuffs

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many checks have been made since 1995 to monitor compliance with the prohibition in Article 15(11)(a) of the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995 on the use of poultry manure in compound feeding stuffs; [47581]

(2) how many contraventions of Article 15(11)(a) of the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995, on the prohibition of the use of poultry manure in compound feeding stuffs, have been notified to his Department since it came into force; and if he will make a statement. [47582]

Mr. Rooker: The Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995 are enforced by Local Authority Trading Standards Departments. The Department is not informed of the number of checks carried out or contraventions detected.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the prohibition in Article 15(11)(a) of the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995, in ensuring that no poultry manure is used in foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement. [47584]

Mr. Rooker: While we have no evidence on the current use of poultry manure in animal feed, officials have recently alerted both Local Authorities and the State Veterinary Service to be on the lookout for this practice.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what mechanisms are used to ensure that no poultry manure is included in compound feeding stuffs and to monitor compliance with Article 11(a) of the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995; and if he will make a statement. [47585]

Mr. Rooker: Compliance monitoring, to ensure that poultry manure is not used in animal feed, is a matter for individual Local Authority Trading Standards Departments.

Over-30-months Scheme

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many carcases are currently waiting to be disposed of under the over-30-months scheme. [47770]

Mr. Rooker: There are no carcases awaiting disposal under the over-30-months scheme (OTMS). The majority of the 15,000 cattle which enter the OTMS each week are rendered to produce meat and bonemeal (MBM) and tallow, which is being safely and securely stored pending destruction. Around 2,000 animals a week, mostly on-farm casualties, are directly incinerated in appropriately authorised incinerators. Capacity for direct incineration is expected to further increase as new facilities covered by the Intervention Board's 1996 tender for carcase incineration facilities come on stream, subject to the successful companies obtaining the necessary planning and environmental consents, thus reducing the rate of increase of MBM and tallow stocks.

Fallen Stock

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what methods of disposal of fallen stock his Department has evaluated. [47686]

Mr. Rooker: The Animal By-Products Order 1992, which specifies the methods of disposal for fallen stock, is being reviewed and I hope to consult on the outcome during the summer.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a regional breakdown of fallen stock in England for the last 12 months for which figures are available. [47685]

Mr. Rooker: This information is not collected.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the extent of problems with fallen stock in the North of England. [47684]

Mr. Rooker: Some farmers in the North of England, as in other parts of England, may be experiencing problems if knackers' yards or hunt kennels have stopped taking certain types of fallen stock. We are concerned that fallen stock should be disposed of properly and my officials have therefore been liaising with the disposal and farming industries over the disposal of fallen stock and possible future arrangements.

Culled Ewes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the cull ewe trade from the United Kingdom to France is restricted to four southern-based abattoirs. [47271]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 29 June 1998]: Our recent proposals to amend the Specified Risk Material Regulations to allow export of ewe carcases with spinal cord intact were based on the French authorities' list of four premises in France which they were prepared to designate for the removal of spinal cord under their own controls on specified risk materials.

Revised proposals have now been issued for statutory consultation on the basis of a further list of seven premises which the French authorities have notified to us. These are:

Abattoir Municipal de Gap (SE France); Abattoir Municipal de Thiviers (SW France); Stemontoise D'Abbattage, Mont-de Marsan (SW France); Abattoir de Mantes-la-Jolie (near Paris); Socopa a Coutances (Normandy); Abattoir Public d'Oloron (SW France); Abattoir-SVA a Vitre (NW France).

Genetically Modified Pigs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what means of transport have been used to export genetically modified pigs; and what measures have been taken to ensure they do not escape. [47379]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 June 1998]: Genetically modified pigs have been exported by road and air. During this transport they were subject at all times to the provisions of the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997, paragraph 8 of Schedule 1 of which requires that all means of transport and receptacles must be escape-proof.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47359]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The Department has responsibility for the following public registers:

| Public Registers | Comments |
|---|---|
| County, Parish Holding (CPH) Register | This is not a public access database although some information is made available in certain circumstances |
| Register of classification (by level of microbiological contamination) of designated bivalve mollusc production areas in England and Wales | Held in accordance with the Shellfish Hygiene Directive 91/492/EEC as implemented by the Food Safety (Fishery Products and Live Shellfish) (Hygiene) Regulations 1998 |

Badgers

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Derbyshire of 11 May about the culling of badgers. [48215]

Mr. Rooker: I wrote to the hon. Member for West Derbyshire on 26 June 1998.

French Beef

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the French Agriculture Minister about the quality and safety standards of French beef, with particular reference to possible gene contamination in French beef of cancer cells; and if he will make a statement. [47753]

Mr. Rooker: The Minister has not discussed the particular subject with the French Agriculture Minister, nor are we aware of the problem referred to.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 22 to 26 June; and if he will make a statement. [48483]

Dr. John Cunningham: I chaired a meeting of the European Union Agriculture Council in Luxembourg on 22–26 June. My noble Friend, The Lord Donoughue, Parliamentary Secretary responsible for the farming and food industry, represented the United Kingdom.

This 4-day Council took decisions on a large package of important legislative measures concerning the Common Agricultural Policy and animal welfare. The package included agreement on changes to the bananas regime to bring it into conformity with World Trade Organisation rules whilst ensuring continued access to the EU market for Caribbean ACP bananas; significant reform of the olive oil regime, abolishing public intervention and the consumer and small producer aids which have been particularly susceptible to fraud; and measures setting common welfare standards for the rearing of farm animals throughout Europe. This measure is an important further step to improve animal welfare following the agreement to phase out fishing for tuna and swordfish with drift nets, which I secured at the Fisheries Council earlier this month.

The package also included adoption of the 1998–99 CAP price proposals and the 1999–2000 compulsory set-aside rate, giving farmers certainty for the coming marketing year, as well as limited reforms to the tobacco regime to encourage producers to become more market-oriented and less dependent on subsidy.

The package was agreed by a qualified majority of Member States, as were each of the individual elements. The Netherlands voted against all elements, Denmark against the bananas and set-aside proposals and France against the set-aside proposal. The Council also adopted by qualified majority, with Greece voting against, a proposal changing the rules for payments of aids to cotton producers.

I am very pleased that the United Kingdom Presidency was able to secure a satisfactory deal on this complex package of measures. Coming on top of the conclusions on CAP reform which were unanimously agreed by the Agriculture Council at its May meeting, and subsequently endorsed by the European Council meeting in Cardiff, it concludes the substantial programme of work which I set out at the outset of our Presidency.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46679]

Mr. Rooker: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Department routinely consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, White Papers, on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. I have therefore confined my reply to major exercises. It is our normal practice to make the results of such research available to the public, including placing copies in the Library.

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent and in what ways the Foreign Policy Centre has influenced his Department's policy initiatives; and if he will make a statement. [46706]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign Policy Centre is an independent policy institute launched in March of this year. It is established practice for Foreign Office Officials and Ministers to have contact with policy institutes and NGOs and to consider their views when developing policy. These contacts occur at all levels of the Foreign Office and are an important and valued part of the policy-making process. Policy institutes and NGOs contribute to a wider public debate which can also influence policy. The nature of these contacts means it is not possible to assess the influence of one particular policy institute in isolation from other institutes and NGOs.

Diplomats

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were committed in 1997 by persons entitled to immunity. [48597]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: From a diplomatic community of over 17,000 persons, seventeen alleged serious offences by persons entitled to immunity were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1997. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the Report to the Foreign Affairs Committee "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges (1985)" as offences which fall into the category which in certain circumstances attract a maximum penalty of 6 months imprisonment or more: the majority involved drinking and driving and shoplifting.

In relation to this question, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave to the noble Lord, Lord Marlesford on 1 June 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 16, that one diplomat was withdrawn at the Department's request from his post in the United Kingdom as a result of alleged offences, compared with six the previous year.

Nazi Gold Conference

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to follow up the Nazi Gold Conference of 1997. [48208]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Government have contributed £1 million to the International Fund for Needy Victims of Nazi Persecution. We have discussed how the money should be spent with concerned NGOs and envisage that the first payments will be made shortly. FCO officials contributed to the Stockholm seminar on Holocaust Education on 7 May 1998, and on 30 June 1998 officials are attending the Organising Seminar for the Washington Conference on Holocaust-Era Assets, scheduled for later this year. FCO officials are also taking forward proposals for an international guide to archival sources on Holocaust-era assets.

British Council

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of British Council staff at overseas locations on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) 24 June 1998. [48205]

Mr. Fatchett: Precise figures for the numbers of British Council staff on the dates requested are not available, but the estimated average numbers of staff working overseas in 1997–98 and 1998–99 are as follows:

| | 1997–98 | 1998–99 |
|---|---|---|
| Overseas general managers | 229 | 237 |
| Locally engaged staff | 3,700 | 3,874 |
| Teachers | 1,670 | 1,737 |
| Total | 5,599 | 5,848 |

UK-appointed management staff have remained roughly constant over the past three years, whereas the numbers of local staff have grown markedly. This reflects a policy of increasing localisation of work to reduce costs and the expansion in activity and turnover from non-HMG sources. The number of teachers continues to grow annually at around 5 per cent., with the expansion of the Council's self-funded teaching centre network.

Libya

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role played by the Government of Libya in (a) Guinea Bissau, (b) Sierra Leone and (c) Liberia. [48212]

Mr. Fatchett: We are aware of contacts between Libya and President Vieira of Guinea-Bissau, and that Libya has just sent a high-level delegation to Bissau to mediate in the current internal political crisis there.

We are aware of reports that the Liberian Government are training soldiers in Libya to fight West African peacekeeping forces (ECOMOG) on the Sierra Leone/Liberia border. We are also aware of longstanding links between Libya and the President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, and between Libya and the Sierra Leone rebel movement, the Revolutionary United Front (RUF).

We have been told that the Government of Sierra Leone are now considering their position with regard to Libya. A Libyan delegation made a recent visit to Sierra Leone, and was received by President Kabbah.

Burundi

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Arusha Agreement in Burundi. [48211]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The British Government welcome the progress achieved at the first session of the Burundi Peace talks conducted from 15 to 21 June 1998 in Arusha and the commitment made by all parties represented at the talks to engage in serious negotiations with the aim of resolving the conflict in Burundi.

We welcome the unanimous adoption by the parties of a declaration which includes a commitment to resolve the crisis by peaceful means and put an end to all forms of violence. We call on all armed parties to honour the commitment to suspend hostilities by 20 July 1998 at the latest.

We strongly encourage all parties to return to the negotiating table on 20 July, ready to start a second round of negotiations in the spirit of goodwill and commitment to dialogue indicated by their declaration. The UK and our European partners will continue to support the peace process and the efforts of former Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere to bring about a durable solution to the Burundi crisis.

Kashmir

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent killings in Champnagri, Kashmir. [48210]

Mr. Fatchett: We are shocked by this latest incident in Kashmir. We condemn all acts of terrorism. It is essential that those who have committed these crimes are brought to justice.

Holocaust Victims

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government of the offer made by Credit Suisse, Swiss Bank Corporation and the Union Bank of Switzerland to settle the lawsuits by Holocaust victims in the United States. [48207]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We will continue to monitor with interest progress in negotiations between the Swiss banks and their US interlocutors. Possible wider implications are unclear at this stage. These will depend on the terms and scope of any settlement.

Ottawa Convention

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was notified by his officials that the official opposition would not obstruct the passage of the Bill enabling the UK Government to ratify the Ottawa Convention. [48201]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I was informed by the Opposition Foreign Affairs Spokesman in February that the Opposition would not obstruct legislation to ratify the Ottawa Convention, and the Leader of the Opposition confirmed in a letter of 25 June that the Opposition would co-operate in expediting its progress.

Afghanistan

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each of the past five years (a) the total amount spent by the UN on crop substitution programmes in Afghanistan and (b) the amount contributed each year by the United Kingdom. [47848]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have been unable to obtain the information on UN expenditure. Projects run by UNDCP in Afghanistan have included preparatory work for crop substitution, but the UN has not recorded this expenditure separately.

The UK contributed £900,000 to the overall UNDCP programme in Afghanistan in 1997. This did include preparatory work on a poppy crop substitution module.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring is being undertaken to ensure that money given to Afghanistan for crop substitution programmes is actually spent on those programmes; and if he will make a statement. [47847]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK contributes directly to the pilot projects operated by the UN Drug Control Programme in Afghanistan, and initiated a donor monitoring mission in Afghanistan in November 1997. FCO and DFID officials took part. We continuously monitor the development and implementation of UNDCP's programme through our Posts in Vienna and Islamabad. In May the UK hosted the Afghanistan Donor Support Group meeting which endorsed the full integration of drug control assistance into the UN's aid programme.

HEALTH

Drug Misuse Services

13. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra funding he has made available for the development of drug misuse services. [46613]

36. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the additional resources he has made available to deal with the consequences of drug misuse. [46638]

Ms Jowell: The Department provides a cash contribution to health authorities to purchase drug services under a special allocation. In 1997/98 this stood at £37.2 million. In the current financial year the special allocation is £41.3 million, an increase of 11 per cent.

The Department also administers the Specific Grant for making Payments to Voluntary Organisations Providing Services for Drug and Alcohol Misusers, which will distribute £2.5 million in 1998/99.

24. Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of money invested in drug misuse treatment on the cost to public funds of crime. [46625]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) on 30 June 1998, Official Report, columns 145-46.

PFI Hospital (Isle of Sheppey)

14. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress with the private finance initiative hospital on the Isle of Sheppey. [46614]

Mr. Milburn: Thames Gateway National Health Service Trust and their preferred private sector partner are working together on drawing up a revised Full Business Case for the Private Finance Initiative scheme for a new community hospital for the Isle of Sheppey. The local health authority will shortly be reviewing progress with the scheme and will be meeting my hon. Friend to discuss the project.

National Performance Frameworks

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made in drawing up national performance frameworks for the NHS. [46616]

Mr. Milburn: We have received over 550 responses to our consultation on the National Performance Framework. These indicate wide support for a move to a broader based approach to assessing National Health Service performance and away from the narrow focus of the past. The Framework is to be 'road-tested' by health authorities over the summer in advance of its implementation across the NHS from April 1999.

Breast Cancer

17. Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce waiting times for breast cancer treatment. [46617]

Ms Jowell: We are committed to equal access to high quality health services. We have already made £10 million available for breast cancer services which is being used to support over 300 initiatives around the country. Particular emphasis has been given to supporting projects that give rapid access to diagnostic services through the provision of "one stop" clinics, speeding access to high quality treatment and care delivered by specialist teams.

The White Paper, "The New NHS" sets out a specific target for cancer that everyone with suspected cancer will be able to see a specialist within two weeks of their general practitioner deciding that they need to be seen urgently and requesting an appointment. This has been guaranteed for breast cancer by April 1999.

NHS Personnel (Management Skills)

18. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the management skills of senior national health service personnel. [46618]

Mr. Milburn: It is vital that the National Health Service continues to invest systematically in developing senior managers and leaders.

Major development programmes making a significant contribution to developing the skills of senior managers in the NHS include a new Chief Executive Development programme, a Senior Manager Career Development Service, the well established NHS Management Training Scheme and the Management Education Scheme by Open Learning.

Dental Students

20. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the number of training places for dental students. [46621]

Mr. Milburn: The number of undergraduates in dental schools in England increased from 3,174 in 1995/96 to 3,325 in 1997/98—an increase of 5 per cent. We are to review future workforce requirements, in consultation with the dental profession.

Primary Care Groups

21. Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he will ensure GPs and other members of the primary health care team are fully involved in the development of primary care groups. [46622]

Mr. Milburn: Once Primary Care Groups have been developed, general practitioners and nurses will be in the driving seat as signalled in the White Paper.

We also expect GPs and others to have a say in the configuration of Primary Care Groups. Health authorities must provide evidence of support for the proposed configuration, and we are instructing the National Health Service Executive Regional Offices to ensure that health authorities explicitly provide evidence of the Local Medical Committee view on proposals.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to protect general practitioners within the new primary care groups from losing their resources in the event of a hospital budget overspend. [47098]

Mr. Milburn: We will ensure that the level of investment in primary care infrastructure within health authorities' unified budgets will be maintained and uplifted for inflation.

At Primary Care Group level, through the mechanism of the new primary care investment plans, the level of resources available for staff and computer maintenance will be maintained at current spending levels, uplifted for inflation. Alongside this guarantee and the current statement of fees and allowances protection, a one-year period of notice for change on these items at practice level is to be established.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has taken into account the special needs of rural areas when setting the funding levels for the new primary care groups. [47099]

Mr. Milburn: There will be a national weighted capitation formula to set target fair shares for the new Primary Care Groups (PCGs). It will be for health authorities to determine how quickly individual PCGs are moved from their starting point to their fair share.

The health care needs of populations, both rural and urban, will be the driving force in determining where cash goes.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the ability of primary care groups to decide on treatment for a particular condition. [47097]

Mr. Milburn: The ability to offer patients the individual care they require has been and remains the cornerstone of general practice. Patients will continue to be guaranteed the drugs, investigations and treatments they need. The freedom to refer and prescribe remains unchanged.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposed new primary care groups of general practitioners. [47100]

Mr. Milburn: Primary Care Groups offer an historic opportunity for primary care professionals to be in the driving seat in shaping and improving health services locally.

Community Health Councils

22. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role and degree of independence of community health councils. [46623]

Mr. Milburn: Community health councils are independent statutory bodies whose role is to represent the interests of the public in their districts in health service matters.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations since June 1997 he has received from (a) hon. Members, (b) community health councils, (c) health authorities and (d) hospital and ambulance trusts regarding the future role of community health councils; and if he will make a statement. [46521]

Mr. Milburn: We have received a number of letters from hon. Members and community health councils about the future role of community health councils.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to review and expand the role of community health councils; and if he will make a statement; [46526]

(2) what action he is taking to raise the profile of community health councils. [46524]

Mr. Milburn: No immediate changes to the role of community health councils are planned. It is for CHCs to decide how best to undertake and raise awareness of their activities.

Acute Beds

23. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to increase the number of acute beds in the NHS. [46624]

26. Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS beds are expected to be provided through the extra money made available to the NHS from the 1998 Budget. [46628]

Mr. Boateng: As a result of the extra £417 million we have made available for the National Health Service in England this year, an extra 2,000 acute beds and day case places are being opened to tackle waiting lists and the closure of a further 1,100 beds has been deferred.

31. Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the change in the number of acute beds in the NHS between 1979 and 1997. [46633]

Mr. Milburn: There was an average of 148,725 beds available on acute wards in England in 1979, compared with 108,895 in 1996–97, a fall of 39,830.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Essex)

25. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about hospital waiting lists in Southend and Essex. [46627]

Mr. Milburn: We have received a small number of representations about hospital waiting lists in Essex.

NHS Beds (West Kent)

27. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra NHS beds he estimates West Kent health authority will be able to purchase as a result of the 1998 Budget. [46629]

Mr. Boateng: West Kent Health Authority will open an extra 96 beds as part of a package of measures to tackle waiting lists funded from the additional £5.1 million it received as a result of the 1998 Budget.

Strategic Health Review (Worcestershire)

28. Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he is likely to announce his decision regarding the strategic health review submitted by Worcestershire health authority; and if he will make a statement. [46630]

Mr. Milburn: We are aware of the decision taken by Worcestershire Health Authority to approve its preferred option for service reconfiguration, and that support for this option has been received from 2 of the 3 local Community Health Councils within Worcestershire.

As my hon. Friend will be aware, the Kidderminster and District Community Health Council has formally objected to the proposals. The submission to Ministers will be given careful consideration and a decision will be made in due course.

Cancer Treatment

29. Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to improve patient access to specialists in cancer treatment. [46631]

Mr. Boateng: We are committed to improving cancer services so that all patients have access to high quality, specialist and patient-centred services, wherever they may live. As a first step we made available an additional £10 million for breast cancer services to speed access to diagnosis and high quality services. We have also announced a further £10 million for improvements to colorectal cancer services. The White Paper, "The New NHS" guarantees that everyone with suspected cancer will be able to see a specialist within two weeks of their general practitioner deciding that they need to be seen urgently and requesting an appointment. This will be achieved by April 1999 for breast cancer, and for all cancers by 2000.

Professional Conduct Standards

30. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to introduce professional conduct standards for all medical staff in the NHS. [46632]

Mr. Milburn: All medical staff in the National Health Service must comply with the existing professional standards set out in the General Medical Council's guidance "Good Medical Practice". The GMC has made it clear that if serious problems arise which call a doctor's registration into question, these are the standards against which such doctors will be judged.

Our White Paper "The New NHS" announced proposals to introduce a duty of clinical governance in the NHS. This will provide a framework of local accountability to ensure staff comply with their professional duties.

Hospital and Maternity Provision (Cornwall)

32. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on hospital and maternity provision in Cornwall. [46634]

Mr. Milburn: The proposals for changes to health services in Cornwall put forward by Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority remain under consideration by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State. The decision will reflect the best interests of the people of Cornwall and will be announced when all the relevant factors and information have been properly scrutinised.

Health Trusts (Ethnic Minority Appointees)

33. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of ethnic minority appointees to health trusts. [46635]

Mr. Milburn: We are committed to improving the participation of people from ethnic minorities in public life. Since taking office, 9 per cent. of all the non-executive appointments made to National Health Service trust boards in England have been of people from an ethnic minority background, compared with only 5 per cent. before the General Election. Approximately 7 per cent. of trust board non-executive directors now come from ethnic minorities. The new goal for all National Health Service boards is to achieve at least 7 per cent. ethnic minority participation by September 2001.

NHS Procurement

34. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve efficiency in NHS procurement. [46636]

Mr. Boateng: We have set up a review of current procurement practice by National Health Service trusts in England. This will cover both procurement through the NHS Supplies Authority and that carried out directly by NHS trusts. The review has been asked to report by September 1998.

NHS Medical Staff Vacancies

35. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS medical staff vacancies there are at present. [46637]

Mr. Milburn: The number of National Health Service medical staff vacancies is not available centrally.

Health Services (Birmingham)

37. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with Birmingham health authority about health services in Birmingham. [46639]

Mr. Milburn: The conclusion to Birmingham Health Authority's recent public consultation on 2 March 1998 was an important stage in developing a long-term strategy on the future of health services in the Birmingham area. After careful analysis of the results, and consideration of the recommendations of Lord Hunt's Panel, Birmingham Health Authority will publish, in July, a strategic framework for health investment in the City.

Until the outcome is finalised, it would be premature to comment on Birmingham Health Authority's proposals.

Hospitals (Clinical Performance)

38. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to improve patients' access to information about local hospitals' clinical performance. [46640]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) on 30 June 1998, Official Report, column 133.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to ban tobacco advertisements aimed at young people. [46619]

Ms Jowell: Our forthcoming White Paper on Tobacco Control will set out our plans for implementing the European Community Directive to ban tobacco advertising and sponsorship, which was formally adopted by the Council on 22 June.

The Directive bans all forms of tobacco advertising aimed at young people.

Drugs Budget

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department takes to ensure the NHS receives value for money in relation to the purchase of drugs. [43029]

Mr. Milburn: The Department encourages clinicians to seek value for money in their use of medicines through various means, including publications, feedback on prescribing patterns, and visits from prescribing advisers. In addition, the Department seeks to secure fair prices for National Health Service medicines through the operation of the Pharmaceuticals Price Regulation Scheme and (for out of patent medicines) through encouraging price competition.

Efficiency Gains

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of efficiency gains achieved since 1 May 1997. [46436]

Mr. Milburn: Latest estimates for the National Health Service show that efficiency savings equal to £655 million were made in 1997/98. Targets have been set for further NHS efficiency savings equivalent to £750 million across the NHS in 1998/99.

In addition to this we are committed to a broader based approach to improving efficiency in the NHS. To that end we have:

- set targets to reduce NHS bureaucracy in England by £84 million in 1997/98 and by a further £73 million in 1998/99
- established an Efficiency Task Force to identify opportunities for process and systems changes in the NHS
- developed a revised performance assessment framework focused on improving both quality and efficiency.

Trauma Patients

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many specialists in trauma treatment there are in each health authority area. [46513]

Mr. Milburn: Competence to offer treatment for the psychological and psychiatric after-effects of trauma, like other psychological and psychotherapeutic interventions, is not restricted to one professional group. The Department does not keep data centrally about the number of staff qualified for such work.

Bristol Royal Infirmary

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the advantages of extending his proposed inquiry into paediatric cardiac services at the Bristol Royal Infirmary to include adult cardiac surgery involving the same medical professionals. [46805]

Mr. Milburn: The public inquiry which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 529–39, will address primarily the questions arising from the delivery of paediatric cardiac surgery at the Bristol Royal Infirmary. However, the exact terms of reference will be announced later, and if necessary the inquiry will take account of any related issues involving adult cardiothoracic surgery.

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make an announcement about what form the Government inquiry into paediatric cardiac services at Bristol will take. [46972]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State made on 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 529–39, in which he announced a public inquiry under the chairmanship of Professor Ian Kennedy.

Dental Amalgam

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of research on the alleged link between leakage of mercury in amalgam fillings and multiple sclerosis. [46979]

Mr. Milburn: None. The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, in their recent review of the potential toxicity of dental amalgam, were aware of suggestions that neurological diseases such as multiple sclerosis may be associated with dental amalgam and also of the evidence against this hypothesis. They therefore did not consider it necessary to comment specifically on this matter.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were awaiting an outpatient consultation in an NHS hospital at 1 May (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [47134]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not collected centrally in the form requested.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated and what estimates he has made as to the numbers of people on NHS waiting lists who are aged over 65 years. [46626]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the age of people on National Health Service waiting lists is not collected centrally.

ENT Services (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of ear, nose and throat departments in Gloucestershire. [47294]

Mr. Milburn: Gloucestershire Health Authority will be considering proposals for the future of ear, nose and throat services in Gloucestershire at its meeting on 7 July 1998. Any proposals for service change will be subject to public consultation.

Pharmacists

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to agree remuneration with pharmacists for the current financial year. [47136]

Mr. Milburn: Discussions with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee are continuing, and I hope that an agreement will be reached shortly.

Diabetes Day

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives his Department will take to promote U.N. International World Diabetes Day on 27 June. [47208]

Ms Jowell: The Department was not aware that such an event was planned for 27 June, in addition to the annual World Diabetes Day, which is co-sponsored by the World Health Organisation and the International Diabetes Federation and which takes place on 14 November each year. World Diabetes Day is a reminder of the importance and seriousness of this condition worldwide, and of the need to continue to strive to improve the care of people with diabetes and their quality of life. We recognise that need, and are pledged to work in partnership with the National Health Service, health professionals, the British Diabetic Association and all those with an interest to secure these improvements.

Registered Homes Act 1984

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review Part 2 of the Registered Homes Act 1984. [48011]

Mr. Boateng: We are committed to creating effective independent regulatory arrangements for residential and nursing homes which are tough, transparent and accountable. We are reviewing the options for change, including the provisions of the Registered Homes Act 1984, and will set out our proposals in the White Paper on Social Services to be published later this year.

NHS Funding

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the real increase in National Health Service funding between 1997–98 and 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [48220]

Mr. Milburn: Planned Government expenditure on the National Health Service in 1998–99 is 2.3 per cent. higher in real terms than the forecast outturn expenditure in 1997–98.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46677]

Ms Jowell: The Department's press and publicity division has undertaken the following research projects since 1 May 1997. Only those reports containing commercially sensitive materials and agencies' creative concepts are not made available under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Copies of the research will be placed in the Library as indicated.

| NHS White Paper research | Potential new policy-advice on public attitudes towards the NHS to allow the identification of the areas of greatest importance | This will be placed in the Library in due course |

Correspondence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the hon. Member for West Derbyshire's letter of 18 March 1998 on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Paterson, of the Matlock Dental Practice. [48216]

Mr. Milburn: The matter is being investigated by officials and I will respond to the hon. Member once it has been resolved.

Pharmacies

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pharmacies are currently supported by the essential small pharmacy scheme. [48221]

Mr. Milburn: At 30 September 1997, 251 pharmacies in England were receiving payments from the essential small pharmacies scheme.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community pharmacies he estimates will close if resale price maintenance on over the counter medicines is discontinued; and what assessment he has made of the effect of such closures on the progress of (a) primary care groups and (b) health action zones. [48218]

Mr. Milburn: I have made no such estimate.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the recommended working hours per week of junior doctors. [47749]

Mr. Milburn: The working hours of junior doctors are limited by the New Deal on junior doctors' hours, introduced in June 1991. Overall contracted hours of duty should not exceed 72 hours a week on-call, and for partial shifts and full shift working the maxima are 64 hours and 56 hours a week respectively. Regardless of working pattern, no doctor should actually be working more than 56 hours a week on average within those contracted duty hours.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make the National Health Service responsible for running and financing nursing homes. [47752]

Mr. Boateng: None. Where a patient meets eligibility criteria for continuing National Health Service in-patient care, the NHS is responsible for arranging and funding such care, either by providing it in a NHS hospital or purchasing it from a nursing home. We have no plans to take privately-owned nursing homes into public ownership.

Registration (Births, Deaths and Marriages)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reform the system for recording births, deaths and marriages; if he will examine the system of, and cost of, access to these records; and if he will make a statement. [47754]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have no plans to reform the system for the collection of information for the registration of births, deaths and marriages.

The Registration Acts are quite specific on the recording of information and access to records of births, deaths and marriages. The Registrar General has no powers to make available or disclose registration information in any other way.

It has long been recognised that this is unnecessarily restrictive. The 1990 White Paper "Registration: proposals for change" (Cm 939) made recommendations for fundamental reform of the system for the registration of births, deaths and marriage including access to records. No Bill has been introduced to give effect to these reforms. The Registrar General has been asked to reconsider the proposals relating to access to registration records, and an options paper will be presented to Ministers.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Leicester East of 20 May relating to the Bingham report (43079). [48254]

Mr. Darling: I hope to do so shortly.

Tax Liability

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the arrangement for reducing tax liability by forming a company only for this purpose was first permitted. [46664]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 June 1998]: There has never been a bar on an individual forming a company to reduce their liability to tax. However, incorporation does impose various obligations.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the sum which the Treasury would receive if those who minimise their tax liability by forming a company only for this purpose were no longer able to do so; [46666]

(2) if he will estimate the number of those who minimise their tax liability by forming a company only for this purpose. [46667]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 June 1998]: Companies are formed for many different reasons and it is not possible to identify from tax records those where the only reason is the intention to minimise tax liability.

Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reproduce table 3A.1 in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report for each of the years 1991–92 to 1997–98. [46854]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 June 1998]: Annexe 3A of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report contained an illustrative presentation of the spending plans for 1998–99, restated in terms of the main elements of the new system. Outturn data in this format for the past few years will be included alongside plans for the three years to 2001–02 when the conclusions of the Comprehensive Spending review are published next month.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of introducing a flat rate mortgage interest credit of (a) £20 per week, (b) £30 per week and (c) £40 per week into the working families tax credit for people with mortgages. [46955]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 June 1998]: The information requested is given in the table:

| Mortgage interest credit | Net cost |
|---|---|
| £20 | 680 |
| £30 | 1,100 |
| £40 | 1,580 |

Notes:

1. Figures include Council Tax Benefit savings of £10 million/£15 million/£15 million arising from the £20/£30/£40 mortgage interest credits respectively
2. Costs rounded to nearest £10 million
3. Figures for Great Britain, based on 1998–99 levels of earnings and benefit rates
4. Costings assume all measures from March 1998 Budget are in place (including those taking effect in 1999–2000)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the gross cost to the Exchequer of introducing a flat rate housing credit of (a) £20 per week, (b) £30 per week and (c) £40 per week into the working families tax credit for people in rented accommodation; and what would be the cost net of savings in housing benefit if the corresponding amount was removed from the eligible rent of all housing benefit claimants. [46954]

|---|---|---|---|
| Gross WFTC costs | 600 | 930 | 1,280 |
| Costs net of HB/CTB | 450 | 720 | 1,030 |
| Costs net of HB/CTB: eligible rent reduced by amount of rented housing credit | 330 | 610 | 93 |

Notes:
1. Costs rounded to nearest £10 million
2. Eligible rent has only been reduced for Housing benefit recipients on WFTC
3. Figures for Great Britain, based on 1998–99 levels of earnings and benefit rates
4. Costings assume all measures from March 1998 Budget are in place (including those taking effect in 1999–2000)

Casino Industry

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral statement of the Financial Secretary to the Treasury of 28 April 1998, Official Report, column 234, what factors led her to conclude that the casino industry is undertaxed compared with most other betting and gaming sectors. [47820]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 June 1998]: In reaching these conclusions, I took into account a number of factors. These included the effective rate of taxation on net consumer spend (effectively the house winnings) compared to other sectors of the betting and gaming industry, levels of profitability, turnover and the capacity of the industry to bear a higher burden of taxation.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47366]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The Treasury has no responsibility for maintaining public registers.

Individual Savings Account

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the participants, and the organisations they represented, at Treasury seminars on individual savings accounts. [47729]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The Treasury has held two seminars in London and one in Edinburgh as part of the process of consultation on the proposals for setting voluntary standards for individual savings accounts set out in the Treasury consultation document "Making Saving Easy".

The seminars included speakers from Britannic Assurance, Direct Line, the Financial Services Authority, M&G, Midland Bank, Nationwide Building Society, Pearl Assurance, Tillinghast Towers Perrin and Virgin Direct.

The seminars were attended by some 240 representatives of a range of organisation including consumer organisations, financial institutions and their trade associations, law firms, the press and regulators. Officials from HM Treasury and the Inland Revenue were also present.

VAT (Empty Properties)

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he estimates would be lost if VAT were reduced to 5 per cent. on properties empty for one year or more. [47808]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is not available.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47027]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Women gave her on 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 557.

Retirement Benefit Schemes

Ms Stuart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which funded unapproved retirement benefit schemes are used (a) to avoid the payment of national insurance contributions and (b) to obtain a reduction in a company's council tax charges. [46952]

Dawn Primarolo: Since April this year the Contributions Agency has been enforcing liability for National Insurance contributions on all employers' payments into funded unapproved retirement benefit schemes in a way that matches the Inland Revenue's income tax regime. This alignment of the tax and National Insurance rules is a further example of the Government's determination to make the two systems fairer and easier to administer. Changes to the National Insurance regulations giving additional clarification are expected to be made shortly. Funded unapproved retirement benefit schemes cannot be used as a means of avoiding council tax charges.

Trusts (Compliance Strategy)

Ms Stuart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Inland Revenue has to prepare a compliance strategy for trusts. [46951]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue already undertakes compliance work on trusts as part of the existing Departmental compliance strategy.

Bank Notes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will conduct research into (a) the cost of manufacturing a plastic banknote and (b) its lifespan in comparison with a paper note; and what plans he has to introduce plastic currency. [47199]

Mrs. Liddell: The Bank of England, which is responsible for issuing banknotes, has an active research and development programme which considers all aspects of a variety of substrates ranging from the current high quality cotton based paper to the polymer substrate (plastic). There is no clear information available on the cost of manufacturing polymer banknotes although this will depend on a number of factors including the number of banknotes printed and their actual lifespan.

There are no plans to introduce a polymer banknote in the short term.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the annual report of the Financial Services Authority to be published. [48316]

Mrs. Liddell: A copy of the Board's report, made in accordance with Section 117 of the Financial Services Act 1986, was laid before Parliament today. The report covers the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Engineers

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) male and (b) female engineers there are in the United Kingdom; and how many in each case are qualified as (i) chartered engineer, (ii) incorporated engineer and (iii) engineering technician. [47511]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Phyllis Starkey, dated 30 June 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about engineers by professional status and gender.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the ONS's major up to date source of data on numbers of people in various occupations. The Standard Occupational Classification is used in the LFS and respondents are assigned to categories largely on the basis of the job title and a description of the job provided by the respondent. There is no specific separate question asking for membership (or grade of membership) of professional bodies. Consequently, the LFS cannot be used to provide estimates which are consistent with the qualification categories which you have specified.

The attached table shows estimates of the numbers of men and women in the Engineers and Technologists minor group of the Professional Occupations major group and in the Engineering technician and Building and Civil Engineering technician unit groups which are classified under the Associate Professional & Technical Occupations major group.

Correspondence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Derbyshire of 10 March about his constituent, Mr. Eric Pugh, on the subject of tax relief on resuscitation training materials. [48214]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been considering this matter carefully and expect to be able to write to the hon. Member in a few days' time.

Individual Savings Account

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned to determine whether the new individual savings account will achieve its objective of encouraging more people to save. [47083]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 23 June 1998]: As stated in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) on 19 May 1998, Official Report, column 304, information was obtained from three surveys from the March Budget. Details of the survey specifications and a summary of the main findings have been placed in the Library.

Since the Budget, the Inland Revenue has taken part in a syndicate to commission research from NOP, which included questions about the public's awareness of, and initial reactions to, aspects of the ISA proposals. The results of this research cannot be published for contractual reasons.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those circumstances in which a lower rate or basic rate taxpayer would benefit from holding equity shares through an individual savings account after 2004. [45997]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: The Individual Savings Account offers savers the certainty that they will be able to save completely free of all tax, including capital gains tax, for at least ten years, irrespective of any change in their circumstances.

Sustainable Development and Environmental Protection

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what ways the Comprehensive Spending Review has taken account of sustainable development and environmental protection issues. [47776]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 June 1998]: Under the Greening Government initiative, we are committed to taking proper account of environmental considerations across all areas of policy making. The Comprehensive Spending Review's findings will be reported before the Summer Recess.

Foreign Earnings Deduction

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of North East resident employees currently with foreign earnings who will be affected by the withdrawal of the foreign earnings deduction. [47600]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 June 1998]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the number of employees currently receiving the foreign earnings deduction, the ranges of their foreign income, and the revenue benefit estimated in a full financial year from the withdrawal of foreign earnings deductions for employees; [47599]

(2) what is the total estimated revenue benefit in a full financial year of the withdrawal of the foreign earnings deductions. [47601]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 June 1998]: In 1996–97, the last year for which data are available, about 35,000 employees received the foreign earnings deduction. Of this total, about 15,000 seafarers will be unaffected by the changes. Reliable estimates by the range of foreign earnings are not available. Abolition of the foreign earnings deduction for all employees except seafarers will yield about £250 million in a full year.

Taxation (Tourism)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of levels of taxation on tourism products and services, on tourism levels. [47696]

Dawn Primarolo: I have recently received a comprehensive report from the British Tourist Authority regarding the impact of VAT on the UK tourist industry. This is currently being analysed by Customs.

Financial Services Ombudsmen

Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received, and from whom, on incorporation of the functions of the Building Society Ombudsman into the proposed new single Ombudsman scheme within the proposed Financial Services Authority. [48067]

Mrs. Liddell: A number of representations have been received about the scope of the new single ombudsman scheme from ombudsman schemes, consumer groups, trade bodies and individuals.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on extending the remit of the Building Society Ombudsman to allow him to deal with the complaints he receives connected to building society conversions. [48065]

Mrs. Liddell: I have received a number of suggestions that the scheme be extended in this area, although the Ombudsman can already consider cases where a member of a converting society misses out on a share allocation or payment because of alleged mishandling of an account.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the members of the Steering Group to set up the proposed new single Ombudsman scheme separately identifying its specialist advisers. [48068]

Mrs. Liddell: The Steering Group has been set up by the Financial Services Authority to advise it on the formation of the new scheme. I understand that its members are: Laurie Slade (Chairman), Peter Dean (Investment Ombudsman), Tony Holland (Personal Investment Authority Ombudsman), Walter Merricks (Insurance Ombudsman), Brian Murphy (Building Societies Ombudsman), David Thomas (Banking Ombudsman), Nick Walker (Financial Services Authority Head of Complaints Oversight and Policy), and Clare Boyle (Financial Services Authority Complaints Oversight and Policy Department). This committee is not a matter for Government.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last reviewed the operation of the Office of the Building Society Ombudsman and the extent of his remit. [48066]

Mrs. Liddell: The Office of the Building Society Ombudsman is a private body, recognised by the Building Societies Commission as complying with the requirements of a compensation scheme set out in the Building Societies Act 1986. Its remit was widened by the Building Societies Act 1997.

Duty Free

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to have in place the new tax and duty regime which will follow the abolition of duty-free; and if he will make a statement. [47980]

Dawn Primarolo: In accordance with Community Legislation, duty and tax free sales to intra-EU travellers will cease on 30 June 1999. The details for the successor regime are under discussion at official expert level in the EU Excise Committee. Once agreement is reached, any required changes to UK legislation will be implemented.

Low Pay

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many people in the constituency of Oldham, East and Saddleworth earn less than the proposed national minimum wage, broken down by (a) gender, (b) age, (c) full or part-time employment and (d) ethnic origin. [48187]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Phil Woolas, dated 1 July 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on earnings in the constituency of Oldham East and Saddleworth.

The national minimum wage will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for employees aged over 21 and £3.00 for those aged 18 to 21, although there are a number of qualifications to this general observation.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £2.80 and £3.40 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates and I have provided supplementary data for these levels.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) does not collect information on the ethnic origin of employees, therefore figures for this element of the question cannot be given. I cannot provide data for those aged 18–21 years who would earn below the proposed minimum wage since there were only 7 individuals in the NES sample for Oldham East and Saddleworth. Also, reliable estimates by gender of full-time/part-time status for those employees aged over 21 years cannot be provided, because the associated statistical standard errors are too high.

The overall percentage of employees aged over 21 years in Oldham East and Saddleworth earning under £3.40 per hour excluding overtime and shift payments at April 1997 was 4.4 per cent. Similarly, 5.9 per cent. of employees aged over 21 earned below £3.60 per hour excluding overtime and shift payments at April 1997.

The NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold and in particular those who work part-time.

The extent of this bias may be estimated for the North West by using data from the NES augmented by data from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of employees aged over 21 years earning below £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 3 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the region, and so it would be wise to treat this figure as broadly indicative rather than a precise estimate.

National Minimum Wage

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many women in Wales he estimates will benefit from the national minimum wage. [47846]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Julie Morgan, dated 1 July 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the effect of the national minimum wage in Wales.

The national minimum wage will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for employees aged over 21 and £3.00 for those aged 18 to 21, although there are a number of qualifications to this general observation.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £2.80 and £3.40 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates and I have provided supplementary data for these levels.

The attached table presents adjusted New Earnings Survey (NES) and Labour Force Survey (LFS) data for the number of women aged over 212 years in Wales earning less than £3.40 and £3.60. These estimates are based on the preferred method for assessing the coverage of the proposed national minimum wage. This method reflects the fact that the NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff, earning below the tax-threshold, and in particular those who work part-time. The extent of this bias may be estimated for Wales by using data from the NES augmented by data from the LFS.

There are too few women in our sample for us to use this preferred method for those aged 18 to 21 in Wales, so we have provided information solely from the NES. At the UK level adjusted

NES and LFS data show that the NES understates the percentage of 18 to 21 year olds earning less than £3.00 by around 6 per cent. This gives an indication of the likely degree of bias in the NES estimate.

PRIME MINISTER

Chief Surveillance Commissioner

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make an announcement about arrangements made to appoint the Chief Surveillance Commissioner under Part III of the Police Act 1997. [48812]

The Prime Minister: In accordance with section 91 of the Police Act 1997 I have decided to appoint Sir Andrew Leggatt as Chief Surveillance Commissioner for a period of 3 years.

I attach considerable importance to this appointment and to the implementation of the intrusive surveillance provisions, which form a key component of the Government's response to organised and serious crime. It is important that we ensure that the police and Customs have access to these operationally important techniques, but we must ensure that adequate procedures and protections are in place. I am delighted that Sir Andrew has accepted this appointment. I have no doubt that his skills and experience will prove invaluable.

The Chief Surveillance Commissioner will be responsible for keeping under review the authorisation of police and Customs intrusive surveillance operations under Part III of the Police Act 1997. Sir Andrew will be the first Chief Surveillance Commissioner appointed under these provisions, and will assist the establishment and development of the intrusive surveillance authorisation processes required under the Police Act 1997. His appointment is a key component of the work under way to implement the intrusive surveillance provisions, a process which should be completed later this year. The responsibilities of the Chief Commissioner will include:

- Overseeing and reviewing the authorisation system and the work of Commissioners to be appointed under the Act;
- Considering appeals by authorising officers and members of the public against decisions of the Commissioners;
- Making an annual report to the Prime Minister and reporting to the Prime Minister at any time regarding the performance of functions under the Act.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Prime Minister when he will answer the question from the hon. Member for Bournemouth, West for answer on 9 June regarding reports to 10 Downing Street (44556). [48019]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 596.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 1 July. [47849]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others and will have further such meetings later today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the annual report for 1997 of the Complaints Audit Committee of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and if he will make a statement. [41217]

Mr. Straw: A copy of the report has been placed in the Library. It is a wide-ranging and informative document and I am grateful to the Committee for its comments and its recommendation. The Committee's comments about asylum interviewing are being brought to the attention of staff and interview training will be reviewed in the light of the recommendation.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the advantages of introducing drug detecting devices into prisons in accordance with the proposal of the Chief Inspector of Prisons in his recent annual report; and if he will make a statement; [48175]

(2) what assessment he has made of the advantages of using dogs in prisons to detect illegal drugs in accordance with the proposal of the Chief Inspector of Prisons in his recent annual report; and if he will make a statement. [48174]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 June 1998]: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, Sir David Ramsbotham, recommends that every prison is provided with a passive drug detector dog to screen visitors and to patrol landings. The Prison Service believes that use of drug dogs is helpful in detecting drugs and deterring some prisoners and their visitors from using or smuggling them. So far the Prison Service has about 30 passive detector dogs, capable of screening visitors, and this number is increasing rapidly. The Prison Service is considering options for providing wider cover. The same dogs could not be used to screen cells from the outside at night, as Sir David suggests. However, about half of prisons have active drug dogs trained to detect drugs during a cell search, and such dogs are available to all other prisons from a central pool.

The Prison Service has a continuing programme of research into contraband detection technology. A field trial of two pieces of trace detection equipment is now being evaluated by the Police Scientific Development Branch on behalf of the Prison Service.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the new trials announced by his Department for providing disinfecting tablets for prisoners who inject drugs, inmates will be allowed to remain anonymous; and if he will make a statement. [48168]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The trials are being planned so that prisoners may obtain disinfecting tablets under conditions of anonymity. The prison governors of the 11 establishments involved are being asked to put in place arrangements so that disinfecting tablets are easily available and that those prisoners who use them are not targeted as injecting drugs users.

The arrangements for ensuring anonymity may have to vary from prison to prison to take account of security requirements, regime and physical layout. This is one aspect of the trials which will be closely examined by the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, who will independently evaluate the scheme.

Probation Officers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time probation officers were in post (a) during 1994 and (b) for the latest date for which figures are available. [47829]

Ms Quin: At the end of 1994, there were 7,359 probation officers of all grades in full-time employment. This figure appears in table 8.5 of Probation Statistics England and Wales 1996, a copy of which is in the Library. The equivalent figure for the end of 1997, the most recent date for which figures are available, is 6,653.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time probation officers are expected to be in post during the financial years 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [47827]

Ms Quin: After my right hon. Friend has announced how much specific current grant is available to each of the 54 probation services in England and Wales in future financial years, it will be for the responsible probation committees to determine staffing levels within their services.

Juveniles (Police Custody)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the implementation of the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] on the number of juveniles held in police custody. [47580]

Mr. Michael: The Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] does not affect the relevant powers of the police in respect of juveniles or adults. A person is defined as being in police detention by section 118 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, as subsequently amended. This section states that a person is in police detention if " . . . he has been taken to a police station after being arrested for an offence . . . ; or, . . . he is arrested at a police station after attending voluntarily . . . ".

The Bill introduces a range of measures which will have an impact across the whole spectrum of juvenile justice issues. These measures are designed to speed up the justice process, and encourage multi-agency co-operation in the youth offending teams. As a result, juvenile justice will undergo radical reform intended to cut reoffending. The key youth justice changes will be piloted and the impact of these changes assessed through evaluation of the pilot project, but there is no basis for estimating the effect on the way the police use their powers of detention.

Road Policing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the relative effectiveness of the different ways police resources are spent on road policing in England and Wales. [48154]

Mr. Michael: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary is conducting a thematic inspection of the policing of road users and traffic. It will include an analysis of the key issues and identify good practice. The report on the inspection will be published later this year.

Our Police Research Group has published a study, "Cost Benefit Analysis of Traffic Light and Speed Cameras", which shows the effectiveness and efficiency of those technologies.

We are working closely with colleagues at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and with the Association of Chief Police Officers on ways to improve road policing and action to tackle vehicle crime.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Sustainable Development

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals the United Kingdom Government have to prepare for a world-wide conference 10 years after the Rio Conference to discuss progress on sustainability. [47989]

Mr. Meacher: The United Kingdom's priority is to ensure that the agreements reached at Rio and thereafter are fully and effectively implemented. At the United Nations General Assembly Special Session in 1997, which reviewed progress on implementing Agenda 21 since Rio, all parties committed themselves to ensuring that the next review in 2002 demonstrates greater measurable progress in achieving sustainable development. The United Kingdom strongly endorsed this approach. In working towards the review we will promote sustainable development in our bilateral negotiations and in multilateral forums, working closely with all interested parties.

United Nations Environment Programme

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions the United Kingdom Government have had about improving co-ordination in respect of the United Nations Environment Programme and (a) the Montreal Protocol,

(b) the Basel Agreement, (c) the Kyoto climate change negotiations, (d) CITES and (e) other individual environmental agreements. [48030]

Mr. Meacher: A tendency towards fragmentation has reduced the effectiveness of some environmental agreements. The Government believe this should be addressed. The Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, Mr. Klaus Toepfer, has been mandated to bring forward proposals on improving co-ordination between the environmental conventions to the Twentieth Governing Council next February. The United Kingdom, acting as the Presidency of the European Union, was instrumental in negotiating agreement to this mandate at the Fifth Special Session of the Governing Council on 20–22 May. I also expect the report of the United Nations Task Force on Environment and Human Settlements, chaired by Klaus Toepfer, to make recommendations on this area.

Public Participation Convention

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how and when he expects the Convention on Public Participation, Access to Information and Access to Justice agreed at the Aarhus Environmental Conference to be incorporated into United Kingdom law. [47990]

Mr. Meacher: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 89.

Solvents (Trichlorotrifluroethane)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what risk assessments have been carried out into the inhalation of trichlorotrifluroethane vapours; and how many accidents involving this chemical have been reported to her Department in each of the last three years. [48007]

Angela Eagle: Trichlorotrifluroethane was reviewed in 1990 by the International Programme on Chemical Safety of the World Health Organisation. This covered hazard identification and qualitative risk assessment of the chemical for the general population, workers and the environment. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is also aware of reviews of trichlorotrifluroethane by the German MAK Commission and the USA American Conference of Industrial Governmental Hygienists.

Occupational exposure to trichlorotrifluroethane is controlled under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994. There are occupational exposure standards for this solvent of 1000 ppm (8-hour Time Weighted Average) and 1250 ppm Short Term Exposure Limit (15-minute reference period).

In the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1998 there were no cases of injury caused by trichlorotrifluroethane reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department gives to those appearing at lengthy planning inquiries, concerning their liability for costs in the event of the inquiry not proceeding as planned. [47985]

Mr. Caborn: No specific advice is given by the Department or the Planning Inspectorate on this matter. All parties are expected to meet their own inquiry expenses regardless of the length of the inquiry and whether or not the inquiry proceeds as planned.

Swanwick Air Traffic Centre

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when work started on the construction of the new Swanwick air traffic centre at Fareham; [48135]

(2) how much has been spent to date on the new Swanwick air traffic centre at Fareham; [48138]

(3) what is the current estimate for the cost of completion of the new Swanwick air traffic centre at Fareham; [48136]

(4) what is the estimated time for completion of the new Swanwick air traffic centre at Fareham. [48163]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Construction of the Swanwick centre began in 1991, and the systems contractors were appointed in 1992. The acceptance of the operational computer system from Lockheed Martin took place in April this year, and the project has now been closed within budget at a total capital cost of £350.1m.

National Air Traffic Services Ltd estimate that the earliest opportunity for bringing the Swanwick centre into operation is the winter of 1999–2000.

Extraction Industries

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce into the planning system stipulations concerning the end use of minerals, aggregates and other products of the extraction industries. [48032]

Mr. Caborn: There are no plans to introduce any such measures. The planning system exists to regulate the development and use of land, rather than the end-uses of minerals and other industrial products. Any planning controls over the use of materials away from a production site would be difficult to enforce in practice. However, my Department's minerals planning guidance encourages the adoption of other measures by planning authorities and the minerals industry, including the efficient use of materials, appropriate uses made of high-quality materials, and the recycling of wastes as sustainable objectives for minerals planning.

Bus Employees Superannuation Trust

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy that the surplus of the Bus Employees Superannuation Trust should be returned to the BEST pensioners. [48036]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to him on 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 291–95.

Traffic Calming Schemes

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if additional finance will be allocated to local authorities for traffic calming schemes. [48037]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Allocations to local highway authorities for capital expenditure on their transport infrastructure in 1999–2000, including traffic calming schemes, are due to be announced in December.

Health and Safety at Work

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the operation of section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. [47875]

Angela Eagle: The Freedom of Information White Paper Your Right to Know has promised the reduction of the complexities and duplication in existing statutory and non-statutory access requirements. A review of all existing provisions, including Section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, is underway.

Hauliers (Road User Charges)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made towards reaching agreement on a common European Union set of road user charges for hauliers; and if he will make a statement. [48077]

Ms Glenda Jackson: European legislation is already in place which allows Member States to impose user charges on heavy goods vehicles over 12 tonnes, if they wish to do so. However the Directive in question, Council Directive 93/89 EEC, was annulled by the European Court of Justice in 1995, although its provisions remain in force. Agreement has yet to be reached on a replacement, despite considerable effort during the UK's Presidency of the EU and previous Presidencies.

Coalfields Task Force

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many public meetings have been held by the Coalfields Task Force in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales. [48178]

Angela Eagle: The Task Force held five public hearings in England. There were none in Scotland or Wales because the remit of the Task Force was to develop a programme for action for former mining communities in England only.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the budget for (a) the current year and (b) future years for the Coalfields Task Force. [48151]

Angela Eagle: The Task Force's Report 'Making the Difference' was published on 18 June, and its work is now complete. There was no programme budget for the Coalfields Task Force; its members were not remunerated, and incidental expenses were met from my Department's administrative budgets.

University College Stockton

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has approved the £0.8 million commitment from the Teeside Development Corporation towards the establishment of a new Chair and Research Centre in Urban Regeneration and Change at University College Stockton and a further commitment of £0.5 million towards staff and student amenities. [48270]

Mr. Caborn: No decision has been taken yet. The board of the Teesside Development Corporation approved both grants at a meeting on 20 March 1998. A conditional grant agreement was signed on 27 March 1998 with the University College Stockton for the Chair in Urban Regeneration and Change, but no grant agreement was signed in relation to staff and student amenities. Both grants need the approval of the Secretary of State and they are now being considered on their merits. A decision will be issued shortly.

Local Government Commission for England

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to announce the outcome of the prior options study of the Local Government Commission for England; and if he will make a statement. [48435]

Ms Armstrong: I am today publishing the Report on the "prior options" study of the Local Government Commission for England (LGC). This is Stage 1 of the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Commission which I announced on 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 9. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The Report concludes that the core function of the LGC, to review periodically the electoral arrangements of every local authority in England to reduce electoral imbalances, is essential and that the LGC is the right and most cost-effective body to carry this out. It also concludes that the LGC is well placed to undertake individual structural and boundary reviews of local government.

Other key findings of the Report are that:

The LGC should not be asked to undertake nationwide structural reviews in future;

the Secretary of State should be able to direct the types of review the LGC undertakes; electoral reviews should be undertaken on a rolling basis and not on the basis of the current 10–15 year programme; better coordination is needed between the local Government Commission and the Parliamentary Boundary Commission (PBC);

the two Commissions should be merged.

Under current legislation, the LGC, in planning its review programme, is obliged to follow a review cycle of 10–15 years which allows it neither to prioritise those areas where electoral imbalance is worst nor to have regard to the needs of the PBC. The PBC is, therefore, faced with conducting its reviews using ward data which are often very much out of date.

The Report recommends the longer term option of a merger of the LGC and the PBC. It also makes a number of more detailed recommendations about the role of the LGC.

We agree that it is important for there to be as effective co-ordination as possible between the two Commissions and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, and I will be considering what steps can now be taken to achieve this.

We are also minded, at the next legislative opportunity, to amend the 10–15 year periodic requirement to enable the LGC to plan their programme better, addressing the worst electoral imbalances first and having regard to the work of the PBC.

As to a merger of the two Commissions, we recognise that there is a case for this. We also recognise that such a merger could raise important constitutional issues and have wider implications for the administration of our electoral arrangements. Accordingly, we are proposing now to consult widely on this proposal for merger before taking any final decisions.

I have arranged for Stage II of the Financial Management and Policy Review to take place over the coming months. It will look at the detailed operation of the LGC, in particular its management structures, financial controls and arrangements for undertaking its reviews.

Road Traffic Pollution

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the extent of air pollution resulting from road traffic and its effect on numbers of premature deaths and hospital admissions. [48052]

Angela Eagle: Road traffic is a significant source of emissions of airborne pollutants. Figures for the United Kingdom in 1996 show that traffic accounted for 71 per cent. of national emissions of carbon monoxide, 47 per cent. of nitrogen oxides, 30 per cent. of volatile organic compounds and 25 per cent. of particulate matter. These proportions are likely to be higher in urban areas.

The Department of Health Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollution has published a report entitled Quantification of the Effects of Air Pollution on Health in the United Kingdom, in January this year. In this report, the Committee estimates that each year between 12,000 and 24,000 deaths are brought forward by short-term exposure to air pollution (sulphur dioxide, particulate matter and ozone) from all sources, including traffic, mainly in urban areas of Great Britain. The range for hospital admissions and readmissions was 14,000–24,000. Some uncertainties remain. It is, at present, not possible to say by how much lives are shortened. It is also not possible to attribute a proportion of these effects to traffic alone. Research is already under way to address some of the issues highlighted in the Committee's report.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the forecast growth in road traffic over the next 20 years on the attainment of the Government's targets for the reduction in carbon emissions by 2010. [48051]

Angela Eagle: Road traffic $CO_2$ emissions can increase as a result of a number of factors, which include changes in the distance travelled, vehicle speeds, and the fuel efficiency of vehicles. Energy projections published in 1995 by the Department of Trade and Industry forecast that $CO_2$ emissions from road transport would grow by around twenty percent. between 1995 and 2010. Revised energy forecasts will be published later this year.

Interim estimates based on the 1997 National Road Traffic Forecasts (NRTF) point to significantly lower growth in emissions over the period compared to the 1995 forecasts. The NRTF incorporates the impact of the Government's policy of increasing fuel duty by six percent. per year in real terms, and the improvements which this is expected to produce in the fuel efficiency of the vehicle stock.

The Government plan to publish a consultation paper later this summer on policy options for delivering our climate change targets. This will focus on measures to deliver our legally binding target from Kyoto to reduce emissions by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–2012, as well as discussing how we might move beyond that towards our domestic aim of reducing $CO_2$ emissions by 20 per cent. on 1990 levels by 2010. This document will cover the options available to reduce emissions from the transport sector.

Car Transport

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of people travel to work by car. [48275]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In Great Britain in 1997, 71 per cent. of people travelled to work by car.

Integrated Transport White Paper

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Integrated Transport White Paper will include a cost benefit analysis of the proposals. [48276]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In our manifesto, we promised to develop an integrated transport policy to fight congestion and pollution. Our forthcoming White Paper will set out how we plan to deliver on this promise, in the interests of a healthier, cleaner and more prosperous nation, to the benefit of all.

Petroleum Products

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of petroleum products are carried annually in the United Kingdom (a) by water, (b) by rail and (c) by road. [48274]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The percentage of petroleum products carried annually in the United Kingdom is: 9 per cent. by road, 2 per cent. by rail, and 70 per cent. by water. The remaining 20 per cent. is carried by pipeline.

WALES

Textile Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of jobs in the textile industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [47416]

Mr. Hain: According to provisional estimates from the Annual Employment Survey, there were 7,400 employees in the textile industry in Wales in September 1996; of which 4,900 were in manufacturing and 2,500 in sales (1992 Standard Industrial Classification, Classes 17.10–17.70, 51.41 and 52.41).

Automotive Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in Wales in the automotive industry; and if he will make a statement. [47437]

Mr. Hain: According to provisional estimates from the Annual Employment Survey, there were 36,800 employees in the automotive industry in Wales in September 1996; of which 5,200 were in manufacturing and 21,600 in sales and maintenance and repair of motor vehicles (1992 Standard Industrial Classification, Divisions 34 and 50 respectively).

Deeside Stadium

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to open the new Deeside Stadium at the Deeside College; and if he will make a statement. [47909]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have accepted an invitation to perform the official opening of Deeside College Stadium on 6 October.

Higher Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications there were to Welsh university institutions in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [47903]

Mr. Hain: The information is given in the table.

All applications to higher education institutions in Wales[1]

| Year of entry[2] | Applications[3] |
|---|---|
| 1994 | 119,128 |
| 1995 | 116,455 |
| 1996 | 88,131 |
| 1997 | 91,173 |
| 1998[4] | 87,294 |

[1] Applications are for full time first degree, Diploma or Higher Education, and HND courses. Some university diploma and full-time HNC courses also recruit through UCAS

[2] For 1994 and 1995, each applicant was allowed up to 8 applications. From 1996 onwards this reduced to 6

[3] Applicants to institutions in Wales may also be applicants to institutions elsewhere in the United Kingdom

Class Sizes

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that information is collected centrally about class sizes in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement. [48196]

Mr. Hain: Class size is more difficult to measure in secondary schools than in primary schools where teaching groups are generally based on classes as registered. Information is collected centrally which gives the overall average size of teaching groups in secondary schools but no information is available centrally about the number of classes, or pupils in class, by size of class.

Millennium

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what moneys he has earmarked for projects to celebrate the millennium; and if he will make a statement. [47916]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department does not provide direct financial support for projects to celebrate the millennium. However, in order to encourage festival events, Wales will receive £6.3 million from the Millennium Festival Fund which is supported by the Lottery distributors and New Millennium Experience Company. This is in addition to the £134.5 million which has already been allocated by the Millennium Commission towards millennium projects in Wales.

SCOTLAND

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in Scotland in each year from 1990 to 1997; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (i) in-vitro fertilisation, (ii) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (iii) other forms of assisted conception. [46931]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The information on multiple births is given in Table 1.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what educational publicity campaign he plans to undertake, at what estimated cost, to inform electors of the new proportional voting system to be used for the election of the Scottish Parliament. [47139]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 23 June 1998]: The Government are currently considering what publicity arrangements are needed to inform electors of the new voting system for the Scottish Parliament. It is not possible at this stage to provide details of these arrangements or estimated costs.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest available estimates of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each parliamentary constituency in Scotland together, in each case, with the equivalent electoral registration figures expressed as a percentage of these figures. [47709]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is given in the table. The population figures have been prepared by a method that involves a certain degree of approximation and therefore should be treated with some caution.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount of additional funding which will be allocated to Argyll and Clyde Health Board in 1998–99. [48488]

Mr. Galbraith: Argyll and Clyde Health Board received a base general revenue allocation in October 1997 of £270.827 million and a capital allocation of £0.009 million for 1998–99. Subsequent revenue allocations totalling £14.458 million have since issued of which £1.743 million is attributable to the extra resources made available for tackling waiting lists. Further allocations will issue in-year as appropriate.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service (Exchanges)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to stimulate interest in exchanges of Civil Service personnel. [48181]

Dr. David Clark: The Government believe that broadening the experience of civil servants is vital in developing skills and offering fresh insights. That experience may be gained from a period in a different Government Department, as well as in the private or wider public sector.

An Interchange Unit has been established in Cabinet Office to encourage the exchange of staff between Government Departments and other sectors of the economy, including businesses, local authorities, health service, small businesses and academia. My officials are working with representatives from these sectors to promote greater interchange.

Recent measures for encouraging exchanges of Senior Civil Service staff between Government Departments include the establishment of 'mobility clubs' between Departments with common interests. My Department is also consulting other Departments about what more can be done to promote and facilitate a greater degree of mobility, including for staff below Senior Civil Service level.

Fast Stream Recruitment

Mr. Singh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish the Third Annual Civil Service Fast Stream Recruitment report. [48813]

Dr. David Clark: The annual Civil Service Fast Stream Recruitment Report was placed in the Library of the House earlier today. It covers the year to 31 March 1998, reporting the results of Fast Stream competitions completed during that period and action undertaken for future competitions.

The report shows that the specialist recruitment in the Civil Service faces increasingly strong competition in the graduate market, especially for those with scientific and numerical skills. However, in line with the experience of other major employers, the generalist schemes have attracted applicant fields which are smaller but of high quality, reflecting the improvements made to the Fast Stream information available to graduates.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how much car parking will be available at the Millennium Dome; and to whom it will be available. [48169]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 30 June 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 5 May 1998, Official Report, column 305.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if currencies other than sterling will be accepted for admission to the Millennium Dome. [45134]

Mr. Mandelson: Millennium Experience tickets will be available worldwide on a pre-booked basis and many outlets will handle transactions in currencies other than sterling.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47026]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Women on 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58.

Belarus

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Belarus concerning the treatment of the diplomatic corps based in Minsk. [48209]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The British Ambassador in Minsk, on behalf of the EU, made frequent representations to the Belarusian authorities since they announced on 23 April their intention to exclude a number of Ambassadors from their residences at Drozdy. In addition, the Belarusian Ambassador was summoned to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 4 June and 12 June to be told that the EU found the actions of the Belarusian authorities unacceptable. He was again summoned on 22 June and was asked to return to Minsk in order to convey to his Government the seriousness of the situation with which the EU viewed the actions taken by the Belarusian authorities. He left London on 24 June.

Organisation of African Unity

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government have offered the Organisation of African Unity to carry out peace-keeping and peace-making activities. [47329]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK is committed to helping the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) build its capacity for peacekeeping and conflict prevention. We have been working with other donors, particularly France and the US, to co-ordinate more closely our peace-keeping training. In March 1996 the UK and the OAU jointly organised a conflict management seminar in Addis Ababa. In April 1997 the UK funded the attendance of four participants from the OAU at a role playing peacekeeping seminar, with a conflict prevention element, in Camberley. The UK is planning a Command Post Exercise in the Conflict Management Division of the OAU designed to follow-up a US-run exercise held earlier this year. In Addis Ababa a British Military Liaison Officer works with the OAU on conflict prevention and peacekeeping. In addition, the UK contributed to an EU project worth ecu 860,000 designed to improve communications between the OAU's Centre for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution in Addis Ababa and its offices in the field.

Tanzania

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards constitutional reform in Tanzania. [47333]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The terms of the Tanzanian Constitution are a matter for the Tanzanian people and their elected representatives. We understand the Government of Tanzania intend to publish a White Paper by the end of June, to be followed by a process of wide consultation. We will welcome proposals for a transparent process, and stand ready to provide appropriate support if requested. We recently sponsored a visit to Tanzania by a British expert on Constitutional reform, who participated in a high profile televised debate on the issue.

Arms Sales

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Ministerial directions he has issued relating to the issue of export licences for the sale of British manufactured goods to Taiwan since 2 May 1997. [47570]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Pollard) on 4 June 1998, Official Report, column 349.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mater Hospital, Belfast

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what extension plans have been (a) prepared for the Mater Hospital, Belfast and (b) approved by the Department of Health. [47869]

Mr. Worthington: The Trust has developed plans for the construction of a new three storey block containing wards, a day procedures unit and a pharmacy. This will be funded by the Mater Hospital Trustees and does not require Departmental funding. The Trust also plans for the refurbishment and upgrading of the original building. These have not yet been submitted for Departmental approval. A business case for a 50 bed acute psychiatric unit, based within the Mater Hospital, was approved by the Health and Social Services Executive in January 1998.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Department

Mr. Syms: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on Phase F of the Refreshment Department modernisation programme. [48334]

Mr. Kirkwood: A project to modernise the 30-year-old main kitchens in the House of Commons (Phase F) has been approved by the House of Commons Commission. The project, which is the final phase of a six year modernisation programme agreed in debate by the House on 12 July 1994, Official Report, columns 940–62, involves the total refurbishment of the Refreshment Department's two main kitchens and the construction of new areas for the safe handling of food deliveries and storage.

The work on the kitchens is necessary for compliance with food hygiene, health and safety and fire regulations. During the debate in 1994, the House accepted the evidence of two separate firms of consultants, both of whose reports concluded that the substantial rise in the production demands on the kitchens over the past 30 years, and the changes in food hygiene legislation over that period, had led to the situation whereby the Refreshment Department could not longer continue to operate the existing premises in their present form and condition safely.

Since then, a team of experts and officials has developed detailed proposals for a modernisation scheme which will require demolition of the existing kitchens, the incorporation of additional space and the construction of new kitchens and support areas. The extensive structural alterations which are essential to achieve a well ordered layout and production workflow, are such that the scheme is programmed to take up to 8 months to complete, commencing in August 1999. The estimated cost of the project is £9.5 million, which is on target with the inflation adjusted bid agreed by the House in 1994.

The Commission has since been advised by Dr. Lisa Ackerley (a food hygiene expert who has recently given evidence at the E. coli Fatal Accident Inquiry in Scotland) that statutory requirements would be met only through a total redesign and refurbishment programme which addresses the fundamental problems of poor layout, lack of space and lack of temperature controlled storage. In the face of advice that the failings in the existing, antiquated kitchens

"amount to serious breaches of food safety legislation", the House of Commons Commission considered that any further delay would be imprudent and would in any case by likely to lead to further cost increases.

The House of Commons Commission approved the detailed scheme for the modernisation of the main kitchens at their meeting on Monday 15 June.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Tibet

10. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to help the people of Tibet. [46874]

Clare Short: We are supporting non-governmental organisations, who are working directly with Tibetan people within the autonomous region and neighbouring provinces of China, as well as refugee settlements in India. We are currently supporting projects in the fields of education, environmental health and income generation worth nearly £1 million. We are also supporting a £5 million EU programme which is about to be launched which will provide support to poor Tibetan farmers.

Humanitarian Action

11. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department has taken to improve the effectiveness of humanitarian action. [46875]

Clare Short: During the UK Presidency we hosted a joint Conference with the European Commission Humanitarian Office to discuss the principles that should govern humanitarian assistance. At this Conference I launched DFID'S 10 key principles to guide humanitarian operations in conflict areas in order to better integrate respect for human rights and humanitarian law within assistance programmes. A process of consultation is now underway with member states and EU countries are looking at establishing a humanitarian ombudsman. NGOs are also working to agree improved standards of assistance.

Child Workers

12. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the number of children working for a wage worldwide; and if she will make a statement. [46876]

Clare Short: There are some 250 million child labourers world wide. There are no exact figures, but probably only a minority are in waged employment. Most are beggars, child prostitutes, domestic servants or unpaid workers on their family land. Some are bonded workers who are virtually slaves. Last month at the International Labour Organisation a convention was agreed—strongly supported by the UK Government—immediately to outlaw the worst forms of child labour. At the Oslo Conference in November 1997, we agreed that plans should be put in place in each country to phase out the abuse of child labour and to work to get child labourers into education and to improve their family income.

Desertification

13. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to combat the spread of desertification. [46877]

Clare Short: There are close links between poverty and the problems of desertification and land degradation as poor people are forced to try to eke a living on marginal lands. Actions to address desertification and land degradation are a priority for the UK as part of our aim to create sustainable livelihoods for poor people. We are also working for implementation of the Convention to Combat Desertification. In 1997–98, the UK committed over £27 million to projects to address desertification and land degradation.

Sudan

14. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about Government policy on aid to Sudan. [46878]

Clare Short: The civil war is the main cause of continuing humanitarian crises in Sudan. Our policy is to promote the peace efforts sponsored by Sudan's neighbours under the Inter-governmental Authority on Development (IGAD). We strongly supported the meeting of the IGAD Partners Forum for Sudan which was held in The Hague on 17/18 June. The Forum agreed to send a delegation to Nairobi and Khartoum to try and broker a short cease-fire in the areas most affected by the current crisis in Southern Sudan so that food and seeds can reach all severely affected people.

17. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her assessment of the present level of food shortage in Sudan; and what policies she is adopting in the light of that assessment. [46882]

Clare Short: The United Nations World Food Programme now estimates that nearly 10,000 tonnes per month of food will need to be delivered between July and September to support 1.2 million vulnerable people in southern Sudan, including 700,000 in the Bahr El Ghazal region. £16 million of the £25 million that I have approved since February for humanitarian assistance to Sudan has been allocated to the WFP to help it meet these targets. I stand ready to approve further sums as new needs emerge. We are also currently working to try to secure a temporary truce so that larger amounts of food can be provided to those in need.

Palestine

15. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funding is being given by her Department to UNRWA for the care of Palestinian refugees. [46879]

Clare Short: This year we have contributed £7 million, an increase of £1 million over last year, to United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East's (UNRWA) core budget. In addition we fund a number of projects in the various refugee camps, and plan to provide substantial technical assistance to help support UNRWA's management and financial reform process.

Montserrat

16. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department will provide for a sustainable development plan for Montserrat; and if she will make a statement on its implementation. [46881]

Clare Short: Agreement has been reached between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Montserrat on a draft text which is now being made available for public consultation. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. I hope that agreement can be reached on the final version by August. My Department will make available up to a further £75 million over the next three years to support the Plan. The scale of this pledge reflects the devastation to the island and the constraints imposed on the private sector by the continuing uncertainty about the volcano. If the volcano enters a permanent state of repose many of these constraints would be lifted, enabling the people of Montserrat to take greater responsibility for their livelihoods, and the private sector to take a greater role in rebuilding the island.

25. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's responsibility for Montserrat. [46890]

Clare Short: My Department is responsible for delivering the Government's emergency and development assistance programmes to Montserrat. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for co-ordinating the Government's overall relations with Montserrat.

India and Pakistan

18. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of total government aid is represented by UK Government aid to India in the current financial year; and what changes to this allocation have been planned. [46883]

Clare Short: Provisional figures in respect of 1997/98 indicate that our country programme to India was 7 per cent. of total UK bilateral development assistance. Current estimates suggest a similar figure for this year. In addition to bilateral assistance, UK development assistance is channelled through multilateral organisations.

We have made clear that we will review all our programmes following India's nuclear tests but that we will not take action which hurts poor people who are in no way responsible for the tests.

21. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with other Governments regarding aid to India and Pakistan; and if she will make a statement. [46886]

Clare Short: The UK has participated in the UN Permanent 5, European Union and G8 discussions on aid to India and Pakistan, all of which have resulted in published communiqués. Our bilateral programmes to both countries are poverty focused and we do not propose to take actions which will hurt the poor. But we are in the process of preparing new Country Strategy Papers for India and Pakistan which will consider carefully the implications, including the economic and financial implications, of the nuclear tests when assessing prospects for partnerships and poverty reduction.

Debt Relief

19. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the provision of debt relief to the poorest countries. [46884]

Clare Short: Debt relief can play an important part in the eradication of poverty in the poorest countries. The Government's Mauritius Mandate, launched last September, presses for the speedy and flexible implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) debt Initiative. But debt relief on its own will not lead to the attainment of international development targets. It must be accompanied by a commitment to the pursuit of economic and social policies which favour the poor, and root out corruption and the mismanagement of resources. In such cases debt cancellation and increased resource flows from donors and the private sector will lead to sustainable development and the reduction of poverty.

23. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the progress that will have been made on debt reduction of the poorest countries by 1 January 2000. [46888]

Clare Short: The Mauritius Mandate, launched last September by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, sets out the Government's aims for progress under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) debt Initiative. By the year 2000, we expect all countries eligible for debt relief under the Initiative to at least have embarked on the process that will lead to debt relief by putting in place the necessary policy measures. This aim was endorsed by G8 leaders at their recent Summit in Birmingham.

Sierra Leone

20. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what NGO projects her Department is currently supporting in Sierra Leone; and if she will make a statement. [46885]

Clare Short: My Department is currently providing seeds and tools, building materials for shelter, and medical supplies through the following NGO projects:

Care International: Seeds and tools

Children's Aid Direct: Seeds and tools

Concern Universal: Seeds and tools

Adventist Development and Relief Agency (ADRA): Reconstruction and rehabilitation

Primary Health Care: Medical Research Centre, Bo.

We are considering other proposals and keeping the situation under close review, in consultation with Sierra Leone Government and other donors.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

22. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the proceeds from introducing private capital to the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be added to her Department's budget. [46887]

Clare Short: Proceeds from introducing private capital to the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be ploughed back into the development programme.

Iraq

24. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to provide medical assistance to organisations working in Iraq. [46889]

Clare Short: In March 1998 I announced a new £7 million bilateral aid programme for central and southern Iraq in addition to some £3 million provided annually mainly for the north. £2.7 million of the new funds have been committed, including the provision of medicines direct to children's hospitals and water and sanitation projects to improve environmental health. My officials are working closely with specialist medical NGOs to develop project proposals, especially those benefiting children. In the last two years DFID has funded medical projects worth £4.1 million, of which £2.6 million was for the centre and south of Iraq.

Famine Relief (Public Donations)

26. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department has given to public appeals for donations towards famine relief work since 1 May 1997. [46891]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development has a contingency reserve which can be drawn on to respond to emergencies. Funds may also be allocated from country programme budgets. A high priority is given to ensuring that adequate resources are made available very quickly for humanitarian emergencies, whatever their nature and whatever the source of the appeal.

Since 1 May 1997 my Department has provided over £42 million in response to specific appeals in support of famine relief. These appeals, and DFID's contribution in each case, are listed:

| | £ million |

| UN 1998 Consolidated Appeal for Sudan | 25.23 |

Environmental Protection

27. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her budget goes towards projects which have a beneficial impact in terms of environmental protection. [46892]

Clare Short: Final expenditure figures for financial year 1997/98 are not yet available. We estimate that the Department for International Development (DFID) spent £194 million on bilateral projects which contributed to conservation of the environment. This represents about 20 per cent. of estimated bilateral aid expenditure in that year. It is not possible to calculate the corresponding proportion of expenditure through multilateral channels. Finalised expenditure figures for 1997/98 will be published in "British Aid Statistics" in December this year.

Since 1991, the UK has committed £215 million to the Global Environment Facility to assist in the protection of the global environment. These commitments are separate from those under the aid programme.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from NGOs concerning the future of her Department's aid programme and its effectiveness relating to their own activities in the developing world. [46893]

Clare Short: I have had a number of meetings with NGOs, individually and collectively, at which we have discussed my Department's work and the role of NGOs in development.

We have recently published a consultation document on ways of working more effectively with organisations of civil society, including NGOs, both in the UK and in developing countries.

Russia

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on know-how fund aid to Russia. [46867]

Clare Short: The know-how fund is the primary conduit for the UK's programme providing know how to help Russia and the former Soviet bloc countries make the transition to democracy and a market economy. In Russia, and elsewhere, it has a good reputation for providing fast and flexible assistance in support of reform. Given the continuing growth in poverty in Russia, greater emphasis in future will be placed on assistance for the social, environmental and governance aspects of reform.

The programme provides technical assistance rather than resource transfers and will spend £30 million per year over the next two years. Our strategy paper for Russia will be published shortly and I will ensure a copy is placed in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Film Industry

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the invitation to tender for a cost benefit analysis of the All Industry Fund, approved by the Action Committee of the Film Policy Review Group, indicating the consultants invited to tender. [47693]

Mr. Tom Clarke: A copy of the invitation to tender has been placed in the Library of the House. The consultants invited to tender were Bridge Media, KPMG, London Economics, Olsberg/SPI and Spectrum Strategy Consultants. The contract has been awarded to London Economics.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Uranium

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the figures for the United Kingdom's national holdings of civil high enriched uranium as at 31 December 1997. [48478]

Mr. Battle: I have today placed in the Library of the House figures for the United Kingdom's national holdings of civil high enriched uranium as at 31 December 1997. These follow a similar format to that for civil plutonium, details of which I announced to the House on 2 June 1998, Official Report, column 162.

The House will recall that I announced on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 163–64, the publication of a document agreed among an informal group of nine countries (the United Kingdom, the United States, China, Russia, France, Germany, Japan, Belgium and Switzerland) entitled "Guidelines for the Management of Plutonium". That document recognised the sensitivity of high enriched uranium and the need to manage stocks of such material with the same sense of responsibility as the plutonium covered by the Guidelines. In addition, the Note Verbale associated with those Guidelines referred to the Government's belief that the management of high enriched uranium should be subject to similar guidelines.

In keeping with their commitment to improve transparency and public confidence in the management of nuclear materials, the Government have decided to publish information on national holdings of civil high enriched uranium. I have today sent a copy of these figures to the Director-General of the International Atomic Agency, requesting that they be circulated to Member States in due course.

I can confirm that, as of 31 December 1997, 84,000 tonnes of depleted, natural and low enriched uranium in both nuclear and non-nuclear uses in the United Kingdom were reported to the Euratom Safeguards Directorate. DTI will, in future, publish annual figures both for high enriched uranium and for the total of depleted, natural and low enriched uranium in the United Kingdom civil nuclear fuel cycle.

Scott Report

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Government will publish its response to the recommendations on strategic export controls contained in Sir Richard Scott's report of the Inquiry into the Export of Defence Equipment and Dual-Use Goods to Iraq and Related Prosecutions. [48811]

Mrs. Beckett: I have today published a White Paper on Strategic Export Controls [Cm 3989]. This sets out the Government's response to the recommendations on strategic export controls contained in Sir Richard Scott's Report.

Its main proposal is the introduction of new primary legislation to update the Government's strategic export control powers and to provide for Parliamentary scrutiny of these powers. It also proposes improvements in export licensing procedures.

It is important in a modern democracy for Government to be accountable to Parliament for the way they use their strategic export control powers. We also need to ensure that we have up-to-date powers to enable us to deal with modern means of trading, such as transferring information via the Internet, and brokering deals involving the transfer of goods between overseas countries. Exporters need export licensing procedures that are both clear and consistent.

New primary legislation would:

Provide for Parliamentary scrutiny of secondary legislation on strategic export controls and for the purposes for which export controls can be imposed to be set out in secondary legislation. This will answer one of the main criticisms made in the Scott Report that the Government have "an unfettered power to impose whatever export controls it wishes and to use those controls for any purpose it thinks fit".

Strengthen the Government's powers to take action against the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, in part by bringing controls on biological and nuclear weapons into line with those already covering chemical weapons.

Introduce controls on the transfer of technology by intangible means.

Introduce additional controls on trafficking in, or brokering of deals in, certain goods between overseas countries. At present the Government have the power to control such activity only where this is necessary to implement a binding UN decision. We believe the Government should be able to impose controls in relation to the involvement of UK persons or companies, or other persons in the UK in supplying arms to any country on which we have imposed an arms embargo. We also propose to prohibit trafficking and brokering in equipment whose export we have already banned because of evidence that goods of the same type have been used for torture; and Provide powers to require exporters to report the information necessary to enable us to meet our reporting obligations to international bodies.

We also propose some important changes to procedures to make the export licensing process clearer, fairer and more efficient:

The basic elements of the licensing process will be set out in primary legislation, with detailed procedures included either in secondary legislation or in guidance material as at present.

The system for appealing against licence refusals will be put on a more formal basis.

The export licensing authority should remain within the DTI. Most licence applications are circulated to FCO, MOD and, where appropriate DfID, for their advice and licensing decisions are, and will be, taken on the basis of the advice received from these Departments.

We believe our proposals should provide the right framework for strategic export controls that are both effective and accountable. The White Paper is a consultative document and we would welcome comments from industry, NGOs and others by 30 September. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses, and are available from The Stationery Office and on the Department's website.

Internet

Dr. Cable: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to ensure that children do not view unsuitable material on the Internet. [47889]

Mrs. Roche: We are determined to ensure that children can access the many benefits the Internet brings without fear of encountering harmful material. We support the work of the Internet Watch Foundation (IWF) to uphold the law on-line through its hotline and notification service, and to lead development of an international approach to rating and filtering of content. But we are not complacent, and I have announced a review of IWF to assess its progress to date and to help us establish its future priorities. IWF is now providing a model for action internationally and, during our EU Presidency, we reached broad agreement on a common position for a European Action Plan for Safe Use of the Internet, to promote the safe use of the Internet and protect children from harmful material.

Joint Links Oil and Gas Consortium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to respond to the policy from the Joint Links Oil and Gas Consortium which she received in May 1997; if she will meet representatives of the consortium; and if she will make a statement. [46863]

Mr. Battle: I wrote to the Consortium on 30 July 1997 setting out the Government's approach to environmental assessment of offshore oil and gas activity. The need for this was the main thrust of the policy proposals they had first sent to me in preliminary form in May. The Consortium subsequently sent me a copy of their published policy paper on 24 October, to which I sent a substantive reply on 27 November.

My letter described the important steps the Government had been taking to implement the Environmental Impact Assessment Directives 85/337/EEC and 97/11/EU offshore. The Offshore Petroleum Production and Pipe-lines (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations, which were then in draft but came into effect on 30 April 1998, implement the 1985 Directive as it applies to oil and gas activity across the whole of the United Kingdom continental shelf (UKCS). These Regulations require an environmental assessment (including public consultation) for all relevant projects likely to have significant effects on the environment before such projects can be consented to. I also ensured that they introduced the production and pipeline project thresholds in the 1997 amending Directive, which must be implemented in full by 14 March 1999. These thresholds—which the United Kingdom was the first member State to transpose into domestic legislation—mean that approval of most such projects on the UKCS will in future be subject to environmental assessment.

I also explained that there is no statutory requirement in UK or EU law for strategic environmental assessment of offshore activity in advance of offshore licensing, as advocated by the Consortium, but that the potential impact of such activity on the environment in or adjacent to areas of interest for licensing is reviewed by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) and advice is taken from other Departments with environmental, fisheries and other marine interests before areas are offered for licensing. Comments have also been sought from the Consortium (among other non-government organisations) before recent licence offers, and my letter confirmed that the introduction of the 1998 Regulations would give it and similar bodies a further opportunity to contribute to decision making on relevant offshore projects in future.

I have no present plans to meet representatives of the Consortium.

Bulldog Trainer Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 227–28, (1) what assessment she offered to the MOD concerning the employment and industrial implications of the contract award for the replacement of the Bulldog trainer aircraft; [48045]

(2) what assessment she has made of the costs to public funds of the employment and industrial consequences of the award of the contract for the replacement of the Bulldog trainer aircraft to Bombardier Services; [48044]

(3) what assessment she has made of the employment and trade impact of the award of the contract for the replacement of the Bulldog trainer aircraft to Bombardier Services. [48046]

Mr. Battle: My Department has considered carefully the employment, industrial, and trade implications of MOD's competition to replace the Bulldog trainer aircraft. The assessments produced contain commercially confidential information from the companies involved. Both DTI and MOD will continue to offer advice to the companies who bid for this contract.

Toys

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the presence of allegedly carcinogenic chemicals in children's toys sold in the UK, with particular reference to the use of phthalates; [47408]

(2) if she will ban the sale of toys in the UK which contain phthalates. [47409]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 25 June 1998]: Children's toys sold in the UK do not contain chemicals that are known or suspected human carcinogens. Some toys do contain phthalate compounds which at high doses have been shown to produce liver tumours in rodents, but the significance of this to humans is doubtful.

Furthermore, I am advised by the Department of Health that any resulting exposure is likely to be below the tolerable daily intake, based on this rodent data and incorporating large safety margins, and does not present risk to human health.

In its recently published report the EU Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity, and Environment concluded that it is acceptable to set safe exposure levels for phthalates that are used in PVC. The Committee did not call for a ban on phthalates in PVC toys, but recommended safe limits for their release and that a single test procedure should be developed for use across the Community.

Following my instructions last year, UK safety experts have been leading the research into the release of phthalates. They are working with experts from other Member States in developing an acceptable and validated test method, and the outcome of this collaboration is expected to be available in August.

None of the evidence available has convinced me that a ban on the use of phthalates is necessary. However, I regard the safety of children as paramount and I will give careful consideration to any fresh evidence which shows a cause for concern.

Milk Development Council

Mr. Jack: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons no decision has been made public on how her review of section 508 of the Corporation Taxes Act 1988 will affect the Milk Development Council; and when she expects the review to be (a) completed and (b) published. [47813]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 June 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnorshire (Mr. Livsey) on 1 June 1998, Official Report, column 124. Until the revised guidance notes have been published, we cannot ask applicants under section 508 to provide the information needed to judge their eligibility for approval. Even then, I will not be able to disclose how any particular body's tax position will be affected, as this information is confidential.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 572 if she will list the penalties imposed by the courts for insider trading in each of the 20 successful prosecutions brought under the Financial Services Act 1986. [48248]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Prosecutions for insider dealing have been brought under the Companies Act 1980, the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985, and the Criminal Justice Act 1993. Twelve defendants have been successfully prosecuted following inquiries under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986, one following an inquiry commencing in 1986. My previous answer to my hon. Friend, on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 572, referred to nine further successful prosecutions (of eleven individuals) where a section 177 investigation did not take place. These nine further prosecutions date from 1981. The schedule lists the penalties imposed against all those convicted of insider dealing:

| 22 August 1981 | No fine | No costs |

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will seek to renegotiate the Multilateral Agreement on Investment to take more account of environmental and labour standards. [48050]

Mrs. Roche: The negotiations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) have not yet been concluded. In the negotiations the Government will continue to work for strong provisions on environmental and labour standards.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be Parliament's role in ratification of the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment; on what time scale; and if she will make a statement. [48049]

Mrs. Roche: Standard Parliamentary practice for treaties will be observed. In addition, the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) is the subject of scrutiny by the Select Committee on European Legislation, as the European Community will also sign the Agreement. It is too early to say what the timetable for ratification will be.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the future schedule of negotiations on the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment, including informal and technical meetings. [48057]

Mrs. Roche: Formal negotiations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) are intended to re-commence in October, and regular meetings are likely to occur up to the next OECD ministerial meeting in May 1999, accompanied by technical and informal meetings.

No schedule is yet available. European Community meetings are a matter for the incoming Austrian Presidency which plans to hold them in July, September, and before each OECD meeting. The Department is planning an informal meeting of MAI negotiating partners on the relationship between the MAI and developing countries in London in July.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department has taken to ensure the future technology base of the UK aerospace industry. [48195]

Mr. Battle: My Department has undertaken a wide range of activities to ensure the future technology base of the UK aerospace industry, ranging from financial support for research, product development and manufacturing technology, to the work of officials to organise a cost-effective national infrastructure for technology development. We spent £24.6 million in the year to 31 March 1998 in support of civil aeronautics research activities in the industry and at the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, including £1.7 million to complete the establishment of a major new European testing facility. In November 1997 and February 1998, we announced long-term investments of up to £323 million in total to Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace for product development. We are also providing financial support for programmes such as the Society of British Aerospace Companies "Competitiveness Challenge", a major part of which is aimed at improving manufacturing technology throughout the supply chain. Officials in my Department have actively encouraged and facilitated UK participation in the aeronautics research activities of the European Union Framework Programme and these efforts have been rewarded with high levels of UK participation. Officials are also heavily involved in the work of the Defence and Aerospace Foresight initiative. Under these auspices they have established improved national consultative arrangements for research in aerodynamics and in materials and are now working to create novel research partnerships between the industry and the universities.

HEALTH

Asthma

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the net ingredient cost for preparations used in the treatment of asthma (a) in total, (b) per health authority and (c) per head of population per health authority in each of the last five years. [43642]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the right hon. Member for East Devon (Sir P. Emery) on 22 July 1997, Official Report, column 569. This gave the available information on the costs of drugs dispensed for the treatment of asthma in England by Family Health Services Authorities for the years 1993 to 1995 and by health authority for 1996. Copies of the information by health authority for 1997 are available in the Library.

The net ingredient cost of drugs dispensed in the community in England for the period 1993 to 1997 is shown in the table. Information on the use of drugs in hospitals is not available.

Net ingredient cost of drugs dispensed in the community for the treatment of asthma, 1993 to 1997
England

| Year | Net ingredient cost |
|---|---|
| 1993 | 346.5 |
| 1994 | 378.9 |
| 1995 | 410.9 |
| 1996 | 437.5 |
| 1997 | 466.2 |

Notes:
1. The data cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered in England. The information was obtained from the Prescription Cost Analysis system for drugs used in the treatment of asthma contained in British National Formulary sections 3.1 (bronchodilators), 3.2 (corticosteroids) and 3.3 (Cromoglycate and related therapy). Some of the drugs may be used for the treatment of other conditions.
2. The net ingredient cost is the basic price of a drug before discounts and the addition of dispensing costs or fees. It does not include any adjustment for income obtained where a prescription charge is paid at the time the prescription is dispensed or where the patient has purchased a pre-payment certificate.

Bovine TB

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to increase understanding of the risk factors underlying outbreaks of TB in cattle in the light of recommendations in the Krebs report. [48531]

Mr. Rooker: In order better to understand the relative importance of badgers and other factors contributing to TB incidents in herds, Professor Krebs recommended that high priority should be given to a multivariate analysis of risk factors. Research proposals to assess correlates of risk, to be financed from April next year, were invited in the Ministry's research requirements document published on 20 April, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

However, in view of the importance which both Professor Kreb's group and the Ministry attach to research in this area, we are also inviting proposals for a retrospective analysis of data collected during previous investigations. This will start this autumn, in advance of the main research programme. Notices calling for proposals will appear in the relevant scientific journals shortly.

Milk

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk was imported from France during the years (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97; and how much of the milk was (i) UHT, (ii) raw and (iii) pasteurised. [48259]

Mr. Rooker: Imports of milk from France are shown in the table. Overseas Trade Statistics do not distinguish between UHT, raw or pasteurised milk.

| Year: April-March | Tonnes |
|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 4,624 |
| 1994–95 | 9,079 |
| 1995–96 | 26,789 |
| 1996–97 | 16,990 |

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk was imported from the Irish Republic during (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97; and how much of the milk was (i) UHT, (ii) raw and (iii) pasteurised. [48258]

Mr. Rooker: Imports of milk from the Irish Republic are shown in the table. Overseas Trade Statistics do not distinguish between UHT, raw or pasteurised milk.

| Year: April-March | Tonnes |
|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 51,219 |
| 1994–95 | 106,182 |
| 1995–96 | 77,075 |
| 1996–97 | 67,843 |

Beef Labelling Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the implementation date is of the beef labelling scheme. [47853]

Dr. John Cunningham: EU rules on beef labelling come into force on 1 July 1998.

BSE

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the economic impact on the UK livestock industry of BSE, excluding the effect of public funds deployed during the BSE crisis to compensate farmers for its effects. [47852]

Dr. John Cunningham: In March 1997, UK Agriculture Departments and HM Treasury commissioned an independent study from DTZ Pieda Consulting to assess the economic impact of BSE on the UK economy. The study was completed in March of this year and a copy of the published report has been placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools (Division of Responsibilities)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish information in similar format to that in "School Governors: A Guide to the Law", showing for each type of school proposed by the School Standards and Framework Bill the division of responsibilities between the local education authority, the head teacher and the governing body, assuming the implementation of the proposals in the Bill. [47859]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment plans to issue guidance on the new provisions set out in the School Standards and Framework Bill. Guidance on individual aspects of the Bill will take care to explain what actions need to be taken by the various parties. Revised versions of "School Governors: A Guide to the Law" will be issued in 1999 to reflect the new school framework which will apply from 1 September 1999.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what new initiatives he is taking to promote the delivery of post-16 education in rural areas. [48257]

Dr. Howells: We aim to maximise the participation and achievement of 16 to 18 year olds in all areas through our Investing in Young People strategy. All providers of post-16 education and training will contribute towards these goals. In addition my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget statement on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–1112, an extra £50 million of funding for rural transport services—mainly additional bus services—which will enable more young people in rural communities to access post-16 provision.

University Research (West Midlands)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research funding was allocated in each of the last five years to (a) Warwick University, (b) Coventry University and (c) United Kingdom universities. [48015]

Dr. Howells: The figures for research funding allocated in each of the last five years to Warwick University, Coventry University and United Kingdom universities by the higher education funding bodies are set out in the table.

Research funding 1994–95 to 1998–99[1]

| Academic year | Coventry University | University of Warwick | Total for UK |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1994–95 | 2,462 | 14,460 | 802,091 |
| 1995–96 | 2,614 | 14,618 | 814,250 |
| 1996–97 | 2,701 | 14,565 | 814,540 |
| 1997–98 | 1,287 | 15,575 | 866,002 |
| 1998–99 | 1,471 | 17,222 | 1,025,517 |

[1] Changes have been made in the basis of allocations from year to year, and so figures may not be strictly comparable between years

These figures do not include research allocated by the Research Councils, which are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research contracts his Department has awarded to Warwick University in the past three years. [48016]

Dr. Howells: The Department has awarded nine research contracts, with a total value of £379,282, to the University of Warwick in the past three years. It has also provided £31,665 to a project commissioned by the Government Office for the West Midlands, entitled Partnership Degree in Engineering technology with Engineering Business Management.

The Employment Service have also awarded one contract, to the Institute for Employment Research, to identify and review the available evidence concerning the factors associated with becoming long-term unemployed. The total cost of this study was £3,000.

Details of the projects directly commissioned by the Department are listed:

University of Warwick, Centre for Educational Development Appraisal and Research (CEDAR):

- Evaluation of Development projects for the University for Industry (Stage 1): £44,191.00

University of Warwick, Institute for Employment Research,

- International Baseline Project Part 2: £54,079.09

- A Review of Recent Literature on Intermediate Labour Markets: £10,894.00

University of Warwick, Industrial Relations Research Unit

- Mentoring and School Students Attainment: £10,001.00

University of Warwick, Professor Robinson

- Assistance for the National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education (NACCCE): £32,650.

Details of all the projects funded by the Department's central research budget are available in the Annual Report on Research. The next edition is due for publication in July 1998, priced at £4.95.

New Deal

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what services are provided under the New Deal to (a) those over the age of 25 years and (b) those who have been unemployed for (i) under two years and (ii) over two years; and if he will make a statement. [47856]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for long-term unemployed people aged over 25 provides a much better deal for this age group. People who have been unemployed for two years or more will:

- receive tailored guidance from an ES New Deal Personal Adviser to help them get a job;
- have the chance, where it is appropriate to them, to benefit from a subsidised job with an employer or to improve their skills and employability through a period of full time education and training;
- benefit from further individual advice to build on the progress they have made during their time on the New Deal.

Some unemployed people who have been claiming JSA continuously for a year or more will also be able to enter the New Deal early at the discretion of the ES New Deal adviser. These include people:

- who have problems with reading, writing or numeracy;
- who are disabled;
- whose first language is not English, Welsh or Gaelic.

For those who do not enter early and have been unemployed for less than two years a full range of existing ES and TEC services will continue to be available. These include:

- Travel to Interview
- Training for Work
- Work Trials
- Starting your own business.

Schools Funding

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish information showing the effect in (a) Gloucestershire, (b) Hackney, (c) the Isle of Wight and (d) Surrey, in the most recent year for which the information is available, of the implementation of the proposals in his consultation document, "Fair Funding: Improving Delegation to Schools" stating per pupil (i) education standard spending assessment, (ii) education spending, (iii) the general schools budget, (iv) spending on service strategy and regulation, (v) grant maintained related expenditure, (vi) the potential schools budget, (vii) the aggregate schools budget under the current arrangements, (viii) the local schools budget and (ix) the individual schools budget under the proposed arrangements. [47891]

Mr. Byers: The effect of the proposals set out in the consultation paper cannot be quantified in the manner envisaged by the hon. Member, because the budget and outturn information currently provided by LEAs is not categorised in a way which enables the local and individual schools budgets to be estimated with sufficient accuracy.

University for Industry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what ways the University for Industry will complement the role of (a) training and enterprise councils and (b) other existing training agencies. [48054]

Dr. Howells: While the University for Industry will not deliver training directly, it will connect potential learners with a wide range of relevant high quality learning opportunities, taking advantage of developments in information and communication technologies. It will work in partnership with Training and Enterprise Councils and suppliers of education, training and related services to help stimulate demand for lifelong learning and improve accessibility and flexibility of provision.

Access Courses

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on access courses for mature students for higher education. [48256]

Dr. Howells: The Government's policy is to ensure that adults with the necessary qualities to benefit from higher education should not be denied places solely on the grounds that they do not have the conventional qualifications for entry. Access Courses provide a recognised route into higher education for such students.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Main Streaming

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to present an annual report to Parliament on progress on main streaming. [45795]

Ms Ruddock: The Government have launched a new initiative on mainstreaming which will ensure that the needs of all groups, including women, are taken fully into account in the development of policies and the delivery of services.

The Ministers for Women intend to publish an annual report to Parliament setting out progress on mainstreaming the women's perspective into Government policy-making. The first report will be published after the end of this financial year.

Farmers

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many registered farmers claimed social security benefits in each financial year since May 1997; and if he will make a statement; [46943]

(2) what estimate she has made of the number of farmers who have begun drawing social security benefits since May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [46941]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The only available source of data about the number of farmers in receipt of Social Security benefits is the Family Resources Survey (FRS) which asks self-employed respondents whether their job or business includes any commercial farming activity. The latest year for which FRS information is available is 1996–97. For that year, in around half of the cases that responded positively to the question, the individual, or their partner (if they had one), was in receipt of at least one Social Security benefit.

The total number of farmers, partners and directors and members of their family who were working on agricultural and horticultural holdings on 1 June 1997 was 354,406.

Notes:

1. Commercial farming is defined as self employment which involves the commercial production of crops and crop products, and animals and animal products.

2. The answer refers to cases where the benefit unit to which the respondent belongs is in receipt of at least one Social Security benefit. It is based on unadjusted sample counts and is subject to sampling error and variability in non response.

3. The total number of farmers was derived from the June 1997 Agricultural and Horticultural census of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and is not directly comparable with FRS data.

Child Support

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children are affected by the fact that their absent father is not making any maintenance payment. [47226]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There are approximately 1.8 million children in lone parent families in receipt of Income Support or Family Credit who have no maintenance paid by their non-resident parent. It is not possible to estimate the numbers of children who are in other lone parent families for whom no maintenance is paid since there is no requirement that such parents with care apply for child support.

Note:

This represents a snapshot based on data taken from the August 1997 Income Support and CSA Quarterly Statistical Inquiries, and from August 1997 Family Credit Data. Excludes widowed lone parents who are assumed to form 5 per cent. of the lone parent caseload.

State Pension

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the consequent savings in means-tested and other benefit expenditure if all pensioners were entitled to the basic retirement pension regardless of their contribution record. [46961]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 22 June 1998]: The information is set out in the table.

Savings in other benefits from giving full basic state pension of £64.70 to Great Britain residents aged over state pension age

|---|---|
| National Insurance (contributory) benefit offsets | 0.8 |
| Means-tested benefit offsets | 1.1 |
| Cross additional Retirement Pension costs | 6.2 |

Notes:

1. Amounts are in 1998/99 prices and are rounded to the nearest £0.1 billion.

2. National Insurance benefit costs and savings have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department.

3. Behavioural changes have not been allowed for, other than moves between National Insurance benefits.

4. Means-tested benefit offsets were calculated using the 1995/96 Family Resources Survey, and the May 1996 Quarterly Statistical Inquiry. Both models are uprated to 1998/99 prices, benefits and earnings levels, and calibrated to the forecasts underlying the 1998 Departmental Report.

Income Support (Take-up)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the current research into non-take up of income support by pensioners will attempt to assess the impact of non-take up on the standard of living of the pensioners concerned. [48071]

Mr. Denham: The Department has commissioned research among pensioners to explore their attitudes to claiming Income Support. The research aims to provide a fuller picture of why pensioners apparently entitled to Income Support do not claim it.

The research will collect information on indicators of hardship which will be used to assess whether different groups of pensioner non-claimants experience different living standards. These indicators include material measures relating to food, clothing, heating and consumer durables and details of finances, including savings, debts and loans.

In addition to the research, we are taking immediate practical steps to assist the poorest pensioners by piloting new ways of identifying potential Income Support beneficiaries and then testing how best to encourage them to claim.

Beef Exports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what quantity of beef has been exported from Northern Ireland since the lifting of the beef export ban in respect of Northern Ireland; and how much of this was in carcase form. [47389]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Only one consignment of beef comprising 45 cartons of boneless beef weighing 1,108.7 kgs has been exported from Northern Ireland since the lifting of the beef export ban. Exports of bone-in beef remains banned and therefore no exports in carcase form have taken place.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what quantities of (a) sides of beef, (b) tongues, (c) cheeks and (d) tails have been exported since the lifting of the beef export ban in Northern Ireland. [47390]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There have been no exports of beef sides, tongues, cheeks or tails since the lifting of the beef export ban in Northern Ireland.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the latest available estimates of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland together, in each case, with the equivalent electoral registration figures expressed as a percentage of these figures. [47711]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Mid-year estimates of the population of Northern Ireland broken down by age are available for Health Board areas only. Consequently, the population counts for parliamentary constituencies shown in the tables are taken from the 1991 Census of Population.

Northern Ireland parliamentary constituency boundaries were redrawn in 1996. Table 1 details the population aged 17 and over plus 63 per cent. of the 16 year old population at the time of the 1991 Census of Population in each of the current parliamentary constituencies. Table 2 details the most up-to-date information on their respective electorates. Information on the number of registered voters in each constituency prior to 1996 is not available. Therefore, because the two sets of data shown here relate to different time points, it is not appropriate to determine the ratio of the number of registered voters to the population count.

Rate Collection Agency

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Rate Collection Agency in 1998–99. [48962]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1998–99, the following performance targets have been set for RCA.

Collection and Recovery of Rates

To collect 97.50 per cent. of the gross domestic collectable rate, (excluding late assessments) by 31 March 1998.

To collect 98.75 per cent. of the gross non-domestic collectable rate (excluding late assessments) by 31 March 1998.

To achieve a reduction of 1 per cent. in the real value of the unit costs of collecting rates per hereditament.

To generate refunds to 98 per cent. of ratepayers so entitled within 14 days of credits being identified.

Housing Benefit Administration

To process by 31 March 1999, 96 per cent. of applications for the incoming year received from Housing Benefit recipients before 15 March 1999.

To achieve a reduction of 1 per cent. in the real value of unit costs or processing Housing Benefit cases.

To assess 97 per cent. of Housing Benefit claims free of error.

Statistics and Research Agency

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency in 1998–99. [49068]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For 1998–99 the following key performance targets have been set for the Agency:

95–100 per cent. of key Government users of the Agency surveyed rating its overall service as satisfactory or better, with 50–55 per cent. rating it as very satisfactory.

95–100 per cent. of registered non-Government users of the Agency surveyed rating its overall service as satisfactory or better, with 55–60 per cent. rating it as very satisfactory.

To produce no fewer than 52 statistical publications and 15 ad hoc research publications during 1998–99.

95–100 per cent. of NISRA readers rating key publications as satisfactory or better, with 40–45 per cent. rating them as very satisfactory.

To process 98 per cent. of postal and personal applications for General Register Office certificates within 8 and 3 working days respectively.

To reduce by 2 per cent. the unit cost of producing civil registration certificates.

To achieve a minimum of 3 per cent. efficiency saving.

Full details are set out in the Agency's Corporate and Business Plans, copies of which will be placed in the library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Officers of the House

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will list the officers of the House who are provided with residential accommodation. [48020]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Certain officers of the House are required to reside in the precincts when the House is in session. It is not the practice to give details of the conditions of service of individual staff.

Divisions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Council how many divisions in the House have occurred before 8 pm since 1 May 1997. [48451]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: 129 of the 317 divisions held between 1 May 1997 and 29 June 1998 occurred before 8 pm.

SCOTLAND

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the years 1986 to 1996 inclusive the number of deaths in Scotland as a result of hypothermia. [47970]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is given in the table.

Carbeth Hutters

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the decision by Sheriff Penman at Stirling on 23 June in the case of Graham v Sommerville, what plans he has to reform the law on landlord and tenant regarding the protection afforded by the Rent Acts to the Carbeth Hutters in respect of (a) security of tenure and (b) protection against uncontrolled rises in rent or other charges levied by the landlord. [48072]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 1 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend has noted with concern recent developments affecting the Carbeth Hutters. However, any proposals for new legislation would need to be considered carefully to ensure that the possible wider implications were fully addressed—including, for example, for holiday accommodation, for the management of camping and caravan sites, and for the application of existing legislation to privately rented houses occupied as a main residence.

The Government are therefore not at present in a position to amend the law on landlord and tenant in these respects, although it would of course be open to the Scottish Parliament to consider any proposals for new legislation in due course.

Borders Economy

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further measures he will take to develop the economy in the Scottish Borders. [49133]

Mr. Wilson: In recognition of the problems being experienced in the Scottish Borders economy, most recently with the redundancy announcement by Dawson International this week, I have today announced a package of support to help the economy diversify and modernise. This includes an additional £1 million for Scottish Borders Enterprise's budget this year, a rise of 12 per cent.; the setting up of a new Rural Inward Investment Team within Locate in Scotland to help attract investment to areas like the Borders; a commitment to consider providing the Borders with a reallocation of unused EC structural funds; a commitment to best endeavours to find additional funding if Scottish Borders Enterprise can bring forward further viable projects; and a commitment to keep discussions with Dawsons open and to assist them in their redevelopment. These measures are in addition to on-going assistance to the Borders, including the recent designation of Hawick as a Property Employment Support Programme (PESP) area, which allows greater flexibility to the local enterprise company to assist property projects in areas of social deprivation. The recently announced expansion of the telecoms infrastructure in the Borders will also provide an important selling point for the area.

In response to the call for a South of Scotland Convention I will bring together in the near future the elected members and other relevant bodies to meet on a one-off basis to discuss further the area's economy and needs. The future requirement for such a forum must however be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

University Students

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of students at Scottish universities whose permanent place of residence is in Hertfordshire. [48503]

Mr. Wilson: In 1996–97 there were 459 students at Scottish higher education institution whose permanent place of residence is in Hertfordshire.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which individuals and institutions provided the information and analysis underlying his decision to reprocess existing nuclear materials at Dounreay as part of the decommissioning programme; and if he will place copies of each of the documents provided to his Department on that subject in the Library. [45451]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The Government announced on 5 June 1998, Official Report, columns 385–86, that Dounreay would accept no new contracts for commercial reprocessing, and that UKAEA was planning to complete reprocessing of its own liabilities and of material subject to existing commercial contracts. This announcement was informed by advice from the UKAEA. I have therefore written to the Chairman of the UKAEA requesting him to prepare the information requested and to seek the agreement of UKAEA's committed customers for its publication. His reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Reprocessing at Dounreay has now been stopped pending the outcome of the safety audit of the site by the Health and Safety Executive and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. Decisions on completing the reprocessing of existing commitments will be made in the light of the outcome of that audit and, in particular, on the basis of UKAEA's recommendations of what, if any, new investments may be required.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Opencast Coal

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the estimated tonnages of coal extractable by opencasting from (a) contaminated land, (b) derelict land, (c) other brownfield sites and (d) greenfield sites. [48260]

Mr. Caborn: This information is not held centrally.

Civil Aviation Authority Pensioners

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements he proposes to protect pension benefits of existing CAA pensioners following privatisation of the National Air Traffic Services. [48061]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Details of the proposed public/private partnership for National Air Traffic Services Ltd. are still to be determined. The Government and the CAA will give very careful consideration to future pensions arrangements, and the details will be announced as soon as possible.

Air Misses

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many near misses have been recorded over Surrey by aircraft departing from or arriving at (a) Gatwick and (b) Heathrow in each of the last 10 years. [47992]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not available as requested, but National Air Traffic Services Limited, which is responsible for air traffic services at Gatwick and Heathrow, has been able to provide figures for the number of airprox ("near miss") reports filed by air traffic controllers and pilots in each of the last 10 years within a radius of 25 miles of the village of Effingham in the centre of Surrey, as follows:

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Year | Airprox P[1] | Airprox C[2] | Airprox P[1] | Airprox C[2] |
| 1988 | 4 | n/a | 2 | n/a |

| 1996 | 3 | 2 | 4 | 0 |
| 1997 | [3]3 | [3]2 | [3]4 | [3]1 |

[1] Airprox P are incidents reported by pilots and Airprox C are incidents reported by air traffic controllers

[2] Airprox C data are available only from 1 January 1990

[3] Indicates double counting where incidents involved both Heathrow and Gatwick Traffic

Note:

No breakdown is available as to which of the above airproxes were assessed by the independent panels as being risk-bearing

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many

(a) HGV occupants, (b) LGV occupants, (c) car occupants, (d) motorcyclists and (e) pedal cyclists were killed, seriously injured and slightly injured in impacts where the first point of impact of their vehicle was (i) the front, (ii) the rear, (iii) the nearside, (iv) the offside and (v) unknown for the latest year for which data are available. [48155]

Rail Freight

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the impact of the introduction of 44 tonne lorries on rail freight. [47974]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The issue of the possible wider use of 44 tonne, 6 axle lorries, including the possible effects on rail freight, will be discussed in the forthcoming White Paper on integrated transport.

Single Vehicle Approval Scheme

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry on 19 June 1998, Official Report, column 676, on the review of the single vehicle approval scheme, if enforcement of the Motor Vehicles (Approval) (Amendment) Regulations 1998 will be suspended pending the outcome of the review; and if he will make a statement. [48170]

Dr. Strang [holding answer 30 June 1998]: No. The Motor Vehicles (Approval) (Amendment) Regulations 1998 came into force on 30 April. The forthcoming review will examine how to permit access to SVA without undermining EC Whole Vehicle Type Approval—in particular, changes to the current Very Low Volume limits of 50 vehicles a year and 100 over 5 years. There is no question of lowering any of the existing SVA safety and environmental standards.

Railtrack

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to give effect to the Rail Regulator's statement that diversification by Railtrack beyond its core regulated activity of managing the domestic rail network would be properly ring-fenced and would have no impact on access charges levied by Railtrack plc. [48263]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator has stated that he wants to ensure that the licensed activities of Railtrack PLC are ringfenced and that the other activities of Railtrack Group PLC will not have any impact on the level of access charges that he will set as a result of his current periodic review. The Government support this aim and will consider whether any further action is necessary.

Cycle Lanes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average cost of the provision of one mile of cycle lane. [48326]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Average costs are not available, but since cycle lanes use the existing carriageway of a road and are identified by markings and signs, costs are not high. The limitation in providing more cycle lanes on the carriageway will often be lack of sufficient roadspace.

We are encouraging all local authorities to improve facilities for cyclists, including more cycle lanes on the carriageway.

Freight

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many billion tonne-kilometres of freight are moved annually within the United Kingdom. [48273]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 1 July 1998]: 241 billion tonne-kilometres of freight were moved within the United Kingdom in 1996, the latest year for which figures are available.

Roads

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of incidents of road congestion are related to road maintenance. [48278]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Recent research commissioned by the Highways Agency suggested that, during the study period, roadworks were responsible for approximately 15 per cent. of incidents of congestion. This project examined the causes of congestion on most of the motorway network and a small number of all-purpose trunk roads.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many kilometres of (a) motorways, (b) trunk roads and (c) major local authority roads have less than four years life remaining and require urgent maintenance. [48280]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Details of surveys of the residual life of motorways, trunk roads and principal local authority roads are published in the National Road Maintenance Condition Survey. The report on the 1997 survey gives information about residual life of roads for England and Wales:

| Road class | Motorway | Trunk | Principal |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lane kms surveyed | 4,538 | 13,259 | 32,818 |
| Residual life years: | | | |
| Less than 0 | 5.7 | 8.1 | 15.4 |
| 0–4 | 9.4 | 6.9 | 9.3 |
| 5–9 | 11.9 | 9.0 | 9.2 |
| 10–14 | 12.7 | 10.4 | 8.3 |
| 15–19 | 22.5 | 14.7 | 10.1 |
| Greater than 19 | 37.8 | 50.9 | 47.7 |
| All | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Coverage of eligible network percentages | 99 | 85 | 59 |

Most of these roads do not require immediate maintenance. Residual life is a projection of the structural condition of the road on a statistical basis. Below zero residual life does not indicate that the road is no longer serviceable.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many kilometres of non-motorway roads fall under central Government control. [48279]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Statistics for 1996 show that in Great Britain 12,359 kilometres of non-motorway roads fall under central Government control.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to charge utilities for their occupation of the highway during roadworks. [48555]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None at present, though the issue is kept under review.

Fuel Consumption

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the average fuel consumption figures of a new car in (a) 1984 and (b) 1998. [48271]

Dr. Strang [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The average new car's fuel consumption was 37.11mpg in 1984 and 37.97mpg in 1996, which is the latest year for which data are available. These figures underline the need for further improvement in the fuel consumption in new cars, though recent improvements are encouraging.

Disabled People

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish and place in the Library a copy of the report of the Working Group of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee into the needs of disabled people in the context of proposals to discourage increasing unnecessary car use. [48507]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee presented a report on Restrictions on Personal Vehicular Transport to me on 6 May. I understand that the Committee will be meeting in August to decide whether or not to publish the report. If the report is published I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the recent decision by One-2-One to stop using fast-track planning procedures under the General Permitted Development Order for the development of new masts; and if he will require all telecommunications operators to submit full planning applications for all proposed new masts. [48056]

Mr. Caborn: Local planning authorities have the opportunity to exercise control over the siting of individual mast developments, whether that be through the consideration of a full planning application or the determination of a full planning application or the determination of a "prior approval" application under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995. The permission for telecommunications masts granted by the Order is subject to certain conditions, one of which is that the developer should make a "prior approval" application to the local planning authority. The developer may accept the conditions and take advantage of the Order permission. If, however, the developer is not prepared to accept a condition, the Order permission is self-evidently not available, and it is open to him to make a planning application to the local planning authority in the ordinary way. Currently we have no plans to make all mast development subject to a full planning application.

Local Authority Transport Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much central Government money was used in each of the past five years to help local authorities develop PFI deals for (a) road schemes and (b) other transport services; and if he will list the schemes. [48914]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1993–94 a final grant payment of £13,279 was made as part of assistance given to West Midlands Passenger Transport Authority to assist with the development of a concession agreement for the West Midlands Metro line 1. Since that time no local authority has been allocated resources tied specifically to the development of a deal in the transport sector which involves private finance.

A considerable number of authorities do, however, receive funding for local transport packages and some package resources may have been used by authorities to support their expenditure in developing PFI cases. This is most likely in the case of light rail proposals but might also occur for other kinds of infrastructure where a major development forms part of the local package strategy.

Hedgerows

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the results of the Review of the Hedgerows Regulations 1997. [49069]

Mr. Meacher: I have today published the report of the group set up to review how the Hedgerows Regulations 1997 might be strengthened. Copies have been placed in the House Library.

The agreed report of the review group demonstrates a thorough investigation of the issues, careful analysis of possible options and puts forward proposals which are sensible and balanced. They include simpler criteria representing the landscape, historic and wildlife importance of hedgerows; and increasing the extra time for local planning authorities to consider hedgerow removal notices from six to eight weeks.

Before these proposals can be worked up into revised draft Hedgerows Regulations, we will commission research into the group's proposed criteria defining important hedgerows. This should provide an estimate of the percentage of hedgerows they would be likely to protect. We will also reflect on their suggestion that, in the longer term, further consideration be given to altering the Environment Act 1995 so that local authorities—rather than Ministers—can determine which hedgerows in their area are important and worthy of protection.

Packaging

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received the report of the Advisory Committee on Packaging on the Review of Packaging Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [49070]

Mr. Meacher: I am today placing in the Library a copy of the Advisory Committee on Packaging's Report on the operation of the Producer Responsibility (Packaging Waste) Obligations Regulations 1997.

The Committee's principal conclusion is that adjustments to the Packaging Regulations should be kept to the minimum in view of the very short timescale for achieving the Directive targets set for 2001, the costs to business and the need to encourage investment in the expansion of recycling and collection capacity. Sir Peter Parker's report includes specific recommendations on the PRN system: in particular, that the PRN mechanism should be more transparent to assure all parties that the funds raised are deployed effectively to increase collection and reprocessing capacity; and that the PRNs should be issued to obligated producers or their representatives only. The report recommends the development of a national packaging planning framework to give the parties involved greater confidence in planning on the achievement of the packaging waste recovery targets, and to contribute to the national Waste Strategy. The Committee also recommends that there should be mechanisms developed to promote cost pass through by the various sectors, but that, where this fails, "hardship criteria" should be established to determine where a case merited review.

Clearly this is still a relatively early point in the operation of these Regulations which are based on an inter-sectoral industry agreement, and I am keen that the Government should continue to have the benefit of the Advisory Committee's views on such issues as may arise in this challenging period as we seek to double the UK's packaging recycling activity. I will be discussing with Sir Peter how the Committee can continue in this valuable role.

Humber Bridge

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when decisions will be reached on the treatment of the debts of the Humber Bridge. [49132]

Dr. Strang: A new loan agreement between the Secretary of State and the Humber Bridge Board has been signed. In accordance with that agreement, and with effect from 1 April this year, some £62m of debts owed by the Board to the Public Works Loan Board will be written off and interest payments due on debts of £359m owed to the Secretary of State for Transport will initially be reduced to about a fifth of what they would otherwise have been.

The agreement provides that fixed rate interest charges will be broadly aligned with current rates and that, initially, interest charges on £240m of the debt will be suspended. Over the next 16 years suspended debt will be reactivated by instalments starting with the sum of £11m in the next financial year and, in succeeding years, by additional amounts increased by 4 per cent. per annum. All the debt owed to the Secretary of State is to be repaid within the next 40 years.

These arrangements are to be implemented, with the approval of Parliament, through an Order under the Humber Bridge (Debts) Act 1996 which I will lay before Parliament shortly. They should not result in any increase in the real value of the tolls charged at the Humber Bridge. But they should provide the solution to the problem of the unrealistic escalation of the Humber Bridge debt that has long been promised.

TECs and Business Links

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a pilot programme in an English region under which the operation of (a) TECs and (b) Business Links would be the responsibility of the relevant RDA; and if he will make a statement. [46950]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply to this question.

As mentioned in the Government's response to the Education and Employment Select Committee's recent report into the relationship between TECs and the proposed Regional Development Agencies (RDAs), we consider that it would be inappropriate to introduce a project piloting alternative methods of contracting with TECs before the current review of the future role of TECs has been completed. The Government will review the situation when the review of TECs is completed.

We are currently considering ways of ensuring that, as mentioned in the Government's White Paper on RDAs ('Building Partnerships for Prosperity'), RDAs will work closely with TECs and Business Links to make sure that their services match more closely the needs of their region and contribute to regional economic objectives.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Wind Farms

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the feasibility of off-shore wind farms. [45666]

Mr. Battle: An appraisal of the prospects for, and constraints on, the development of both onshore and offshore wind was published as 'An Assessment of Renewable Energy in the UK' by HMSO in 1994. Since then my Department's New and Renewable Energy Programme has supported a wide range of research projects related to wind energy and geared mainly towards onshore deployment, stimulated by successive Orders under the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation. Current work, however, includes monitoring the development of the first offshore wind NFFO project at Blythe, and assessing the commercial opportunities for UK manufacturing industry within the offshore wind arena. Total DTI expenditure on wind energy projects in 1997/98 was £1.5 million.

My current review of renewable energy, including onshore and offshore wind energy, is considering the contribution each source could make, the barriers to deployment and the measures which may be necessary to overcome them, and the need for research, development, demonstration, and dissemination. I expect to make an announcement about the Review later this year.

Trade Statistics (Pakistan)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total value of (a) exports to and (b) imports from Pakistan for each of the last five years for which records are available; what are the major categories of exports and imports; and if she will make a statement. [48182]

Mrs. Roche: The information is given in the following tables:

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy on the Government's target to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide by 20 per cent. by the year 2010. [46234]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government plan to publish a consultation paper on climate change this summer. This will focus on policy options for meeting our legally binding target from Kyoto, but also look at measures that would move beyond that towards our aim of a 20 per cent. reduction in $CO_2$ emissions. We are inviting views from all sectors throughout this consultation process.

As part of the process, we are committed to a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources. We inherited a figure of 2 per cent. renewables contribution to UK electricity supplies. This is expected to rise to 5 per cent. by about 2003. On 6 June 1997, Official Report, column 273, my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry, announced a review of our renewable policy of what would be necessary and practical to meet our target of 10 per cent. of UK electricity supplies from renewables by 2010. I hope to announce the results of that review shortly.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the projects undertaken by her Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if she will place the results of the research in the Library. [46682]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The Department has carried out the following surveys into current policies and potential new policies since 1 May 1997:

- Biotechnology Means Business Evaluation
- Business Links Baseline Tracking Study
- Competitiveness Analysis of UK Downstream Gas Industry
- Degradation of Materials in Aggressive Environments
- Design Council Evaluation and Tracking Study
- Environmental Technology Best Practice Programme (Series of ad hoc surveys)
- Evaluation of Regional Supply Network
- Evaluation of Export Market Research Scheme*
- Evaluation of Design of High Speed Machinery Programme
- Evaluation of Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme*
- Evaluation of RETEX Initiative
- Evaluation of KONVER Initiative
- Evaluation of Industry '96
- Future Market Potential for Photovoltaic Products
- Interim Evaluation of DTI's Biotechnology Means Business Initiative*
- Materials Measurement Evaluation Survey*
- Mid-term Review of BNSC Applications Demonstration Programme
- Review of European Supported Networks
- South-east Asia "Lands of Opportunity" Campaign
- Support for Overseas Trade Fairs & Seminars Study
- Survey as part of an Evaluation of OSO Support for Innovation*
- Survey of Machinery Exporters concerning Single Market Barriers to Trade*
- UK Business Potential for Virtual Reality*
- Workplace Employee Relations Survey*.

The distinction between current and potential policies is not one the Department uses, since evaluations of current policy will shape future policy.

Where the results of these surveys are not already in the Library of the House, arrangements are being made for them to be placed there. The only exception is the report of the Mid-term Review of BNSC Applications Demonstration Programme, which is classified 'Commercial in Confidence'.

Those surveys marked with an asterisk have not yet been completed. Copies of the reports on these surveys will be placed in the Library of the House when completed.

I have also placed in the Library a list of all significant public consultation exercises carried out by my Department since 1 May 1997.

Manufacturing Industry (East Asian Economic Crisis)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the effects of the East Asian economic crisis on employment in the UK manufacturing sector. [48494]

Mr. Battle: The economic situation in East Asia is still evolving and the Government are monitoring it carefully. Adverse developments in the region are not good news in the short term for UK exporters with a significant presence there. Obviously, the prospects for manufacturing employment in the UK over the long term depend on the underlying competitiveness of British manufacturers, and that is an agenda which DTI is specifically addressing.

Mirror Group

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the report of the investigation into the 1991 flotation of the Mirror Group; and if she will make a statement. [48558]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The inspectors have not yet reported to the Secretary of State.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's role in discussions relating to the European structural funds for the period 2000 to 2006. [48774]

Mrs. Roche: The Department of Trade & Industry is the lead Department on the reform of the European Structural and Cohesion Funds. Our responsibility is to co-ordinate UK policy on the reform for all Government Departments including Welsh, Scottish, and Northern Ireland Offices.

Discussions have started on the proposed regulations by Member States at working group level. Officials of the Department of Trade & Industry attend on behalf of the UK, supported by other interested departments.

Concessionary Admission Charges

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what initiatives his Department is supporting for pensioners' concessionary admission charges at arts, leisure and tourist venues. [47678]

Mr. Fisher: One of my Department's key objectives is to widen access to arts, leisure and tourist venues for all groups, including older people. Whilst pricing policies are at the discretion of the governing bodies of individual arts, leisure and tourist organisations to decide, the Department has a number of initiatives in place.

We recently announced a £5 million New Audiences fund which will be used to discover the most effective ways to increase access to the arts for all age groups.

All the national museums and galleries that charge for admission offer concessionary rates for older people. In addition, our Code of Good Access Practice, which we have issued for consultation to the wider museums and galleries sector, asks for views on whether there should be a standard group of concessions, including senior citizens. We hope to publish the final Code in the summer.

Our new Sport for All policy will ensure that sporting opportunities are available to older people.

One of the Tourism Forum Working Groups has been considering widening access for older people. The Group's report will feed into the new tourism strategy which should be published later this year.

New Policy Directions issued on 1 June to Lottery distributors emphasised the importance of access for all. We are also encouraging local authorities to develop and publish leisure strategies to improve planning and policy making on issues such as widening access.

2006 World Cup

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on progress in England's bid to host the 2006 World Cup. [47607]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The Government are providing the fullest diplomatic and promotional support for the FA's bid to stage the 2006 World Cup. It is an excellent bid which, I believe, stands a very good chance of success. I hold regular meetings with the FA Campaign Team, and have joined FA delegations at meetings with several members of the FIFA Executive Committee, either here in London or in their home countries, to promote the merits of the bid. I intend to accompany FA delegations on future visits to promote the bid, as Parliamentary business allows. I have written to hon. Members urging them to use every opportunity to support the bid and have been heartened by the positive response I have received.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which stadiums he has evaluated in the planning of the bid to host the 2006 World Cup. [47604]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 29 June 1998]: This is a matter for the Football Association which need to meet the FIFA bid requirements which are due to be published at the end of 1998. Our stadia are amongst the best in the world, and were instrumental in making Euro 96 such a success. The FA will have many excellent stadia from which to choose.

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from (a) sporting bodies and (b) sporting individuals in (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales in respect of their access to the UK Sports Institute network; and if he will make a statement. [47795]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 June 1998]: No representations have been received in my Department from sporting bodies or sporting individuals in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales in respect of their access to the UK Sports Institute. Such individuals and bodies are, of course, welcome to discuss access to the UK Sports Institute network with the UK Sports Council.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the measures his Department has taken to invite sports to participate in the UK Sports Institute. [47796]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 June 1998]: Eight Sports Governing Bodies took up an invitation to have a statement of their potential requirements for training and related facilities added at the shortlisting stage of the bidding process for the UK Sports Institute Headquarters. Discussions are taking place at UK and Home Country level with Governing Bodies to establish the extent of their participation in the UK Sports Institute network, in terms of facilities, and in respect of their World Class Performance Plans.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made in respect of the provision of (a) sports medicine, (b) sports science, (c) sports research, (d) talent identification and (e) the setting of standards within the UK Sports Institute. [47794]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The UK Sports Council has set up a sports science/sports medicine technical committee with representatives from each discipline to develop the approach to these services for the UK Sports Institute. The Institute will play a key role in sports research. The UK Sports Council is taking a lead in discussions with interested parties to establish systems to help identify sporting talent. The UK Sports Institute Headquarters will be responsible for accrediting the UK Sports Institute network to standards laid down by the UK Sports Council.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the nature of the sports research to be undertaken by the UK Sports Institute. [47793]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The nature of the sports research to be undertaken by the UK Sports Institute has not yet been defined but will complement the provision of services and training facilities to our top sportsmen and women. I understand that the hon. Member will be meeting the UKSI Project Team at the UK Sports Council next month and he will be able to get further reassurance on this and a range of related issues.

UK Sports Council

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the support provided to the United Kingdom's top sportsmen and women by the UK Sports Council; and if he will make a statement. [48906]

Mr. Chris Smith: Our top sportsmen and women need more support from Government and they will get it when the present arrangements for excellence in UK sport are strengthened and streamlined. Devolution offers the opportunity to be much clearer in future about who provides help for what aspects of sport. The arrangements I am announcing today will ensure that sport in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland develops in line with what is wanted in each of those parts of the United Kingdom, and that we combine our strengths on the international stage.

I have agreed with my colleagues that we will radically change the United Kingdom Sports Council, which we inherited from the previous Government. Our new strategy will give strong national direction and the powers to implement it. To support sport at UK level there will in future be:

A "Sports Cabinet", chaired by me and bringing together the Sports Ministers of the four parts of the UK and others who are closely involved in the development of sport; and a stronger United Kingdom Sports Council to provide supports to our top athletes.

The Sports Cabinet will meet several times a year and will give the joint political direction which was lacking in the current arrangements. The group will bring together the Ministers responsible for sport in the four parts of the UK under my Chairmanship. As the Scottish Parliament and the Assemblies in Wales and Northern Ireland come into being the foremost member responsible for sport in each will take the place of the Government Minister for that part of the UK. The arm's length principle which we continue to hold important will be preserved, but the Cabinet will fill the policy vacuum which would exist if there were no opportunity for the collective political discussion of the most strategic priorities for UK sport.

The strengthened UK Sports Council will coordinate: support to sports which compete internationally as the UK; combating drug misuse; international relations; major events; and development work on the UK Sports Institute. The Council will continue to operate at arm's length from Government. It will receive public funding from me and that funding will be subject to an agreement about key priorities. I would therefore expect the Sports Cabinet to exercise considerable influence over the affairs of the UK Sports Council.

The Council will, for the first time, have direct control over Lottery funding which it will exercise independently. The funds will be allocated from the share Parliament has already allocated to the good cause of Sport. I will bring forward in the new session a negative resolution Order establishing the UKSC as a distributor and reallocating the sports good cause share between the five Councils. I estimate the UKSC will need about 5 per cent. (or £15 million) of the sports fund each year as well as a transfer to meet the commitment to building and running the Headquarters of the UK Sports Institute in Sheffield.

I am commissioning today the detailed work to put these arrangements in place. Working with the Councils we will define clearly what is the remit of each distributor, bring forward any amendments to the Royal Charters which may be necessary and prepare the policy and financial directions.

The Council also needs strong leadership. I have decided it is essential it has its own Chair, a person of standing in sport, who would not be the Chair of one of the Home Country Sports Councils. I have also decided there should be at least seven independent Members including athletes and lay people with an enthusiasm for top class sport.

I am today announcing that Sir Rodney Walker will leave the English Sports Council (ESC) and become Chair of the UKSC after the ESC's meeting next Monday. I have also indicated to the Council that I would be pleased if Craig Reedie became Sir Rodney's named deputy, to reflect the fact that the Olympic sports must compete as Great Britain and the role the British Olympic Association is expected to play in the UK Sports Institute. I am also pleased to announced that Trevor Brooking the Current Vice Chairman of the ESC, has agreed to become Acting Chairman of that Council. The Chair at the ESC and new UKSC members will be appointed in accordance with the guidance of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

I have agreed with the new Chairman that from 13 July the new Chief Executive of the UKSC should be David Chesterton, a senior civil servant on secondment from my Department. He will replace Howard Wells, who resigned recently.

Football Task Force

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the Football Task Force report on ticketing will be published; and if he will make a statement. [47893]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The Task Force is due to publish its report on ticketing, marketing and other commercial aspects of the game by the end of the year.

TREASURY

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to the Accounting Standards Board on the proper presentation of risks and liabilities of Private Finance Initiative schemes. [44719]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Accounting Standards Board regarding exposure draft FRS 5 on Accounting for the Substance of Transactions. [46375]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answers 10 and 18 June 1998]: In December 1997 the Accounting Standards Board (ASB) issued for comment an Exposure Draft on the accounting treatment of Private Finance Initiative transactions. HM Treasury submitted its formal response to the ASB on 3 March 1998 and we are continuing to have discussions with ASB representatives on this subject.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Treasury will be bound by the terms of the exposure draft FRS 5. [46857]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 22 June 1998]: The proposed Application Note to FRS5 on the accounting treatment of Private Finance Initiative transactions is still in draft form and we are continuing to have discussions with representatives of the Accounting Standards Board (ASB). The Treasury will consider the Application Note when it is published in final form.

Unemployment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on unemployment of a one per cent. increase in average earnings unmatched by any increase in productivity. [48556]

Mrs. Liddell: Pay in all sectors, and at all levels, must be related to what can be afforded. Excessive wage growth would tend to raise unemployment, but the precise effect would depend upon why wages increased, and how employers and employees reacted to the increase.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Self-harm)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of incidents of self-harm by (a) 15 and 16 year olds on remand in adult prisons and (b) other offenders aged under 21 years in custody which go unreported. [43835]

Ms Quin: I will write to the hon. Member.

Correspondence

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the volume of correspondence sent to and received from hon. Members by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in the periods of (a) 1 January to 26 March 1994 and (b) 1 January to 26 March 1998. [47690]

Mr. Straw: The volume of correspondence sent to, and received from, hon. Members by my Department between the dates in question was as follows:

| | Sent | Received |
|---|---|---|
| 1 January–26 March 1994 | 4,821 | 6,146 |
| 1 January–26 March 1998 | 4,980 | 5,855 |

Medway Training Centre

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions mail sent to a child at the Medway Training Centre has been withheld. [48161]

Mr. Michael: I am told that no such mail has been withheld.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of (a) self-harm and (b) attempted suicide by children have taken place at the Medway Training Centre. [48160]

Mr. Michael: There has been one incident of self-harm, in which the trainee scratched his arm. He was seen by medical staff but no treatment was required. No trainee has attempted suicide.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Home Office monitor is assigned to the Medway Training Centre; and if he will indicate their experience of working with institutions for children. [48162]

Mr. Michael: Brett Robinson, a Home Office official, is currently the Monitor for Medway Secure Training Centre, and he has a statutory duty to report to the Secretary of State on how the STC is being run. He has not had direct experience of working within an institution for children, but his training for the post included periods at local authority secure units. The Monitor has a wide range of experience which fits him for the role of monitoring the performance of the contractor in delivering the service required at the STC, including compliance with the Statutory Rules.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs have been incurred by the public sector for unfilled places at the Medway Training Centre since its opening. [48159]

Mr. Michael: The contract price is determined by the availability of places and the quality of service provided. There is a fixed daily price for the first 30 places available, irrespective of whether they are occupied or not, and a lower daily rate for the final 10 places if these are used.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many employees at the Medway Training Centre have previous experience of working with children with a history of offending. [48158]

Mr. Michael: We understand that around 30 per cent. of the staff who work directly with trainees at Medway Secure Training Centre have previously worked with young people with a history of offending. All staff have received training in understanding and dealing with disturbed adolescents.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost of keeping a child at the Medway Training Centre. [48157]

Mr. Michael: The average cost of a place at Medway is £2,400 per week excluding capital costs. This compares with the average cost in local authority secure accommodation for 1997–98 of £2,570.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many family or social visits to a child held at the Medway Training Centre have been stopped since its opening. [48156]

Mr. Michael: None.

Drug Users

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the funding of the South and West Devon fast track diversion and stabilisation scheme for drug users. [48145]

Mr. George Howarth: I am aware that the scheme is currently facing some funding difficulties, and am consulting my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health on how these difficulties might be resolved.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about the South and West Devon fast track diversion and stabilisation scheme for drug users. [48149]

Mr. George Howarth: On 15 June, I met the Chief Probation Officer of Devon Probation Service and His Honour Judge William Taylor, the Liaison Judge on the Probation Committee, to discuss the funding of the scheme.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Criminal Injuries Compensation Board claims are currently being processed by their Complaints Board; what percentage this constitutes of total claims; and how many complaints relate to claims originating in each year since 1990. [47978]

Mr. Michael: It is assumed that the Question relates to appeals and other hearings cases still to be resolved by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (CICB) under the 1990 scheme, effective for claims received to 31 March 1996.

At 26 June 1998, there were 17,736 such cases, forming 85 per cent. of the residual work outstanding under the 1990 scheme. The distribution according to the year in which the original claim was received is as follows:

| Year of receipt of original claim | Appeals/hearings cases to be resolved |
|---|---|
| Pre-1990 | 352 |
| 1990 | 206 |
| 1991 | 425 |
| 1992 | 630 |
| 1993 | 1,055 |
| 1994 | 3,338 |
| 1995 | 8,063 |
| To 31 March 1996 | 3,667 |
| Total | 17,736 |

The total includes a number of cases resolved in previous years, but re-opened on medical grounds.

For claims received under the 1990 scheme between 1990 and 31 March 1996, the percentage in which an application for, or referral to, an oral hearing was subsequently made averaged 20 per cent. (range 16 to 22 per cent.).

For claims received on or after 1 April 1996 under the tariff-based scheme (in which CICB has no role), for decisions made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority are open to review by the Authority, and reviewed decisions are open to appeal before the Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeals Panel. Present indications are that the percentage of full appeals cases is less than 10 per cent. of total claims received. The new scheme is designed to offer a faster service to victims at all stages.

Edgar Fernandes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will send a British police officer to Turkey to assist in the Edgar Fernandes murder inquiry; [47840]

(2) what steps he has taken since 25 June on the case of Edgar Fernandes; [48244]

(3) what steps are being taken to monitor the Edgar Fernandes murder investigation in Turkey; and if he will make a statement; [47838]

(4) what factors led to the decision to send Scotland Yard officers to (a) Cambodia to investigate the case of Christopher House and (b) to the South China Sea to investigate the case of Sea Captain Sir John Bashforth; [47841]

(5) if he will make a statement on the level of co-operation between British and Turkish police forces in the investigation into the death of Edgar Fernandes; and what pressure is being put on the Turkish police to speed up their investigations into the circumstances of Edgar Fernandes's death. [47839]

Mr. Michael: Although the Home Office and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have closely followed developments in the case of Edgar Fernandes, the murder investigation and any subsequent prosecution are matters for the Turkish authorities. The Turkish authorities have not requested any specific assistance from the United Kingdom in connection with the investigation, although the exchange of relevant information has taken place both through police channels, via Interpol, and via diplomatic channels, through our Consular Division here and Diplomatic Posts overseas.

On 11 May, Interpol London was advised that a person suspected of committing the murder had been arrested in Malta. The Turkish authorities are currently applying for his extradition from Malta to face prosecution in Turkey. The Turkish Ministry of Justice sent the translated extradition request to the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 10 June. There may be a delay in its arrival in Malta because Turkey does not have diplomatic representation in Malta and it is understood that the paperwork will have to be processed via the Turkish Embassy in Rome.

The level of co-operation between the British and Turkish police forces during the investigation, conducted via Interpol channels, has been generally good, although there have been some delays in information being provided to the British police by the Turkish authorities, partly because Turkey has chosen to send some responses via diplomatic channels rather than via Interpol where the British request originated. Both the British police and the Consular Division have been in regular contact with their Turkish counterparts to obtain information concerning developments, and will continue their efforts. It would probably be unhelpful, and possibly counter-productive, to go further than this, as undue pressure is likely to antagonise the Turkish authorities who are pursuing the investigation according to their national procedures. The situation is complicated by the fact that the murder suspect is in a third country and will have to be extradited to face prosecution, building in unavoidable delays.

The Turkish authorities have not requested the presence of a British police officer in Turkey to assist with the investigation. A British police officer would have no jurisdiction to investigate the case in Turkey and his presence there would have to be authorised by the Turkish authorities. The Coroner at St. Pancras has made a request to the Attorney General in Malta to allow a Metropolitan Police officer to interview the detained suspect in Malta to assist the inquest proceedings in Britain. The inquest has been opened and adjourned in Britain and a reply to the request is currently awaited from the Attorney General in Malta.

The cases of Christopher Howes and Captain John Bashforth were both different from the present case. Mr. Howes was kidnapped and British police officers, trained in negotiation skills, went to Cambodia to assist with negotiations and in establishing Mr. Howes' whereabouts. British police made a number of visits to Cambodia and their involvement there concluded once the fates of Mr. Howes and the other hostage were discovered. The murder investigations then became a matter for the Cambodian authorities.

British police officers did not go to Indonesia in 1996 to investigate the murder in 1992 of Captain Bashforth, but rather to review the investigation of the murder by the Indonesian police. The perpetrators of the murder have never been caught.

The police and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will continue to monitor developments in the case of Edgar Fernandes, in consultation with the relevant authorities in Turkey and Malta. In this regard, Interpol London are currently pursuing with their Maltese counterparts the question of the visit by a Metropolitan Police officer to facilitate the inquest being held in Britain.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria on the basis of which asylum seekers detained under the immigration acts are classified as Category C status. [48306]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Detainees held under sole Immigration Act powers are not classified in accordance with Prison Service categorisation. The only exception would be where someone was held for reasons of national security.

Most detainees are held in Immigration Service detention accommodation (which is not categorised according to Prison Service specifications), or the discrete centres at Rochester and Haslar. Those held in other Prison Service establishments are usually accommodated with remand prisoners and are therefore held in local prisons or remand centres which are category B security standard because of the wide range of offenders.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47019]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development assesses all its policies and programmes for their gender impact. This is in line with the way the issue is being addressed through the cross-Departmental mainstreaming initiative.

I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women on 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects undertaken by her Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if she will place the results of the research in the Library. [46675]

Clare Short: The Department regularly consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, discussion groups and any other methods such as the recent White Paper on International Development.

In addition, and in line with practice under the previous administration, and at similar cost, research was also carried out by Opinion Leader Research Ltd. shortly after this government took office to evaluate knowledge and opinions about development assistance. Copies of this research has been placed in the Library of both Houses.

Reproductive and Sexual Health

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make representations to the European Commission to set up a contracted-out expert network of advisers in reproductive and sexual health. [48262]

Clare Short: A network of external advisers in reproductive health, population and HIV/AIDS was created by Directorates General VIII and Ib of the Commission in February 1998, following an open tender competition. Expert advice is being provided by a consortium of four groups: International Health Services (Ghent), Deloitte and Touche and two UK-based groups, Liverpool Associates in Tropical Health and the Futures Group UK.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make representations to the European Commission to spend 300 million ecu on reproductive health issues as committed following the Cairo conference. [48261]

Clare Short: We maintain regular dialogue with the Commission on investments in reproductive health in developing countries. The Commission has exceeded its target of committing 300 million ecu in reproductive health assistance in the five years following the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. We will do all we can to help ensure that this money is spent effectively.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to commission further reviews of the implications for development of proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and if she will make a statement. [48058]

Clare Short: The Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) Negotiating Group has tasked the Secretariat of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) with carrying out further analytical work on the development implications of the MAI. We expect to receive the Secretariat's initial proposals for this research shortly. We welcome the fact that the research is being taken forward by the Secretariat on behalf of the Negotiating Group as a whole. This indicates that there is now a broad interest among MAI negotiators in the development implications of the MAI. My Department will continue to keep in close touch with the Secretariat as their proposals develop and the research moves forward.

HEALTH

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47016]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women on 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58.

Human Embryos

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many human embryos have been used in research projects since March 1991. [47902]

Ms Jowell: This information is not available in the form requested. The latest figures provided by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) show that 36,930 embryos created during the course of in vitro fertilisation treatments were donated to research projects between 1 August 1991 and 31 March 1996.

In addition, a number of embryos are created for diagnostic purposes in treatments involving gamete intra-fallopian transfer—a procedure not governed by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990—which, together with embryos created using supernumerary eggs produced in the course of that procedure, may be donated to research. It may also be possible for research embryos to be created using eggs donated for treatment but which are not, in the event, used for that purpose. The HFEA licenses about 2 or 3 research projects each year which may involve the creation of embryos. This will be only where such use is an essential requirement for the research project, for example in order to examine the viability of eggs which have been frozen, or the use of immature sperm for treatment purposes.

Research on human embryos is subject to very strict controls under the terms of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. Such research may be carried out only if effective consent, as defined in the Act, is given by the egg and sperm providers.

Overseas Adoptions

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children from abroad have been adopted in the UK in each of the last 12 years. [48010]

Mr. Boateng: The Department does not hold information about the number of children adopted from abroad, only about the number of intercountry adoption applications processed since 1992. These will account for the majority of such adoptions since then and are set out in the table:

| Year | Number of intercountry adoption applications processed by the Department of Health |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 48 |
| 1993 | 99 |
| 1994 | 113 |
| 1995 | 150 |
| 1996 | 310 |
| 1997 | 221 |
| January-June 1998 | 125 |
| Total | 1,066 |

Pharmacists

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to enhance the role of pharmacists in the delivery of primary care; [48235]

(2) what plans he has to involve community pharmacists in promoting health advice to men over 40 years of age. [48236]

Mr. Milburn: We propose to publish a policy document in the autumn setting out proposals for the future role of community pharmacists within the National Health Service.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of consultations general practitioners carry out which could be effectively dealt with by (a) a pharmacist and (b) another member of a primary health care team. [48237]

Mr. Milburn: We are aware of a range of research and experience which suggests that some tasks currently undertaken by general practitioners could be carried out appropriately by pharmacists and other health professionals.

WALES

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what meetings he has held over the past 12 months concerning the spending of European funds at Gwent Tertiary College; [48197]

(2) what discussions he has had with personnel of Gwent Tertiary College over the past 12 months relating to the spending of European funds at the college; [48184]

(3) what representations he has received over the past 12 months concerning the spending of European funds at Gwent Tertiary College. [48198]

Mr. Hain: I have had a number of meetings, and discussions. Officials from the Welsh Office and the Department for Education and Employment (DfEE) have been in regular contact with the College concerning European funding. As the hon. Member is no doubt aware, the Fraud Inspection Unit of DfEE and the Gwent Constabulary are currently investigating the receipt and allocation of European Social Funding by the College in 1995 and 1996.

Phase Separations Company

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the closure of the Phase Separations Company on Deeside Industrial Park indicating the number of jobs lost and the areas in which they have been relocated. [47905]

Mr. Hain: The closure of any company with its associated loss of jobs is always regrettable. I understand that 28 jobs will be lost and that the company plans to transfer manufacturing to Ireland, distribution to Holland and administration to Watford. The local TEC is liaising with the Employment Service to see what help can be given to those employees made redundant.

Tree Planting

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that more deciduous trees will be planted; and if he will make a statement. [47914]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We are fully committed to increasing the area of woodland in Wales, including deciduous woodland. Our grant-aid encourages the planting of deciduous trees and over 80 per cent. of the new woodland created in Wales in the past five years is deciduous. Moreover, the UK Forestry Standard, which we launched earlier this year, specifies that any new conifer woodland should include a proportion of deciduous trees. In addition, we have recently announced Challenge Funds for creating woodlands on bracken land and for new native woodlands in National Parks. In both cases, initial responses have been encouraging and much of the woodland planted under these initiatives will be deciduous.

Development Assistance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the impact upon North East Wales of the Objective 1 status granted to Merseyside with regard to (a) the preparation of industrial infrastructure and (b) inward investment; and if he will make a statement. [47910]

Mr. Hain: I have no evidence to suggest that the designation of Merseyside as an Objective 1 area has had a detrimental effect on North East Wales. Indeed, the unemployment rate in Flintshire decreased from 4.5 per cent. in May 1997 to 3.9 per cent. in May 1998. Similarly in Wrexham, where the rate dropped from 4.7 per cent. in 1997 to 4 per cent. in 1998.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the prospects for the restoration of Objective 2 status in North East Wales; and if he will make a statement. [47907]

Mr. Hain: The Commission's draft regulations for the Structural and Cohesion Funds which are part of the Agenda 2000 package were published on the 18 March. The Regulations must now be agreed by all fifteen Member States and approved where appropriate by the European Parliament.

Our overriding concern in the long negotiations ahead is to ensure that these draft Regulations are fair, affordable and durable, particularly to the UK and its regions. We do not expect the Regulations for the Structural and Cohesion Funds to be adopted until early 1999. It would therefore be premature to speculate on which areas might qualify or on the amount of any aid which they might receive once the new Regulations come into effect.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the likely percentage of crops to be grown in Wales in 2008, which will be genetically modified; and if he will make a statement. [47913]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There is no basis for making such an estimate as it is unlikely that commercially grown genetically modified crops will be harvested in the UK before next year. The Government will continue to monitor the situation.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the current rate of sterling on the steel industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [47904]

Mr. Hain: We fully recognise the worries of exporters and manufacturers about the current level of sterling. The Government's aim is a stable and competitive pound of the medium term. The most important thing is to deliver a stable economic environment—with sustained growth, less inflation and sound public finances—whilst at the same time introducing policies to promote enterprise and investment and raise the economy's sustainable rate of growth. The Government are determined to take a long-term view and not be diverted from this cause by short-term pressures.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to improve access to cancer treatment in North Wales; and if he will make a statement. [47911]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Improving cancer services is a priority for the Government and I am pleased to say that I am making available over £20 million to fund the building of a new cancer centre for North Wales based at Ysbyty Glan Clwyd. I laid the foundation stone a few weeks ago and the new centre should open in June 2000. The centre will provide high-quality cancer services to people from North Wales and will save seriously ill patients making long journeys to English centres.

Waiting Times

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in each health authority area were waiting for treatment on the NHS at January for each year since 1992 broken down by medical specialty. [48081]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Due to the volume of data requested, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

National Assembly

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much public money will be used to publicise the Welsh Assembly elections. [48445]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 23 June 1998, Official Report, column 45.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48843]

Mr. Ron Davies: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster presents quarterly reviews to Parliament of progress on tackling all issues relating to the Millennium date change problem across central Government. His last Report was made on 8 June. At the same time, copies of all Departmental plans are placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament and published on the Internet. At this time, I have nothing to add to the Welsh Office's recently published plans.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Chairman of the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation concerning the adjudication by the Parliamentary Commissioner into the Friends of the Earth complaint regarding refusal of information on the Gwent Levels mitigating works and bird reserve; and if he will make a statement. [48624]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if his review of the Cardiff Bay Barrage is based on the principle of retaining the 1994 cap and economising on ancillary projects; [48622]

(2) on what date he commenced his review of the total costs of the Cardiff Bay Barrage; when he expects to complete his review of the barrage cost cap; and if he will place a copy of the completed review in the Library; [48623]

(3) what provision he has made for increasing the grant-in-aid to the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation in association with the completion of his costs cap review; what increased barrage project costs he has already approved; and what increases in costs have been submitted for approval. [48625]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Corporation made available to my Department in February a confidential internal review on the costs of the Barrage project. That review has since been the subject of discussion with the Corporation. On 29 June, I reaffirmed my guidance to the Board that tight control should be exercised over these costs to contain them within the total of £191m announced to Parliament, including provision of £8.8m for the Bird Reserve.

I have asked the Corporation to prepare an update of the review document, excluding commercially confidential material, as soon as possible. I shall arrange for a copy of that document to be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the public registers which her Department has responsibility for. [47347]

Mr. Field [holding answer 29 June 1998]: This Department does not maintain any public registers. However, the Registrar of Occupational and Personal Pensions maintains a register of occupational and personal pensions pursuant to regulation 2 of the Register of Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes Regulations 1997 (S.I. 1997/371). The Registrar is an independent statutory office-holder appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Disabled People

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will make a statement on the training given to officers of her Department in dealing with disabled people; [48000]

(2) what guidance has been issued to offices of her Department on the treatment of disabled people when double checking benefits claims through interviews. [47996]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. David Prior, dated 1 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning the training given to officers in respect of dealing with disabled people and the guidance issued to offices on the treatment of disabled people when double checking benefit claims through interviews. As Mr. Mathison is on annual leave, I am replying.

The Benefits Agency (BA) aims to ensure that all our customers have equal access to the benefits system, and that wherever possible, our services can accommodate their individual needs. BA staff are trained in dealing with people with disabilities. The Agency recognises the need to develop appreciation of all equal opportunity issues, and as such, provides training in serving the needs of the community. It is our policy to work in partnership with organisations from the voluntary sector to identify areas where improvements could be made.

An example of this partnership is the Disability Awareness Training that was undertaken with the Disability Income Group, to enable the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) visiting officers to understand the needs of disabled people. Refresher training for BIP visiting officers began on 18 May 1998 and was completed on 5 June 1998. This training addressed such issues as the improvements to the project, customer relations and again it concluded input from the Disability Income Group.

The BA operates a dedicated telephone helpline to meet the special needs of people with disabilities. Staff on the Benefit Enquiry Line (BEL) provide advice and information about social security benefits and how to claim them. They can also provide help and assistance with the completion of disability claim forms. In addition to the full range of social security benefits, the initial training for the operators includes disability awareness. This is supported by ongoing workshops which concentrate on the individual needs of customers suffering from a wide range of disabilities. Most recently this has included awareness training on the problems encountered by people with Mental Health problems.

All managers are responsible for providing training which will help staff to meet the needs of their customers. We actively encourage them to use the expertise and support available from local public and private sector organisations and the voluntary sector. To assist managers, we have provided them with information on the awareness programmes and services available from a range of organisations.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Widowers

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate her Department has made of the numbers of widowers who would be entitled to a widow's pension if the current scheme for women were to be extended to men; what estimate she has made of the numbers of children of widowers who would benefit from equal treatment being extended to their fathers; and if she will make a statement. [48621]

Mr. Denham: The number of widowers who would be entitled to a Widow's Pension or Widowed Mother's Allowance if the current scheme for women were extended to men is estimated to be up to 100,000.

It is estimated that up to 30,000 children would be covered by the extension of equal treatment to their fathers.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000.

2. Figures should be treated with caution due to weaknesses in the available data.

3. Due to lack of data, the number of children in families where the parent is a widowed father is assumed to be the same as the number of children in families where the parent is a widowed mother.

4. Widow's pension has been interpreted to mean those widowers entitled to either Widow's Pension or Widowed Mother's Allowance.

Motability

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answers of 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 624–25, on Motability, if she will hold meetings with hon. Members who have a constituency interest, and with representatives of the motor manufacturing industry, to discuss the implications of the paper, Motability: MFL's Maintenance and Residual Value Proposals, before these proposals are implemented. [48594]

Mr. Denham: My noble Friend the Baroness Hollis of Heigham will be discussing the implications of the paper Motability: MFL's Maintenance and Residual Value Proposals with representatives of Ford Motor Company Ltd, the Disabled Driver's Association, colleagues from the Department of Trade and Industry and Motability, in the near future. Motability have advised that they would be happy to arrange to discuss this issue in detail with hon. Members who have an interest.

Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many armed forces personnel are currently claiming benefits. [48559]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The only available source of data about the number of armed forces personnel in receipt of Social Security benefits is the Family Resources Survey (FRS). This asks respondents in private households in Great Britain for a job description, and therefore includes only armed forces services personnel living at private addresses in Ministry of Defence (MOD) establishments. The latest year for which FRS information is available is 1996–97. For that year, in around half the cases where the respondent was identified as being in the armed forces, the individual, or their partner (if they had one) was in receipt of at least one Social Security benefit. Almost exclusively, the only benefit in payment was Child Benefit.

On 1 April 1997, there were the full-time equivalent of 212,800 UK armed forces services personnel resident in the United Kingdom. Published MOD statistics do not identify within this number servicemen living at private addresses.

Note:

The answer refers to cases where the benefit unit to which the respondent belongs is in receipt of at least one Social Security benefit. It is based on a sample and is therefore subject to sampling error and variability in non-response.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47357]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The only register that my Department is required to hold and publish by law is a register of all Statutory Instruments which have been made. The Queen's Printer is required under the Statutory Instruments Act to ensure publication of a list of the Statutory Instruments which have been registered, and this is currently undertaken by The Stationery Office Limited.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome (Sponsors)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if each zone in the Millennium Dome has a sponsor; and if he will list each committed sponsor to each zone and the amount of the sponsorship contribution. [45137]

Mr. Mandelson: Five zones have confirmed Founding Partner sponsors:

Work ("Licensed to Skill")—Manpower

Learn ("Learning Curve")—Tesco

Play ("Serious Play")—BSkyB

Talk ("Time to Talk")—BT

National Identity (UK@now)—Marks and Spencer (part sponsor).

The New Millennium Experience Company is in advanced discussions with sponsors of a further five zones. Over £100m of sponsorship support has been identified. Further announcements will be made shortly.

Millennium Dome (Human Figure)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what representations he has received on the sex of the giant human figure in the Millennium Dome. [47280]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 June 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company and I have received a few letters from members of the public about the figure. The Company have tried wherever possible to take into account the views expressed in drawing up the detailed design brief.

Millennium Dome (Air-conditioning)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what representations he has received about the use of HFCs in the proposed air-conditioning for the Millennium Dome. [48073]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 1 July 1998]: I have received representations about the air-conditioning system within the Dome from a number of individuals and organisations, both for and against the system chosen.

DEFENCE

RAF Rudloe Manor

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what functions are carried out at RAF Rudloe Manor; and which organisations are based there. [46840]

Dr. Reid: RAF Rudloe Manor is an administrative establishment providing accommodation and support for a number of defence organisations. The following units are located there:

| Unit | Function |
|---|---|
| RAF Provost and Security Services | Security support, criminal investigations and provost operations assistance to the RAF |
| Provost and Security Services (Western Region) | Specialist police and security support to all RAF establishments within the West Midlands, the West Country and Mid Wales |
| Defence Vetting Agency (RAF) | Security clearances for RAF military and civilian personnel, and defence industry employees. |
| Defence Communication Services Agency | The Services Management Centre of the Agency, including the Primary Network Control Centre of the Defence Fixed Telecommunications Service |
| Detachment of 1001 Signals Unit, RAF | Participation in the operation of the UK military communications satellite system |

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Restricted Enforcement Unit

33. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Attorney-General what contribution his Department makes to the work of the restricted enforcement unit. [47150]

The Attorney-General: None.

International and Organised Crime

34. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Attorney-General how the Crown Prosecution Service is joining with the national crime squad to fight international and organised crime. [47151]

The Attorney-General: The nature of the work of the National Crime Squad means that in many cases there will be an ongoing requirement for specialist legal advice from the earliest stage right through the investigation. The CPS and the National Crime Squad are working together to ensure that need is met.

Barristers' Fees

35. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received about the monitoring and assessment of barristers' fees. [47152]

The Attorney-General: No specific representations have been received about monitoring barristers' fees. Concerns have been expressed by the Bar about the disparity between prosecution and defence fees in the Crown Court.

Crown Prosecution Service

36. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Attorney-General when he last discussed the future of the Crown Prosecution Service with (a) the Home Secretary and (b) a chief officer of police in England and Wales. [47153]

The Attorney-General: I frequently discuss matters of mutual interest with Ministerial colleagues including my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. Officials from the Crown Prosecution Service likewise have frequent discussions with representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers. These discussions promote co-operation and effective joint working between agencies in the criminal justice system and are a key feature of the Government's commitment to improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the Criminal Justice System generally.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on reform of the Crown Prosecution Service. [47155]

The Attorney-General: I published the report of the Review of the Crown Prosecution Service (the Glidewell Review) on 1 June 1998. Its main thrust, which we accept, lies in proposals for reordering CPS priorities to focus more on the core business of prosecuting, greater separation of management from legal work, greater autonomy for the areas and better prospects for staff.

We immediately accepted the recommendation for the appointment of a Chief Executive and work is already underway within the CPS and other Departments to consider the recommendations. I expect to provide the House with a progress report in the Autumn.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Swimming

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the range and quality of swimming instruction in primary schools; and if he will make a statement. [41848]

Ms Estelle Morris: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reports annually to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on the standards and quality of physical education, including swimming, and other subjects taught in schools. For 1996–97 he reported that achievement in swimming was generally good in primary schools.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that swimming and water safety are a statutory requirement of the core curriculum within the National Curriculum at Key Stages 1 and 2. [41449]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment believes it is important that children learn how to swim. This is a safety measure and will remain part of the primary curriculum.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that funding given by his Department for swimming and water safety is used solely for those purposes. [41445]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department allocates no funding specifically for swimming and water safety. Primary schools must ensure that they teach swimming as part of the National Curriculum for physical education.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of primary schools in Coventry provide teaching in swimming and water safety; and what was the level of LEA funding for this purpose in (a) Coventry and (b) the West Midlands in each of the last five years. [40944]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 8 May 1998]: The Department does not collect information centrally on the provision and funding of teaching in swimming and water safety. Funding for swimming tuition, the care and maintenance of swimming pools, and transport and admission to swimming pools is usually included within schools' delegated budgets.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of primary schools in the UK currently provide swimming and water safety skills; and what is the figure for other European Union countries. [40943]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 8 May 1998]: All primary schools in England are required to teach swimming, including the principles and skills of water safety and survival, as part of the National Curriculum for physical education. They will continue to be required to do so.

Questions about teaching in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland, for Scotland and for Wales.

The Department does not collect information about provision for the teaching of swimming or water safety skills in other European Union countries.

GCSE/GNVQ Scores

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the average GCSE/GNVQ point scores in 1997 of each equal twentieth group of (a) male, (b) female and (c) all 15 year old pupils when all such pupils are ranked by their total GCSE/GNVQ points scores, assuming that GNVQ grades are assigned points such that at intermediate level a distinction equals 7.5 points, a merit equals 6 points, and a pass equals 5 points, and at foundation level a distinction equals 4 points, a merit equals 3 points, and a pass equals 1.5 points; if he will list the number of pupils in each group, the average number of GCSEs entered per pupil in each group and the proportions of pupils in each group who took (i) an intermediate GNVQ and (ii) a foundation GNVQ; and if he will indicate the numbers gaining each grade. [44956]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 9 June 1998]: The information requested in respect of average GCSE/GNVQ point scores is shown in the following table. However, information on the proportion of pupils in each group who took GNVQs is not available.

Drama Students

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students in each of the last 10 years for which records are available attended drama schools accredited by the Conference of Drama Schools; how many of those students were in receipt of discretionary grants from local education authorities; what was the average value of those grants; and how many of those students received a student loan. [46510]

Dr. Howells: Of the 19 schools which are members of the Conference of Drama Schools, the Department has data on only those five which are publicly funded, namely, the Central School of Speech and Drama, the Rose Bruford College, Queen Margaret College, the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama and the Welsh College of Music and Drama. Figures for the last 10 years for these five establishments are given in the table.

Non-core Curriculum Subjects

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statutory requirements relating to the six non-core curriculum subjects for 5 to 11 year olds in maintained schools will be lifted in September. [46099]

Ms Estelle Morris: From September 1998 we are relaxing the requirement for schools to follow the full Key Stage 1 and 2 programmes of study in geography, history, music, art, design and technology and physical education. Schools must still provide a balanced and broadly based curriculum and must continue to teach each of these subjects, but they will no longer have to teach the subject's full programme of study. It will be for schools themselves to review their current provision and use the new flexibility to decide what changes, if any, might be appropriate. Swimming must remain part of the PE curriculum in all primary schools. This is a safety measure.

Physical Education

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current statutory curriculum requirement to provide physical education to 5 to 11 year olds in maintained schools; and what it will be from September. [46103]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 18 June 1998]: All schools must teach physical education as part of their broad and balanced curriculum.

For two years from September 1998 primary schools must continue to teach physical education, but will no longer have to teach the full programme of study. Swimming must remain part of all primary schools' physical education curriculum.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools failed to meet the curriculum requirements for physical activity in (a) Coventry, (b) the West Midlands and (c) England for the last three years. [46862]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 24 June 1998]: The evidence from Ofsted inspections of non-compliance of schools with the National Curriculum for physical education is as follows.

| | Number of schools |
|---|---|
| (a) Coventry | |
| Primary schools 1996–97 | 0 |
| Primary schools summer term 1995–96 | 1 |
| Secondary schools 1996–97 | 0 |
| Secondary schools summer term 1995–96 | 0 |
| (b) West Midlands | |
| Primary schools 1996–97 | 9 |
| Primary schools summer term 1995–96 | 6 |
| Secondary schools 1996–97 | 4 |
| Secondary schools summer term 1995–96 | 3 |
| (c) England | |
| Primary schools 1996–97 | 255 |
| Primary schools summer term 1995–96 | 76 |
| Secondary schools 1996–97 | 82 |
| Secondary schools summer term 1995–96 | 28 |

Changes in the Framework for Inspection mean that no information is available prior to the summer term of the 1995–96 school year.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how schools are monitored to ensure that they meet the minimum curriculum requirements for physical activity. [46861]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 24 June 1998]: Physical Education will remain compulsory for all schools.

Ofsted inspections report on individual schools' compliance with the National Curriculum, which includes physical education. At a national level, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reports to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Political Advisers

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many political advisers have been appointed since 1 May 1997; and if he will list the position held in his Department by each. [46718]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 19 June 1998]: There are three full-time equivalent political adviser posts in the Department for Education and Employment. The additional post was agreed by the Prime Minister to provide support to my right hon. Friend in dealing with written material, reflecting the particular circumstances he faces in undertaking his job on equal terms with other ministerial colleagues.

Headship Qualification

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently taking part in the new professional headship qualification; and how many have dropped out of it to date. [46842]

Ms Estelle Morris: Approximately 3,000 teachers were taking part on National Professional Qualifications for Headship courses during 1997–98. An estimate of the number who have left the courses is not yet available.

Training

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department has taken to measure the success of training in terms of its contribution to the securing of permanent employment. [47041]

Dr. Howells: Training is an important part of the Department's plans to help people move from welfare into work. It is used as a means to improve employability so that unemployed people can enter and remain in productive work. All training interventions have monitoring and evaluation strategies. These measure how trainees fare after training, and, where possible, compare the experiences of trainees with people who do not receive training, so that the effect of training can be identified.

Music Teachers

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's policy on the future provision and funding of music teachers in primary schools. [47071]

Mr. Byers: Funding for the teaching of music in the primary school curriculum will continue to be included in schools' budget shares. Initial teacher training courses for music teachers will continue to be funded through the Teacher Training Agency.

Our requirements for initial teacher training, which we announced in June 1997, will allow trainees to specialise across the 7–11 age range. From this September primary teachers will be able to specialise in music as part of their course. The new standards for Qualified Teacher Status, which all trainees will be required to achieve, will ensure that they are equipped with appropriate subject knowledge, understanding and skills.

Instrumental music tuition by external teachers may be purchased by schools, but as announced in the recent consultation paper "Fair Funding: Improving Delegation to Schools", the Government are considering the scope to offer protection for LEA music services through the Standards Fund.

Remploy

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to appoint worker directors to the board of Remploy. [46994]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 22 June 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to appoint worker directors to Remploy's Board.

School Meetings

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the administrative cost to schools to (a) prepare for, (b) publicise and (c) hold annual school meetings in respect of (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools. [47402]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has made no such estimate.

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average percentage attendance by parents at annual school meetings of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the last year for which figures are available. [47403]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is not held centrally.

Access Committee for England

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will (a) place in the Library and (b) issue to the Access Committee for England a copy of the review which was carried out jointly by the Department of Health, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and Department for Education and Employment of ACE's performance. [47738]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 29 June 1998]: I have considered this question in relation to the guidance in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The review of the funding arrangements for the Access Committee for England (ACE) that was completed in March reflects internal discussion and advice—one of the categories of information exempt from the commitments to provide information—and I have concluded that it would not be appropriate to publish the submission that was made to me. I have, however, explained the decision to Mr. Peter Lainson, Chairman of ACE, in writing. I have also agreed to meet him to discuss the decision and his concerns.

There have been two reviews in connection with ACE. A review in 1996 examined their role and functions, taking into account their performance. It established new and different terms of reference for ACE. Mr. Alistair Burt, then a Department of Social Security Minister, also put in place funding arrangements, secure until 31 March 1998, to give ACE time to adapt to its new role.

The review concluded earlier this year looked at the funding arrangements that had been agreed to help ACE in that transitional period. The conclusion was that, in accordance with a general policy of moving away from core funding to funding for specific projects, funding under s64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 for ACE's central administrative costs should cease. ACE are free to bid competitively for specific projects.

Village Schools

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if, under the new policy on village school closures, an amalgamation of village schools is to be treated the same as a closure of a village school; if such amalgamations have to be proposed by the LEA to the Secretary of State for approval; and if he will make a statement. [47997]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The closure of any school requires the publication of statutory proposals, irrespective of whether the school is to be amalgamated with another school. In the case of a rural school, any such proposals will be called in for decision by the Secretary of State. The presumption will be against closure, although all cases will be considered on their merits, taking into account all relevant factors.

Key Stage 2

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons Key Stage 2 assessment reports were not made available for pupils at schools in Dorset during the week commencing 22 June; and if he will make a statement. [48506]

Ms Estelle Morris: I understand from the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) that the contractor employed to process and notify Key Stage 2 and 3 test results to schools this year has experienced technical problems with this work. We regret this delay and will be looking with QCA at how this problem occurred and can be avoided in the future.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects all outstanding Key Stage 2 assessment reports to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [48505]

Ms Estelle Morris: We regret the delay that schools have experienced in receiving their Key Stage 2 test results this year. We have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to do all they can to keep this delay to a minimum. We are taking a close interest in ensuring that schools receive their results at the earliest opportunity.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Council

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the value of exports generated by the British Council. [47984]

Mr. Fatchett: It is difficult to ascribe a value to UK exports resulting from British Council activity. All its activities enhance the image of the UK and much of what it does leads directly to export benefits. The Council works closely with the FCO, DfEE, DCMS and DTI in promoting the use of British goods and services in education and training and the creative industries. Exports in these sectors were recently estimated at £15 billion. The Council's role is particularly important in student recruitment: the number of overseas students in the UK has doubled over the last six years. In 1997–98, 203,000 overseas students enrolled in UK higher education and it is estimated that the value of this to the economy is in excess of £1 billion annually.

In the cultural field the Council mounts over 2,700 events per year overseas presenting the best of British creativity in the performing arts, literature, fashion and design. The showcase of British theatre which it organised at the Edinburgh Festival in 1997, attended by 220 theatre producers from around the world, has already resulted in over 40 weeks of touring bookings. More than £1 million of income was generated by nine Scottish record labels which were part of the British presence at the Cannes Music Industry Fair in January this year.

The Council's role in support of the Government's export promotion policies will continue to grow through new initiatives such as the formation of the Creative Industries Export Promotion Advisory Group, a public/private partnership aimed at co-ordinating activities and developing an export strategy in this sector.

India and Pakistan

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Commonwealth initiatives have been taken to persuade the Indian and Pakistan Governments to discontinue their nuclear weapons programmes. [47879]

Mr. Fatchett: The Commonwealth Secretary-General has written to the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan. At a press conference in Johannesburg on 3 June, he also made clear the Commonwealth Secretariat's readiness to help ease tension between the two countries.

Edgar Fernandes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken since the meeting on 8 May, on the case of Edgar Fernandes. [48246]

Mr. Fatchett: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met representatives of the Fernandes family on 27 May to discuss the police investigation and the way forward. Diplomatic Notes have been sent to the Foreign Ministries in Ankara and Valletta to remind them of our continuing interest in this case. Our missions in Ankara and Valletta continue to monitor the progress on request by the Turkish Ministry of Justice for Mr. Mohamed Abdal Monem Abbas Aly to be extradited from Malta to Turkey to stand trial for the murder of Mr. Fernandes.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love) of 19 June 1998, Official Report, column 327, if he discussed the case of Edgar Fernandes during his visit to Ankara. [47873]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did not discuss the case of Edgar Fernandes during his recent visit to Ankara.

Turkey

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 488, if he will provide a breakdown, by ethnic origin, of the 174 disappearances of British citizens in Turkey. [48245]

Mr. Fatchett: No. We do not keep details of ethnic origin in these cases. All cases are dealt with on their merits regardless of ethnic origin.

FCO Recruitment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what publicity was given to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office recruitment event held on 17 June, aimed at attracting ethnic minority and disabled graduates; what criteria were used for selecting invitees; and which (a) members of the Press and (b) Press organisations, were informed in advance of the event. [47865]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Following consultations between Recruitment Section and Mr. Spencer, our Minority Ethnic Liaison Officer, a strategy was devised to ensure that publicity for the FCO Recruitment Fair was directed at our target audiences—those undergraduates or graduates with disabilities, or who were from minority ethnic groups. At the Afro-Caribbean Finance forum in February, partly financed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, all visitors to the FCO stand were invited to apply for invitations. "Advertorials" in the March editions of Eastern Eye, Asian Times, the Caribbean Times and New Nation advised readers to contact the FCO Recruitment Section for invitations. We approached 3 organisations—Windsor Fellowship, Workable and Project Fullemploy—to advise their members of the fair and to supply Recruitment Section with details of people to whom w could send invitations. In addition the Presidents of Asian and Afro-Caribbean Student Societies at British Universities were sent invitations which also asked them to bring up to 4 of their colleagues with them. The FCO also publicised the Fair at Community Forum events at Enfield, Peterborough, Walsall, Huddersfield, Preston, Durham, Redbridge, Nottingham, Tameside and Rugby.

In addition to the four publications in which we placed "advertorials" in March, the FCO invited to attend the fair all the UK national written and broadcast media and a wide range of media specialising in minority ethnic and disabled issues.

Over 2,000 invitations were issued and over 700 people attended the fair. Feedback on the day was very positive.

BBC World Service

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to (a) maintain and (b) enhance the BBC World Service. [48266]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government are committed to the maintenance of the World Service's reputation for objective news and comment and pre-eminence among international broadcasters. Financial support for the World Service, along with other commitments, is currently being examined as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review.

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to assist the BBC World Service in retaining its Chinese Service. [48265]

Mr. Fatchett: Broadcasting in vernacular languages is an important element in the World Service's ability to reach its target audiences. The Chinese service is one of the World Service's key language services. We support the priority which the World Service gives to the Chinese Service.

Venezuela

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Venezuela regarding the protection of rainforests. [47751]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 30 June 1998]: Our Ambassador in Venezuela raised the protection of Venezuela's rainforest with the Venezuelan Vice-Minister of the Interior in March 1998. They discussed the actions being taken by the Venezuelan Government to tackle the forest fires on the border with Brazil, and the impact of development on the fragile rainforest ecosystem and indigenous cultures.

In January 1998, I wrote to the Venezuelan Ambassador in London to ask what action was being taken by the Venezuelan Government to protect areas of rainforest inhabited by the Yanomami people from illegal miners and loggers. The Venezuelan Secretary of State for the Environment replied in June outlining the national strategies being adopted to address the problem.

Ottawa Convention

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when instructions were given to parliamentary counsel to commence drafting the Bill to enable the Government to ratify the Ottawa Convention. [48281]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Work on the text of the Bill began in February and, after comprehensive consultation with interested Whitehall Departments, instructions were sent to parliamentary counsel on 9 June. Final drafting procedures are now complete and the Bill is due to be published tomorrow.

Saudi Arabia (Prisoners)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Saudi Arabian Government about the arrests of the Filipinos Ariel Ordona, Ruben Aguire, Angelito Sizon and Juanito Manalili; if he will ask where they are being held and what charges are being brought against them; if he will seek assurances about their safety; and if he will make a statement. [48018]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 1 July 1998]: We are in close touch with the Philippines embassy in Riyadh about these arrests, and have also discussed them with the Saudi Arabian government. We believe that Juanito Manalili has been released, but details of the whereabouts of the other detainees and what charges they face remain unclear. The Saudi authorities are aware of our views on the need for greater freedom of worship for non-Muslims in Saudi Arabia.

European Council

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for July; and if he will list the major European Union events for the next six months. [49162]

General Affairs Council

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the General Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 29 June. [49163]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Council approved the A Points in document 9835/98. The Council also noted the European Parliament Resolutions, Decisions and Opinions of its part sessions of 27–28 May, listed in document 8462/98. Copies of both documents will be placed in the Library as soon as they become available.

The Council agreed a EU mandate for the negotiations on a new Lomé Convention due to open in September. It authorised the Commission to carry out the negotiations. All UK national objectives have been met including: making poverty eradication the primary objective; renewing the EU-ACP—African, Caribbean and Pacific Countries—partnership; streamlining development assistance to make it more efficient; and new trade arrangements which will be World Trade Organisation compatible and help ACP countries integrate into the world trading system. The Council agreed that Cuba should be accorded observer status in the negotiation process subject to strict political conditionality.

The Council expressed concern about the tension on the ground in Kosovo. It called for full and immediate implementation of the undertakings given by President Milosevic to President Yeltsin on 16 June. The Council regretted Belgrade's refusal to accept an increase in the size of the European Community Monitoring Mission presence in Kosovo and reaffirmed its determination to provide an increased monitoring presence.

The Council voiced its strong disappointment that the commitments made by President Milosevic in Moscow did not cover all the requirements set out in the Cardiff

Declaration, in particular the withdrawal of security units used for civilian repression; and that the conditions had not been created for rapid progress in the political dialogue with the Kosovar Albanian leadership, with international involvement.

The Council reaffirmed the demand for the withdrawal by Belgrade of the security forces from Kosovo. All those in a leadership role in the Kosovar Albanian community should unite responsibly in making clear their commitment to dialogue and a peaceful resolution of the problems of Kosovo, and their rejection of violence and acts of terrorism. The EU remains firmly opposed to independence: it continues to support a special status, including a large degree of autonomy for Kosovo, within the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Council welcomed the recent adoption by the Croatian parliament of a plan for return of refugees. It re-emphasised the EU's expectation that the Plan would be implemented immediately and in full. The Council confirmed the EU's willingness to participate in conference on reconstruction and development organised by the Croatian Government in the light of such implementation.

The Council welcomed the positive reception in Bosnia and elsewhere for the 8 June Declaration and the launch of the EU/Bosnia Consultative Task Force (CTF). It looked forward to the first Sarajevo meeting of the CTF on 30 June, and to its contributing to the development of modern Bosnia.

Ministers discussed the role of the General Affairs Council in preparing for the informal meeting of Heads of State and Government planned for the autumn. It was agreed that Ministers would discuss this in more detail in September. There was also a wide-ranging discussion of the need to review the working methods of the Council, and the overall coordinating role of the GAC, in particular in the context of Agenda 2000.

The Council discussed the mandate for opening negotiations with Norway and Iceland over their future association with Schengen after the entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty. Good progress was made. Some points still remain to be settled; but agreement was reached on the main principles which should guide the EU in negotiations.

On the bilateral negotiations between the EU and Switzerland, Ministers noted with satisfaction the Commission's assessment that significant progress had been made recently, particularly on the issues of free movement of people and agriculture. However, Ministers also noted that further work was needed to conclude a balanced overall agreement covering all the sectors under negotiation.

Ministers discussed the situation in Belarus. They expressed strong disapproval of Belarusian action in removing Ambassadors from their residences at Drozdy. The EU stands ready to resume a dialogue with the Belarusian Government when the latter is ready to respect its international obligations. Further possible measures will be considered in response to the position taken by the Belarusian Government.

The Council reiterated its full support for the current US efforts in the Middle East Peace Process, while underlining the need for early action to bring them to fruition. It welcomed Palestinian acceptance of US ideas for relaunching negotiations on the Palestinian track, and called on Israel to give a clear and positive response to these ideas.

The Council reiterated its deep concern at the Israeli Government's endorsement of plans which would extend the administrative boundaries and alter the demographic balance in the Jerusalem area. Unilateral acts only complicate the peace process at a very sensitive time. The EU's position is that the final status of Jerusalem should be determined in final status talks and that neither side should pre-empt this.

The Council also adopted Conclusions on the recent Commission Communications on EC/Israel trade and regional cumulation of origin. The Council encouraged the Commission to pursue its technical talks with Israel on the problems identified in the first of these Communications, stressing that these should lead to concrete results. The Council recognised the contribution which the establishment of cumulation could play in promoting regional economic development and regional integration.

The Council discussed the provision of extra project aid to Azerbaijan. Ministers agreed that increased aid should be provided using existing instruments.

The Council welcomed progress at the first session of Burundi peace talks in Arusha. It urged all parties to return to the negotiations in July and hoped there would be sufficient progress in the negotiations for regional leaders to re-examine the sanctions they imposed in 1996.

The Council reiterated its concern at the humanitarian situation in Sudan. It noted the substantial assistance provided by the EU over recent years, but noted also the urgent need for humanitarian assistance.

The Council reaffirmed its support for efforts by the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) to promote long term peace through a negotiated settlement. The council welcomed the proposal that the IGAD Partnership Forum (IPF) send a mission at Ministerial level to Khartoum and Nairobi to explore the possibility of securing a break in the fighting in the areas most affected by hunger to allow for the provision of humanitarian aid.

The Council expressed concern about the situation in Guinea Bissau. It called on both sides to reach a peaceful solution. It expressed support for mediation efforts undertaken by the Foreign Ministers of Portugal and Angola. It welcomed the efforts of ECHO and International organisations to provide humanitarian assistance and urged all concerned to allow humanitarian assistance to reach those who need it.

Over dinner, the Troika and Commission debriefed Ministers from the Central European applicant countries and Cyprus on the discussions at the Cardiff European Council.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Organisms

12. Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the percentage of crops grown in England in 2008 which will be genetically manipulated. [47168]

Dr. John Cunningham: It is too early to predict the extent to which such crops will be grown in England by the year 2008.

28. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to undertake a consultation exercise on the introduction of genetically modified organisms. [47184]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are planning a public consultation over the next few months to explore the views of the public about genetic modification in more detail. The results from this will be carefully analysed and used to inform future policy in this area.

Common Agricultural Policy

13. Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has recently had concerning proposals for CAP reform. [47169]

Dr. John Cunningham: As President of the EU Agriculture Council, I chaired on 2 June a seminar on environmental and consumer aspects of the CAP. On 22–25 June, I chaired the Agriculture Council which reached decisions on reforms to the olive oil, tobacco and the banana regimes. More generally, we have succeeded in successive Councils under the UK Presidency in mapping out a clear way forward on the Commission's wider Agenda 2000 proposals on CAP reform. Unanimous conclusions to this effect were agreed in May and endorsed by the Cardiff European Council.

14. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the role of set aside in a reformed CAP. [47170]

Mr. Morley: The Government wish to see compulsory set-aside abolished as a means of controlling cereals production. However, we can support the continuation of voluntary set-aside, which can have environmental advantages.

17. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet farmers in north-west Leicestershire to discuss the progress achieved in CAP reform. [47174]

Mr. Morley: I have no plans at present to visit north-west Leicestershire.

I regularly meet farmers' representatives from the regions to discuss all aspects of agricultural policy.

23. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress made at the Agriculture Council on 25 and 26 May with regard to the reform of the common agricultural policy. [47180]

Mr. Rooker: The May Council agreed interim conclusions on the Commission's Agenda 2000 reform proposals which recognised the need for reform and set out the framework for the continuing negotiations.

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the outcome of the 26 May Council in respect of CAP reform and Agenda 2000. [47166]

Dr. John Cunningham: The May Council adopted interim conclusions on the Agenda 2000 proposals which accepted the need for CAP reform and set out the framework for the continuing negotiations on the Commission's proposals.

Beef Ban

15. Mr. Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the date-based scheme associated with the lifting of the beef ban. [47172]

Dr. John Cunningham: The European Commission issued its proposal for a Date-based Export Scheme on 10 June. This proposal was discussed by the Standing Veterinary Committee on 12 and 18 June. I expect the Standing Veterinary Committee to discuss the proposal again on 7 July.

16. Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to assist the UK beef industry to regain former export markets once the ban has been lifted. [47173]

Mr. Rooker: Once the ban is lifted, I and colleagues in MAFF and other Government Departments will take all possible steps to encourage the rebuilding of our beef export industry. It will be for the industry to spearhead the drive, but it will do so with full Ministerial participation.

19. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects it to be possible to resume exports of beef. [47176]

26. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made on the lifting of the EU ban on the export of British beef. [47182]

Mr. Rooker: Exports of Northern Ireland Export Certified Herds Scheme beef have been permitted since 1 June. The Northern Ireland industry, in conjunction with the Government, have been working hard to regain former customers, as well as attracting new ones. The European Commission proposal for a Date-based Export Scheme, for the whole of the UK, is currently being considered by the Standing Veterinary Committee.

Gangmasters

18. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on gangmasters. [47175]

Mr. Rooker: Further to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mrs. Jones) on 9 June 1998, Official Report, columns 527–29, the drive to combat exploitative gangmasters continues. Joint enforcement operations are taking place and infringements found in operational visits are being investigated. The comprehensive leaflets on employment rights and obligations have been well received.

Prices

20. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on prices for agricultural products for 1998–99. [47177]

Mr. Morley: Monthly Agricultural Price Indices and an Agricultural Market Report containing weekly prices are available in the Library of the House. On average, agricultural prices for the first four months of 1998 are 12 per cent. lower than a year earlier. This is due primarily to changing exchange rates and developments in the commodity markets.

Animal Welfare

21. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to improve standards of animal welfare. [47178]

Mr. Morley: We continue to work to improve standards at EU and national level. In Europe, we gave priority under our Presidency to advancing negotiations on welfare standards for livestock on farms, and achieved agreement on an important new Directive at the June Agriculture Council: we also prevailed on the Commission to bring forward its overdue proposal on the welfare of laying hens, and wasted no time in opening negotiations on it. At home, we have various initiatives in hand and planned, including a forthcoming review of our rules on the welfare of livestock in transit and at market, now that our new transit rules have been in operation for a year.

French Beef

22. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the French Minister for Agriculture about the quality and safety of French beef. [47179]

Dr. John Cunningham: I chaired the Agriculture Council on 31 March when proposals for Community-wide controls on Specified Risk Materials were discussed and it was agreed to defer the introduction of the provisions of Decision 97/534 until 1 January 1999 and to invite the Commission to table a proposal after the OIE meeting which took place in May. The UK and France supported the introduction of controls on bovine offals and have, in the absence of agreed Community rules, both introduced national controls on this material in order to protect public and animal health.

Quarantine

24. Ms Stuart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress on examining alternatives to the quarantine laws. [47185]

Gillian Merron: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in seeking alternatives to quarantine. [47171]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Group on Quarantine (AGQ) is assessing the risk of the introduction of rabies into the UK under the current policy of quarantine for pet animals and under alternative policies. The Group is expected to report this summer or early autumn. A full public consultation on the options available will then be held.

Farm Incomes

25. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average income of British farmers in the last financial year; and what average percentage of it was received in subsidies. [47181]

Mr. Morley: The latest year for which firm figures are available is 1996–97. The average net farm income for all types of full-time farms (excluding horticulture) is £24,600. Of this, an average of 95 per cent. came from direct subsidies.

Flood Defence (Northampton)

27. Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve the flood defence and warning system for Northampton. [47183]

Mr. Morley: I recognise the severe and continuing effects of the Easter floods on the residents of Northampton, and elsewhere, which I have seen at first hand. On behalf of the Government, I extend my sympathy to all concerned.

The Environment Agency is responsible for flood defence and warning systems. It has commissioned an Independent Review into the Easter floods. The final report of the Review Team is due by the end of September 1998. In the meantime, the Agency is taking a number of initiatives in Northampton. These measures include:

- preliminary works to raise existing defences;
- a detailed review of flood defence standards and identification of options for improvement;
- works to improve river flow and river level monitoring;
- temporary lowering of trigger levels for flood warnings with improved warning and dissemination arrangements, and
- revision of the Northamptonshire Flood Warning Plan.

These initiatives are largely aimed at achieving improvements in advance of the coming winter and are being taken forward in consultation with the police, Borough and County Council and the Residents Associations as appropriate. Further actions may be required as a result of the recommendations in the Independent Review.

Fish Prices

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will investigate the recent increase in the price of fish. [47857]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 1 July 1998]: On the basis of data collected by the Office for National Statistics, there is no evidence of recent significant rises in retail prices for fresh fish. But with UK processors relying heavily on imported supplies, prices for fish products are susceptible to changes in the supply situation on the world market. One of the key supply areas for cod and haddock for the UK is the Barents Sea, but supplies from this fishery have decreased significantly in 1998. This, together with a temporary reduction in world supplies of other whitefish, appears to be responsible for some increase in price for processed fish. I do not, however, consider that further investigation is necessary at the moment.

Fishermen (Landing Declarations)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what factors underlie the requirement that fishermen (a) complete a landing declaration and (b) produce a stamped sales note when landing fish; [48282]

(2) for what reasons he withdrew the concession of submitting stamped sales notes for fishermen in Brixham; [48283]

(3) what assessment he has made of the additional costs arising from the requirement placed on Brixham fishermen regarding landing declarations when landing fish in Brixham as against landing fish in other ports; [48284]

(4) what reasons underlie the requirement that fishermen in Brixham complete a landing declaration. [48285]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2847/93, as amended, requires the master of a Community fishing vessel of 10 metres or more in overall length, or his representative, to submit to the competent authorities within 48 hours of landing a declaration giving, as a minimum, the quantities of each Total Allowable Catch (TAC) or quota species landed and the area where the fish were caught.

Detailed rules for the completion of landing declarations are set out in Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 2807/83, as amended. Article 2 of that Regulation provides that, if a landing takes place in a port of the Member State whose flag the vessel is flying or in which it is registered, another form specified by that Member State may be used provided it contains at least the information set out in Annex III (the landing declaration form). For this purpose, the Department has accepted stamped sales notes submitted on behalf of the master as an alternative to landing declarations.

Recently, an agency responsible for submitting stamped sales notes in respect of landings made into Brixham has advised the Department that it is no longer able to certify that such sales notes represent the full amount of fish landed from any voyage. In view of this, the Department has advised the masters of vessels landing into Brixham that they must complete a landing declaration in the form set out in Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 2807/83.

A Compliance Cost Assessment completed in 1994 on the implementation of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2847/93 identified the cost of completing and submitting a landing declaration as £3.75.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mater Infirmorum Hospital, Belfast

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which hospital services the Government are obliged to maintain at the Mater Infirmorum Hospital, Belfast under the terms of the 1971 Deed of Arrangement. [47868]

Mr. Worthington: The Mater Infirmorum Hospital entered the health service under the 1971 Deed of Arrangement, which secured the preservation of the Roman Catholic character and association of the hospital. The Deed set out specific requirements for the general administration of the hospital and provided for a review of the internal allocation of beds and facilities and for the preparation of a scheme for the initial reconstruction and modernisation of the hospital's buildings and facilities. The Deed of Arrangement does not require the maintenance of specific services at the hospital.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements the Government have to ensure the safe movement of air traffic during the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [48144]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have played a full part in ensuring that an appropriate framework of aviation safety regulation is in place both nationally and internationally for the safe operation of air traffic, and will continue to do so. Safety concerns are paramount to both the Government and the Civil Aviation Authority, which is responsible for advising the Secretary of State on all civil aviation matters, including safety.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many overload reports have been filed at London Area Terminal Control Centre in the period 1 January to 30 June. [48696]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answers given on 22 June 1998, Official Report, columns 365–66. Additionally, there was one overload report filed at the London Area and Terminal Control Centre at West Drayton between 18 and 30 June.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many overload reports have been filed in each of the last five years at London Area Terminal Control Centre. [48695]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Ltd., which is responsible for air traffic services at LATCC, has provided the following figures for overload reports filed in each of the last five years at the centre:

| Year | Overload reports filed at LATCC |
|---|---|
| 1993 | 18 |
| 1994 | 21 |
| 1995 | 27 |
| 1996 | 21 |
| 1997 | 14 |

Lead Paint

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent advice has been issued to local authority environmental health officers on the risks of environmental contamination from, and the safe removal of, lead in older painted surfaces. [48038]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 1 July 1998]: We have today published the Department's revised information leaflet on lead in old paint. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Although lead has not been widely used in domestic paint in the UK since the 1960s, some UK homes still contain old lead paint. All members of the public should be aware that this may pose a risk and that appropriate precautions need to be taken when redecorating.

The new leaflet therefore seeks to raise awareness of lead in old paint and provide readily assimilated information to the general public on how to take effective safety measures when redecorating.

The leaflet will be sent to local authority environmental health professionals. In addition, arrangements are being made for it to be displayed in DIY stores and sent to associations representing painting and decorating contractors and, in liaison with the Department of Health, General Practitioners.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what effect his proposals to privatise National Air Traffic Services will have on NATS's work to ensure millennium compliance within the organisation. [48637]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. A copy of NATS' "millennium problem action plan" (26 February 1998) was placed in the Library in March. NATS have not indicated that the action plan will be amended in the light of the Public Private Partnership announcement.

London Underground

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the cost to London Underground of adapting ticket machines to take the new £2 coin. [48698]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The estimated cost is £1 million.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons he has discontinued the annual updates to "This Common Inheritance". [48798]

Angela Eagle: "This Common Inheritance" reported on the UK's Sustainable Strategy of 1994, which we are in the process of reviewing and revising in order to reflect changes that have taken place since 1994 and our distinctive approach to sustainable development. As part of the revised Strategy, we shall be announcing new arrangements for regular reporting.

Traffic Commissioners

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what mechanisms are in place to measure the performance of area traffic commissioners. [48853]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Traffic Commissioners are independent quasi-judicial authorities appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and are classed as tribunals. Traffic Commissioners' main function is to administer the licensing regime for operators of heavy goods vehicles, buses and coaches. The Commissioners' performance in fulfilling these functions is measured and reported against published service standards. Each Commissioner is required to submit an annual report of his licensing activities to the Secretary of State. These reports are published and copies are available in the Library of the House.

In their capacity as tribunals, Traffic Commissioners are supervised by the independent Council of Tribunals which regularly sits in on Public Inquiries to observe proceedings. Operator licence holders can appeal to the Transport Tribunal against decisions of Traffic Commissioners. Traffic Commissioners and their Deputies held 1,700 Public Inquiries in the year ended 31 March 1998. In the same period, the Transport Tribunal heard 30 appeals, of which 19 were disallowed.

Rural Sparsity Factors

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason different criteria are used to determine rural sparsity factors for standard spending assessments and the support for rural public transport. [48861]

Ms Glenda Jackson: To reflect the different purposes of the two schemes. The sparsity factor used for standard spending assessments was one of the options considered for the distribution of rural bus subsidy grant but was rejected for this purpose in favour of a method which reflected more directly the total population in each local authority living in a rural area.

Rural Bus Challenge

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will bring forward proposals for the rural bus challenge competition. [49241]

Dr. Strang: I have announced consultation with the Local Government Association, the Confederation of Passenger Transport and the Rural Development Commission on my proposals for the criteria and arrangements for this new competition. A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

Water Regulations

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress being made towards introducing the new water regulations; and when he intends to begin the final round of consultation. [49411]

Mr. Meacher: I will be launching the consultation exercise on the draft Water Regulations on Monday 6 July. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Rural White Papers

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) for what reasons he has discontinued the annual updates to "Rural England"; [48797]

(2) when he will publish the Rural White Paper. [48799]

Angela Eagle: We did not wish to continue to report progress against commitments made by the previous Administration in their White Paper of 1995. We are considering the best way of taking forward and presenting our rural policy.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lottery Funding (Renfrewshire)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much National Lottery funding has been distributed by (a) the National Lottery Charities Board (Scotland), (b) the Millennium Commission and (c) the Heritage Lottery fund for projects in (i) Paisley, South constituency and (ii) Renfrewshire. [48486]

Mr. Banks: A breakdown of awards made by the National Lottery Charities Board, the Millennium Commission and the Heritage Lottery Fund in Paisley, South and in Renfrewshire is set out in the table. Information on the National Lottery awards is now available on the Department's website—www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

| Distributor | Total amount (£) | Number of awards |
|---|---|---|
| Paisley South | | |
| NLCB | 817,308 | 27 |
| HLF | 1,000,000 | 1 |
| MC | 0 | 0 |
| Renfrewshire | | |
| NLCB | 2,184,170 | 76 |
| HLF | 1,035,200 | 2 |
| MC | 64,714 | 1 |

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the deadline for the home country sports councils to identify prospective regional centres for the UK Sports Institute; and if he will make a statement. [47797]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 June 1998]: We want to progress as quickly as possible, but it is important that detailed work is done so that the regional centres are selected as providing a good regional spread, meeting the needs of the local elite population and harnessing existing facilities and support services. I have received recommendations from the English Sports Council, but they will need careful consideration and discussion before any decision and announcement is made.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Population

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 519, what estimate he has made of the cost of the increase in prison population for each of the next 10 years. [48264]

Ms Quin: The Government are reviewing Prison Service spending after 1998–99, including the long-term need for additional accommodation to meet the projected rise in the prison population, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46684]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 30 June 1998]: In line with the practice of successive administrations, the Department routinely consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers and research projects on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. It is our normal practice to make the results of such research available to the public, including placing copies in the Library.

I would refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 307. There is one additional item to add to this list: a study of voter opinion on the possibility of introducing a Belgian style electoral system for elections to the European Parliament. The results from this research were placed in the Library on 2 March.

Murders (Mentally Ill People)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to collect statistics on the number of murders committed by people treated under the care in the community policy; and if he will make a statement. [47436]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 30 June 1998]: There are no immediate plans for the Home Office to collect this information, but we shall keep the situation under review.

The National Confidential Inquiry into Suicide and Homicide by People with Mental Illness, funded by the Department of Health, is conducting research in this area and published a progress report last December. This showed that 12 per cent. of homicides so far examined by them involved a person who had been in contact with specialist mental health services in the year before the homicide.

Their next report is due for publication in 1999 and will contain additional information in respect of such homicides.

Prisoners (Incentives and Earned Privileges)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newark (Mrs. Jones) of 1 June 1998, Official Report, columns 50–51, what in-cell television services are currently available for prisoners segregated under rule 43; and what special provision is to be made in respect of such prisoners as a result of the extension of in-cell television. [44607]

Ms Quin: Comprehensive information on in-cell television provision to those segregated under Rule 43 is not held centrally. Prisoners are segregated under this Rule for a variety of reasons, including for their own protection. Future, detailed policy is under consideration but, broadly, those segregated for their own protection will normally keep their sets if practicable and those segregated for reasons of good order and discipline will normally lose them.

Highways Act 1980

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been in each of the past five years in England and Wales for alleged breaches of section 161 of the Highways Act 1980. [48674]

Mr. Michael: Information collected centrally on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database cannot separately identify prosecutions for offences under section 161 of the Highways Act 1980 from other sections of the Act. Available information, including cautions, is given in the table.

Number of persons cautioned and defendants prosecuted at magistrates' courts and convicted at all courts for offences under sections 161, 162 or 163 of the Highways Act 1980[1], England and Wales, 1992–96

| Year | Cautions | Prosecutions | Convictions |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1992 | 150 | 126 | 82 |
| 1993 | 100 | 62 | 40 |
| 1994 | 124 | 133 | 87 |
| 1995 | 92 | 122 | 73 |
| 1996 | 81 | 92 | 59 |

[1] Sections 161, 162 and 163 of the Highways Act 1980 cover offences of: causing certain kinds of danger or annoyance to users of highways and streets (section 161); placing rope etc. across highway (section 162) and failing to prevent water falling or flowing on to highway (section 163)

Ministerial Group on the Family

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what work has been carried out by the Ministerial Group on the Family on the institution of marriage; and what new measures have been proposed to promote and strengthen marriage. [48543]

Mr. Michael: The Ministerial Group on the Family has identified strengthening marriage as one of the key themes of its work. Proposals are being developed on measures to increase preparedness for marriage and to encourage couples to reflect on the commitment which marriage involves before entering into it.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times the Ministerial Group on the Family has met during 1998; when it plans to meet again; and how many times he chaired it. [48545]

Mr. Michael: The Ministerial Group has met twice since January 1998, chaired on both occasions by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Its next meeting will be on 13 July.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Ministerial Group on the Family has considered changes in the law with respect to pre-nuptial agreements. [48548]

Mr. Michael: The Ministerial Group has considered proposals from the Lord Chancellor's Department on whether there should be a reform of the law on ancillary relief. Such a reform might enable couples to make pre-nuptial agreements dealing with matrimonial property which would be legally binding on the courts and the parties to the agreement. No final decision has been taken on this issue.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what work has been carried out by the Ministerial Group on the Family on improvements to the quality of child care within families; and what research has been commissioned on this subject. [48549]

Mr. Michael: The Ministerial Group has looked in detail at measures to increase the support available to parents and improve parenting skills. The Government recognise that parents will always have the primary responsibility for the care and well-being of their children. The National Childcare Strategy will ensure that parents have access to services to enable them to make genuine choices about the sort of child care they want for their children, and to develop their own parenting skills.

The Ministerial Group has commissioned no research on the subject, but has made use of existing research.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reports have been (a) produced and (b) published by the Ministerial Group on the Family in 1998. [48544]

Mr. Michael: None. The Group's work is still in progress.

Charities (Elderly People)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total sum of public money provided to (i) Help the Aged and (ii) Age Concern over the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available. [48697]

Mr. Michael: The most recent period for which figures held centrally by the Home Office are available is the 12 months to March 1995. In that period, central Government provided funding of £331,906 to Help the Aged and £2,472,980 to Age Concern.

I will write to the hon. Member with more up-to-date figures.

Altcourse Prison

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional support other than from neighbouring prisons has been required at Altcourse Prison, Fazakerley; and at what public expense. [48335]

Ms Quin: No additional support has been provided to Altcourse prison from any public sector prison.

SCOTLAND

Cruise Liners

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines are issued to those local authorities which have responsibilities for maritime matters in relation to the medical and physical wellbeing of passengers on cruise liners; and if he will make a statement; [48560]

(2) what assistance is being given to Inverclyde Council in relation to the inspection and assessment of the water-supply system on board the cruise liner 'Edinburgh Castle'; and if he will make a statement; [48563]

(3) what steps he proposes to take to protect the health of passengers of cruise liners which operate out of, or call at, Scottish ports; and if he will make a statement; [48564]

(4) what plans he has to modify the rules and regulations governing the environmental health role played by local authorities which have responsibilities anent the inspection and quarantining of cruise liners; and if he will make a statement; [48565]

(5) what recent representations he has received anent the outbreak of Legionnaires disease on board cruise liners; and if he will make a statement; [48567]

(6) when his officials were first informed of reports of the existence of Legionnaires disease amongst passengers on board the cruise liner 'Edinburgh Castle'; and if he will make a statement; [48566]

(7) how many outbreaks of Legionnaires disease occurring on board (a) cruise liners and (b) other vessels whilst in (i) Scottish waters, (ii) berthed in Scottish ports and (iii) calling at Scottish ports have been reported to his officials by maritime local authority environmental health departments in the last 15 years; and if he will make a statement; [48561]

(8) what guidelines or instructions are issued to the owners and masters of cruise liners operating out of, or calling at, Scottish ports in relation to (i) the outbreak of

Legionnaires disease and (ii) other health matters affecting both passengers and crews; and if he will make a statement. [48562]

Mr. Galbraith: Information about the possible presence of legionella bacteria on SS Edinburgh Castle was first received by the Scottish Office Department of Health on 18 June. The ship was at that time at sea and due to arrive in Greenock on 21 June. On its arrival at Greenock, officers from the local port authority inspected the ship and took water samples. The analysis, which became available on 24 June, confirmed the presence of the bacteria in the water supply and remedial measures were set in train on the ship, which was by then again at sea. On return to Greenock on 28 June further action was taken to ensure the safety of the water supply on board. The work has been completed and the ship has now left port.

In carrying out its public health responsibilities, Inverclyde Council has had assistance and advice from, among others, the Scottish Centre for Infection and Environment Health, Argyll and Clyde Health Board, the Scottish Legionella Reference Laboratory, the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre and the Maritime and Coastguard Agency, who inspected the ship in accordance with the Merchant Shipping (Provisions and Water) Regulations 1989.

The importance of maintaining health at sea is taken very seriously and, earlier this year, the Maritime and Coastguard Agency issued a revised Marine Guidance Note to all masters and operators about the risk of contamination of ships' air conditioning systems by legionella bacteria. Advice on other health matters including food hygiene has also been recently updated by the Agency. The Merchant Shipping (Provisions and Water) Regulations 1989 place a responsibility on employers and masters to ensure that ships' provisions and water do not contain anything which is likely to cause sickness or injury to health.

My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations about outbreaks of Legionnaires Disease on cruise liners. Available information indicates that, in addition to the SS Edinburgh Castle, there has been only one previous case, in October 1997, which involved a Spanish trawler.

The Public Health (Ships)(Scotland) Regulations 1971, as amended, which provide for the public health control of ships arriving at or leaving Scottish ports, are being reviewed as part of the general review of public health legislation in Scotland now underway.

WALES

Fishing Employment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs he estimates there are in Wales in the fishing industry. [47912]

Mr. Win Griffiths: At 31 March 1997 there were an estimated 1,700 fishermen in Wales, according to the MAFF "Survey on the Number of Fishermen in England and Wales".

In addition, provisional figures from the 1996 Annual Employment Survey indicate there were an estimated 400 employees in the processing, preserving and retail sales of fish (1992 Standard Industrial Classification, Classes 15.21, 15.29 and 52.23).

Health Service (Waiting Times)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average length of time patients currently remain on hospital waiting lists in each health authority in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [48188]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The most recent information is given in the table for the residents of each health authority.

Average waiting time in days for people admitted from waiting lists in 1997[1]

| Health authority | |
|---|---|
| Bro Taf | 88 |
| Dyfed Powys | 89 |
| Gwent | 101 |
| Morgannwg | 77 |
| North Wales | 88 |

[1] Welsh residents treated in Welsh hospitals as in-patients or day cases—these figures exclude Welsh residents treated in English hospitals

The combination of the additional £25 million given to the NHS in Wales to reduce waiting lists, and the recently formed Strategy Group which is looking at ways of prioritising those on waiting lists, together with the hard work being undertaken by health authorities and trusts convince me that both the numbers waiting and the time they spend waiting will both reduce in the near future.

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what were the qualifications, experience and expertise of the persons from Gwent Tertiary College who undertook the internal investigation of European funding; [48553]

(2) pursuant to the oral answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 1033 relating to Gwent Tertiary College, if the investigation referred to will include how budgets were managed and how money was spent after it was received; [48584]

(3) if each of the applications and claims for European funding from Gwent Tertiary College was signed by a senior member of the management team; [48552]

(4) pursuant to the oral answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 1033, concerning Gwent Tertiary College, what examination his Department has made of records kept on electronic media. [48583]

Mr. Hain: As my hon. Friend knows, an investigation by the Department for Education and Employment's Fraud Investigation Unit started on 24 June. The Gwent Constabulary are also investigating the matter. In these circumstances, no further public statements would be appropriate until these investigations are completed and the findings made public.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Control Orders

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many licences have been issued under each sub-heading of category PL 5001 of the 1996 Export Control Order, for which countries; and for what estimated quantity (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) prior to 1 May 1997; [46473]

(2) how many licences, for which countries and in what quantities, were issued under sub-heading C of section ML7 of the 1996 Export Control Order (a) before and (b) since 1 May 1997. [46472]

Mrs. Roche: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if surveillance equipment exports are controlled under the Export of Goods (Control) Orders. [46480]

Mrs. Roche: The export of surveillance systems specially designed for military use and intended for use in fire control and related alerting and warning equipment may be controlled under entry ML5 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order (1994), as amended; that of electronic surveillance equipment specially designed for military use is controlled under entry ML11; and that of specified imaging equipment specially designed for military use under entry ML15. The export of civil imaging equipment may also be controlled under entry 6A002 of Annex I to Council Decision 94/942/CFSP, as amended, that of civil imaging cameras under entry 6A003, that of civil radar equipment under entry 6A008 and that of civil radio surveillance equipment under 5A001.

Other entries in the legislation may also be relevant to other types of surveillance equipment or to surveillance equipment for use in particular circumstances.

Copies of the relevant legislation are available in the Library of the House.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the total costs of implementing the minimum wage in the public sector, assuming (a) half restoration of differentials, (b) three-quarters restoration of differentials and (c) full restoration of differentials. [47543]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The national minimum wage is likely to have only a small effect on public sector pay. Therefore, it is unrealistic to assume that there would be any significant demand to restore pay differentials. As the Low Pay Commission made clear,

"at the rate we recommend, restoration of differentials should be limited".

We also agree with the Commission's statement that "the overall effect on public finances is likely to be broadly neutral".

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what forecasts of potential job losses were available to her when deciding on a £3 an hour minimum wage for young persons. [47527]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The Government believe that their proposals for a sensibly set national minimum wage will not have an adverse effect on jobs. The Government, in their evidence to the Low Pay Commission, carefully considered the available evidence and noted that, where international studies have found adverse effects on employment, it has tended to be for younger workers. Hence, the Government propose that a lower rate should be set for young people. This proposal is consistent with our objective to give young people the skills and opportunities they need to progress.

Export Promotion (Latin America)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for which Latin American countries her Department has export promoters. [47982]

Mrs. Roche: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Paraguay, and Uruguay.

European Single Currency

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of small firms have made efforts to prepare for the introduction of the European Single Currency; what recent assessment she had made of the adequacy of training within small firms. [48055]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 1 July 1998]: A recent survey of small and medium sized enterprises, commissioned by the Treasury's Euro Preparations Unit, found that only 5 per cent. of such companies had made any preparations for the euro. I do not have any specific data on the level of training on the euro within small firms. However, of the preparations that had been made, most were technical (changes to IT systems or opening euro accounts).

The Government are committed to offer information to firms to increase their awareness of the implications of the single currency and to help firms to prepare. The Euro Preparations Unit in the Treasury has recently published the first ten in a series of fact sheets on the euro. Copies can be obtained from the dedicated euro telephone literature line 08456 01 01 99, or from the website http://www.euro.gov.uk.

Turkey

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 488, how many of the 174 disappearances of British citizens in Turkey have been actively investigated; how many individuals have been found; how many are still missing; and what procedures and support systems exist for their families. [47864]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 488. The prime responsibility for tracing missing persons rests with the UK police. When families report relatives missing they are advised to file a missing persons report with their local police station in the UK. The police then notify the UK National Central Bureau of Interpol who notify the police in the country where the person has been reported as missing, who institute inquiries. We also pass the families contact details of NGOs who can sometimes help in tracing missing persons.

Private Military Companies

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the options under consideration for the national domestic regulation of private military companies. [48904]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are examining the possibility of regulating the activities of private military companies. As part of that process, the FCO is looking at the measures adopted by other Governments. Detailed Whitehall-wide consideration will be required before any decisions are taken.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mediation UK

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what level of financial and other support his Department plans to provide to Mediation UK in the current financial year. [44950]

Dr. Howells: Employer/Employee disputes are a matter for the President of the Board of Trade. My right hon. Friend has informed me that her Department does not plan to provide any financial or other support to Mediation UK in the current financial year.

New Deal

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local authorities participating in the New Deal programme for 18 to 24-year-olds. [46556]

Mr. Andrew Smith: All local authorities were invited to participate in the planning stages of New Deal. Subsequently many have become key partners in the local partnerships which have been brought together across the country to ensure that the New Deal fully meets the needs of young people. Many of those who are not key partners are participating through other means, such as providing New Deal vacancies or being represented through one lead local authority.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on the basis of what formal competitive tendering process Capita won the implementing contract for the pilot New Deal scheme in Solihull; what was the role or task description defined for which bidders were to offer their services; and if the bidders included within their tenders a quantified costing for which those services were offered. [46932]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The competition which resulted in a decision to award the contract to the Capita Group Plc to lead and deliver 18–24 New Deal in Solihull was fair and open. It was conducted by Employment Service officials in line with Treasury procurement principles.

In Solihull, as in the other areas where New Deal is to be led by a private sector company, bidders were asked to submit outline proposals for delivery which would be consistent with the requirements contained in the New Deal Design document for 18–24-year-olds. These bids were evaluated against pre-determined criteria covering quality and innovation. The funding arrangements were subsequently discussed with each of the successful bidders within the framework of the unit costs and anticipated client volumes for each delivery unit.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the role or task description for the pilot New Deal scheme in Solihull has been altered or re-defined since Capita won the implementing contract for it. [46933]

Mr. Andrew Smith: No. The New Deal Design document for 18–24-year-olds formed the specification against which all bidders were invited to respond to the competition to identify private sector organisations to lead the 18–24 New Deal. The overall design and specification of New Deal in Solihull has not changed in the period following the decision to award the contract to Capita.

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the (a) number and (b) percentage of New Deal special personal advisers who are from ethnic minorities. [45138]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employment Service (ES) currently has some 2,000 New Deal Advisers.

ES collects data on the ethnic origin of its employees by pay bands (or grades) rather than by specific jobs such as advisers. The available data show that some 6 per cent. of ES staff in the relevant pay bands are from ethnic minorities. The ES therefore estimate that some 120 are likely to be from ethnic minorities. ES is undertaking a special exercise to obtain more precise data and I will ensure that this information is passed to my right hon. Friend once it is available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many personal advisers will be recruited to assist small and medium sized enterprises in recruiting under the New Deal; and how much will be allocated to the Employment Service in order to undertake the training of such advisers. [47757]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The New Deal personal adviser's primary role is to offer guidance and support to their unemployed clients throughout their time on New Deal. They will, however, monitor the progress of clients who are recruited by employers under the New Deal, and in so doing, offer both them and their employer assistance in relation to New Deal. There are as many as 1,500 Personal Advisers; whilst not recruited specifically to assist small and medium sized enterprises in recruiting under New Deal, all of them will be helping young people towards jobs and enhanced employability, including opportunities with small businesses.

In addition to Personal Advisers, the Employment Service vacancy taking teams advise and assist employers who wish to recruit under New Deal. These teams deal directly and regularly with small and medium enterprises advising them about New Deal and help them in signing up for it. The total amount allocated to the Employment Service for training its staff for the New Deal was £9 million. This includes the commitment for all New Deal advisers to work towards S/NVQ Level 3 in advice, guidance and counselling. The allocation was not broken down into specific areas of work.

Teachers (Science and Mathematics)

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of teachers (a) required and (b) available to meet future demand in respect of science and mathematics in 1999 to 2005. [46843]

Ms Estelle Morris: Estimates of the proportion of teachers working in maintained secondary schools who will be qualified in different subjects are produced as part of the Department for Education and Employment's teacher supply and demand modelling process. A summary of the process can be found in "Teacher Supply and Demand Modelling—an explanatory paper" produced in November 1997, copies of which have been placed in the Library; a fuller technical paper explaining the process will be issued by the Department in July.

The assumptions underlying the targets for recruitment to initial teacher training courses that were issued in November 1997 indicate that the numbers of teachers working in maintained secondary schools in England and Wales who would have science and mathematics as the subject of highest qualification would be approximately as set out in the table.

It is our intention to ensure that enough suitably qualified teachers are available to meet the needs of schools, and the recruitment targets issued were calculated on that basis.

Estimated numbers of teachers in the maintained secondary school sector with highest qualification in science and mathematics

| Year | Science | Maths |
|---|---|---|
| 1999 | 35,000 | 21,000 |
| 2000 | 36,000 | 22,000 |
| 2001 | 36,000 | 23,000 |
| 2002 | 37,000 | 23,000 |
| 2003 | 37,000 | 24,000 |
| 2004 | 37,000 | 24,000 |
| 2005 | 37,000 | 24,000 |

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, for each of the last four years, all departmental inquiries and reviews instigated by ministers which have been chaired by individuals outside his Department; and in each case if he will give the date of establishment and the name of the chairman. [46830]

Dr. Howells: In each of the last four years the Department has carried out the following inquiries and reviews:

University Research

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the quinquennial research assessment exercises in supporting research infrastructure in universities. [47047]

Dr. Howells: Recent consultations undertaken by the higher education funding bodies elicited a strong response in favour of the research assessment exercise. The National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education under Lord Dearing, the Select Committee on Science and Technology and a number of other bodies including respondents to consultations have made a number of recommendations aimed at improving the effectiveness of the exercise. The higher education funding bodies, which are responsible for the conduct of the exercise, are considering those recommendations.

Science and Engineering Students

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what financial support his Department has provided, in each of the past five years, to the Engineering Council's WISE programme. [47512]

Dr. Howells: WISE receives core funding from the Engineering Council and sponsorship from employers. This Department has not provided financial support in the last 5 years to the WISE programme. DTI has provided some financial support for WISE through its Development Unit for Women in Science, Engineering and Technology and through the Action for Engineering initiative.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) male and (b) female students applied for courses of higher education in (i) biological sciences, (ii) physical and chemical sciences, (iii) medicine, (iv) engineering and (v) other sciences, in each of the last five years; and what percentage of applicants were (1) male and (2) female in each subject area in each year. [47558]

Dr. Howells: The available information is in the table, covering applications through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) for full time first degree, HND and DipHE courses only. Applicant information for part time and postgraduate courses is not available centrally. Data for 1993 and those compiled by the Universities Central Council on Admissions (UCCA) and the Polytechnics Central Admissions System (PCAS) and are available for applications rather than applicants.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans his Department has to increase the number of women students entering the professions of science, engineering and technology. [47516]

Dr. Howells: Between 1995 and 1996 the number of women studying for science, engineering and technology qualifications at 1st degree, postgraduate level and undergraduate level in the UK rose by 8 per cent. and from 1996 to 1997 by 14 per cent. In 1995–96, 43 per cent. of women graduating with a 1st degree in engineering and technology and 68 per cent. of women with a 1st degree in science went into employment in related occupations. However, women are still significantly under-represented in a number of areas of science, engineering and technology, particularly in engineering.

This Government are committed to encouraging the full participation of women in all areas of life, including non-traditional areas. The Women into Science and Engineering initiative, which began in 1984 with contributory funding from the Manpower Services Commission and continues to be run by the Engineering Council with some contributory funding from Government, encourages young women to consider careers in engineering. We have also been concerned at the under-representation of women in engineering and some technical sectors on Modern Apprenticeships. We have therefore been working closely with the Local Government National Training Organisation to produce a good practice guide to challenge gender stereotyping in Modern Apprenticeships.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the expenditure by local education authorities on pupils and students with statements of special educational needs for the years (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93 and (d) 1993–94. [47456]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on local education authority expenditure on pupils with statements of special educational needs was not collected before 1993–1994. The amount spent by LEAs on pupils with statements of special educational needs for that year was £1.13 billion.

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he intends to publish plans for action to improve mainstream provision for children with special educational needs; [47578]

(2) how he will define his objectives for the improvement during the next four years in the performance of children with special educational needs at mainstream schools, with particular reference to literacy and numeracy targets. [47579]

Ms Estelle Morris: Following consultation on the Green Paper, "Excellence for all Children", we will publish an action programme in the early autumn. This will set out the steps we shall take to improve the provision for children with SEN, in mainstream and special schools, and to raise the standards they achieve. As one early action point from the Green Paper, we have increased support through the Schools Access Initiative for projects to increase disabled access to mainstream schools, from £4m in 1997–1998 to £11m in 1998–99. We have also announced specific measures to promote literacy and numeracy for children with SEN, including pilot summer literacy schools for pupils with low literacy levels and in special schools; and guidance on the application of the literacy hour for children with SEN.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies his Department has evaluated into the placement of children into mainstream or special schools when a care home with education closes. [47887]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has not commissioned work on this subject specifically. However, good practice in re-integrating looked after children in mainstream schooling is an issue we shall expect to address in new guidance in the next two years on educational provision for these children.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. ### Further Education (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of further education staff in Hampshire are employed on temporary contracts. [47589]

Dr. Howells: Complete data are not available from Hampshire. Seventy-five per cent. of colleges then in the Hampshire Local Authority area had provided information for the latest analysis (1995–96) which indicates that 36 per cent. of those colleges' teaching, and teaching support staff, are employed on temporary contracts.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will instigate schemes to recruit, train and employ unemployed people with computing skills to help tackle the Millennium Bug. [47700]

Dr. Howells: We are already providing £26 million this financial year to help small to medium sized organisations to train at least 20,000 people to tackle the Millennium Bug. The training is intended to help small to medium sized employers. We are encouraging them to work together to deal with the bug problem and it is possible that groups of employers or individual firms may look to recruit and train new staff, including those currently unemployed, to take forward this work.

Secondary and Further Education (West Midlands)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of 18 year olds leaving (a) secondary school and (b) further education entered (i) full-time education, (ii) part-time education, (iii) unemployment, (iv) job related training and (v) employment without a training or study element in (1) the West Midlands and (2) Staffordshire in each of the last five years. [46306]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 22 June 1998]: Data on destinations of pupils leaving school are not available and on students leaving further education are incomplete. Information on participation in education, training and employment of the 18 year old population in England is shown in the following table. It is not possible to indicate how many of these had previously been in further education, post 16 schooling or other routes. Participation of the 18 year old population by local areas could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Participation and labour market status of 18 year olds, England, end 1992 to end 1996

Further and Higher Education (Environmental Awareness)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what policies he is pursuing to raise the environmental awareness of further and higher education institutions, with particular regard to sustainable development practices and citizenship initiatives. [48075]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend promotes awareness of environmental issues in the further and higher education sectors through the funding councils and sector representative bodies. The Further Education Funding Council has encouraged further education colleges to adopt sound environmental practices: it asks them in formulating their strategic plans to take account of the recommendations of the Toyne Committee on Environmental Responsibility. The Higher Education Funding Council for England has been carrying out environmental audits, in conjunction with the Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals and the Standing Conference of Principals. In addition, the Sustainable Development Education Panel, an advisory group established by the Government, is considering these issues: we await their recommendations with interest.

University College Stockton

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the funding arrangements for (a) the Chair and Research Centre in Urban Regeneration and Change and (b) the provision of staff and student amenities at University College Stockton. [48269]

Dr. Howells: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions whose approval is required for the grants concerned, which were approved by the Board of the Teesside Corporation in March 1998.

Class Sizes (North Tyneside)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) first and (b) primary schools in North Tyneside which currently have classes of (i) more than and (ii) less than 30 pupils. [48540]

Mr. Byers: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally.

Student Loans

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what expenditure he intends to incur in implementing the new income contingent student loan arrangements prior to approval of the Education (Student Support) Regulations 1998; and what parliamentary approval he has sought for this expenditure. [49410]

Dr. Howells: Parliamentary approval of this new service will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate for the DfEE Programmes and Central services vote (Class IX Vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £335,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Internet (Schools)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects all children in South Gloucestershire schools to have ready access to the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [48777]

Dr. Howells: The Government's consultation paper "Connecting the Learning Society" set out a target date of 2002 for the connection of all schools, colleges, universities and libraries and as many community centres as possible to be connected to the National Grid for Learning via the Internet.

The Department is supporting £533,455 of ICT-related expenditure in South Gloucestershire in 1998–99 through Standards Fund Grant for the National Grid for Learning. The grant is to support networking and infrastructure, and is funded equally by the Department and the relevant local education authority.

Further Education (High Peak)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effects of the merger between High Peak College and the University of Derby on post-16 education in High Peak. [48628]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was satisfied that this is a unique development between a university and a further education college to improve post-16 educational opportunities for the High Peak area.

DEFENCE

Iraq

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his American counterpart concerning the residue of depleted uranium shells in Southern Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [45275]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 73.

The use of DU-based ammunition in the Gulf, including these specific issues, have been discussed between officials in my Department and their opposite numbers in the US Department of Defense; neither my right hon. Friend Secretary of State for Defence, nor any of my other Ministerial colleagues have discussed this issue with his American counterpart.

Personnel and Pay Agency

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the performance of his Department's Personnel and Pay Agency; and how many cases relating to (a) grievance and (b) disciplinary procedure took (i) six months or more and (ii) 12 months or more to reach a conclusion in (1) 1996–97, (2) 1995–96 and (3) 1994–95. [46494]

Mr. Spellar: The Personnel and Pay Agency (PPA) is responsible for providing pay and personnel services for the Ministry of Defence. The Agency is responsible for the operation of grievance and disciplinary procedures covering its own staff, but not those covering the Ministry of Defence as a whole.

The work and objectives of the PPA are set out in a corporate plan each year. This plan includes a number of key targets for the year which are agreed by Ministers.

Performance against the key targets is recorded in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts which is presented in Parliament. The PPA was launched on 1 February 1996 and its Annual Report's and Accounts for 1996–97 showed that it largely achieved its targets for service delivery, efficiency, customer satisfaction, quality and information strategy; but that it missed 2 other targets relating to improving IT systems.

Our records indicate that there were no disciplinary or grievance cases which were not dealt with by the Defence Accounts Agency (DDA) (the PPA's predecessor) within 6 months for the year 1994–95 and 1995–96. For 1996–97 all grievance cases were dealt with by the PPA within 6 months.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for each of the last four years, all departmental inquiries and reviews instigated by ministers which have been chaired by individuals outside his Department; and in each case if he will give the date of establishment and the name of the chairman. [46829]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is as follows:

| Committee | Date established | Chairman |
|---|---|---|
| Independent Review of Armed Forces' Manpower, Career and Remuneration Structures | April 1994 | Sir Michael Bett |
| Review of Representational Entertainment | October 1994 | Sir Peter Cazalet |

Russian Navy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times Russian Navy ships have berthed at United Kingdom ports within the last five years. [47587]

Dr. Reid: Since June 1993 there have been six visits to United Kingdom ports by Russian Navy ships; these were as follows:

| Date | Port | Ship |
|---|---|---|
| 25 May-1 June 1993 | Liverpool | Sovremenny class destroyer |
| 7–10 October 1993 | Dartmouth | Ugra class training ship |
| 20–25 May 1994 | Portsmouth | Kilo class conventional submarine |
| 27 March-1 April 1995 | Portsmouth | A Survey ship |
| 26 April-2 May 1996 | Portsmouth | Udaloy class destroyer |
| 3–4 May 1996 | Plymouth | |
| 22–26 September 1996 | Portsmouth | Sovremenny class destroyer |

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times the Royal Navy has conducted joint exercises with the Russian Navy over the last five years. [48152]

Dr. Reid: The Royal Navy exercise with the Russian Federation Navy under both bilateral arrangements and in multinational exercises. The term exercise can cover a wide range of activities and no single tally exists for all RN activities in which the RFN was involved. However, records show that over the past five years the following Royal Navy ships have participated in the following exercises with the Russian Federation Navy:

| Period of exercise | | |
|---|---|---|
| August 1993 | HMS Brilliant | Off Gibraltar |
| September–October 1994 | HMS NewcastleRFA Olna | Skaggerak and off Norway |
| May 1996 | HMS GloucesterRFA Black Rover | Off Portsmouth |
| June 1997 | HMS Iron Duke | Off Severomorsk |
| May-June 1997 | HMS CromerHMS WalneyRFA Orangeleaf | Skaggerak |
| June 1997 | HMS Iron DukeHMS BridportHMS Cromer | Baltic Sea |
| June 1998 | HMS Somerset | Off Gdansk |

Abandoned Ordance

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what abandoned ordnance was found at Home Farm, West Cottingworth, York, at RAF Escrit, at RAF Clifton, York and at Clifton Moor and Royde Mills, Huddersfield; if the ground has now been cleared; and at what cost. [43927]

Mr. Spellar [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1998, c. 208]: I regret that a typographical error led to the date of the clearance operation, known as Operation CAPSICUM JAR, being shown as 1995. The date of the clearance was in fact 1991.

Trainer Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 265–66, which organisation will own the Grob 115D aireraft fleet at the end of the 10 year contract; and if this is in accordance with conventional procurement practice. [48042]

Dr. Reid: The purpose of the Royal Air Force Light Aircraft Flying Task contract is to procure a service, including flying hours in aircraft provided by the contractor. The proposed contract is a Private Finance Initiative and, as is normal with such contracts, ownership of assets, in this case Grob 115D aircraft, will not rest with my Department. Ownership at the end of the contract period will depend upon the arrangements made by the contractor with his financial backer.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 265–66, what proposals he has to dispose of the Bulldog trainer aircraft; and which department will receive the proceeds. [48041]

Dr. Reid: The RAF's Light Aircraft Flying Task contract will have a planned two year phase-in period during which existing Bulldog aircraft will be replaced by the Grob 115D. Disposal of surplus Bulldog aircraft will be organised by the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Sales Agency with a view to maximising receipts which will accrue to my Department.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 265–66, what incentives will be offered to the successful bidder to replace the RAF's Bulldog trainer aircraft to ensure the RAF receives a high-quality service. [48043]

Dr. Reid: Final negotiations with the preferred bidder are still underway but payments under the resulting contract will be dependent upon delivery of the required level of service.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 265–66, what weighting was given to the impact on UK industry and employment in his decision on the award of the contract to replace the Bulldog trainer aircraft. [48039]

Dr. Reid: The impact of our decision on UK industry and employment was carefully considered and balanced against a number of factors, including cost and suitability of aircraft for our requirement.

Air Transport Procurement

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 June 1998, Official Report, column 459, concerning the lease of C-17s, what responses to the requests for proposals he has received; and what the timescale is for the responses. [48009]

Mr. Spellar: No Request for Proposals for the lease of C-17 or equivalent air transport aircraft has been issued.

Rugby League Teams

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rugby league teams there are in each of the armed forces. [48443]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is as follows:

| Service | Number of rugby league teams |
|---|---|
| Royal Navy/Royal Marines | 12 |
| Army | 41 |
| Royal Air Force | 10 |

Eurofighter

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Eurofighters the Government are committed to purchasing. [48626]

Mr. Spellar: The Government are committed to the purchase of 232 Eurofighters.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints have been received about the treatment of disabled people by officers of her Department in each of the last three years. [47999]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. Departmental Agencies can provide information on the number of complaints received from all customers but do not specifically record whether they are made by disabled customers.

The Benefits Agency (BA) can however provide some complaints information about disabled customers. Since October 1997, the BA has received a total of 36,023 complaints. Of these, a total of 2,615 complaints have been received about the administration of Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance. Additionally, there have been 59 complaints about customer service from people who have identified themselves as disabled.

Child Support Agency

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the Child Support Agency's resources are devoted to collecting maintenance. [48828]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Due to the complexity of the current child support arrangements, approximately 90 per cent. of the Agency's resources are spent on assessing maintenance and keeping cases up to date. This leaves only about 10 per cent. spent on debt management and enforcing child support liability.

Separated Parents

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research she has evaluated on the relative financial positions of separated mothers and fathers. [48829]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Recent research by Dr. Jarvis and Dr. Jenkins of the University of Essex quoted in "Real Choices—A Manifesto for Lone Parents and their Children" indicates that the median net income of mothers dropped on average by 15 per cent. in the year following separation—before allowing for any maintenance payments—while fathers' net income rose by an average of 15 per cent.

Income Support (Wythenshawe and Sale, East)

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many income support claimants there are whose claims are dealt with by the Sale office but who do not live in the Borough of Trafford; [47529]

(2) how many income support claimants there are in the Wythenshawe and Sale, East Constituency; [47530]

(3) how many income support claimants there are whose claims are dealt with by the Wythenshawe office but who do not live in the City of Manchester. [47531]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Goggins, dated 2 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking for information relating to the number of Income Support (IS) claims from your constituents and details of which offices deal with their claims.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates IS statistics by BA District. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries, Local Authority areas or specific geographical areas. However, the BA in conjunction with the Employment Services, is currently exploring the advantages which might result in improved business delivery and customer service if there was greater alignment between BA and LA boundaries.

The number of customers who were in receipt of IS as at 31 May 1998 for the BA's District of Greater Manchester Centre Operations, which includes the offices of Manchester Cheetham, Manchester Chorlton, Manchester Longsight, Manchester Openshaw, Manchester Rusholme and Manchester Wythenshawe, was 56,916, and for Greater Manchester South East Operations District, which includes the offices of Ashton, Buxton, Hyde, Macclesfield, Sale, Stockport and Wilmslow, was 55,715. This is the latest information available, it is provisional and may be subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of women in Wirral, South who will benefit from the minimum wage. [47457]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Ben Chapman, dated July 1998:

I have been asked to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your parliamentary question on the national minimum wage.

The national minimum wage will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for employees aged over 21 and £3.00 for those aged 18 to 21, although there are a number of qualifications to this general observation.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £3.40 and £2.80 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. However, the release of NES data is restricted to figures which are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and which have an acceptable level of accuracy (as defined statistically through the standard error of an individual figure being 5 per cent. or less). Reliable estimates of the number of women in Wirral South who will benefit from the minimum wage cannot be provided, because the associated standard errors are too high. I have therefore provided available data for Merseyside in the attached table. These are for women aged over 21, because estimates for those aged 18–21 years who would earn below the proposed minimum wage cannot be provided. Again, this is because the associated standard errors are too high.

The NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold and in particular those who work part-time.

The extent of this bias may be estimated for Merseyside by using data from the NES augmented by data from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of employees aged over 21 years earning below £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 3 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the region, and so it would be wise to treat this figure as broadly indicative rather than a precise estimate.

Employees whose pay for the survey pay-period was unaffected by absence—New Earnings Survey—April 1997

| Percentage of employees with hourly earnings excluding overtime and shift payments less than: | £3.40 | £3.60 |
|---|---|---|
| Merseyside | | |
| Employees aged over 21 on adult rates of pay | | |
| Full-time females | 3.3 | 5.1 |
| Part-time females | 12.9 | 17.3 |
| All females | 7.3 | 10.1 |

HEALTH

Breast Screening

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data from the Government's review of two-view breast screening have been evaluated in respect of future policy on the introduction of the two-view screening for every screening round. [48320]

Mr. Boateng: In light of recent research evidence, the National Screening Committee have been asked to consider the introduction of two-view mammography for every screening round. In addition to any increase in the detection rate, the Committee will consider financial and workforce implications and the benefits and practicalities of introducing such a change.

Meat Imports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries which have exported beef to the United Kingdom since December 1996 indicating the extent of their compliance with United Kingdom hygiene standards. [48856]

Mr. Rooker: Official Overseas Trade Statistics record that beef carcase meat, bovine offal and beef meat and bovine offal preparations have been imported into the UK from the following countries since December 1996:

EC Countries

Republic of Ireland
The Netherlands
Germany
France
Belgium
Luxembourg
Denmark
Spain
Italy
Austria
Sweden

Greece
Finland
Non-EC
Brazil
Argentina
Uruguay Australia
Zimbabwe
Botswana
Namibia
New Zealand
Mauritius
USA
Swaziland
South Africa
Switzerland
Paraguay
Romania
Uganda
Jamaica
Japan
Singapore
Malaysia
Chile
Canada
Belize
Croatia
Abu Dhabi Ukraine.

All fresh meat, including beef, imported into the UK, whether from other EU Member States or third countries, must have been produced in accordance with harmonised Community rules. These rules require all meat which is intended for sale for human consumption to fulfil the required public health standards. This means that it must be produced in EC approved establishments and, to signify this, must be stamped with a health mark before leaving the plant.

Ensuring that all Member States comply with their Community obligations in properly implementing and applying Community rules is the responsibility of the European Commission, whose Office of Veterinary and Phytosanitary Inspection carries out regular programmes of inspection visits to all Member States. The inspection, approval and monitoring of establishments producing meat in third countries for despatch to the Community is also the responsibility of the European Commission.

In addition, meat imported from third countries must be accompanied by agreed animal and public health certification which is issued at the plant of origin. All imports must take place via approved Border Inspection Posts where they undergo checks to ensure they comply with Community animal and public health legislation.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the means by which Her Majesty's Customs and Excise determine the age of imported carcases. [48890]

Mr. Rooker: No such determination is made since there are no restrictions on imports of carcases based on their age. The Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No.2) Regulations 1996 prohibit the sale for human consumption of all meat derived from bovine animals which at the time of slaughter were more than 30 months old. This measure applies to all bovines slaughtered on or after 29 March 1996, whether in the UK or overseas, other than those born, reared and slaughtered in those third countries specifically excluded by the Regulations and UK animals from the Beef Assurance Scheme. The Regulations do not impose restrictions on the import of meat.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he takes to assess the quality of foreign meat imported to the United Kingdom; [48854]

(2) if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to ensure that imported beef meets United Kingdom beef production regulations. [48855]

Mr. Rooker: All fresh meat, including beef, imported into the UK, whether from other EU Member States or third countries, must have been produced in accordance with harmonised Community rules. These rules require all meat which is intended for sale for human consumption to fulfil the required public health standards. This means that it must be produced in EC approved establishments and, to signify this, must be stamped with a health mark before leaving the plant.

Ensuring that all Member States comply with their Community obligations in properly implementing and applying Community rules is the responsibility of the European Commission, whose Office of Veterinary and Phytosanitary Inspection carries out regular programmes of inspection visits to all Member States. The inspection, approval and monitoring of establishments producing meat in third countries for despatch to the Community is also the responsibility of the European Commission.

In addition, meat imported from third countries must be accompanied by agreed animal and public health certification which is issued at the plant of origin. All imports must take place via approved Border Inspection Posts where they undergo checks to ensure they comply with Community animal and public health legislation.

Agricultural Restructuring

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals for restructuring the United Kingdom farming industry. [48784]

Mr. Rooker: The Government issued a consultation document on restructuring the UK beef sector on 18 March 1998 and are considering the results of that consultation exercise. We currently have no plans to undertake a similar exercise for the rest of the farming industry.

Food Safety

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources his Department has devoted to (a) food safety and (b) food standards work in each of the last three years; and what has been the total number of civil servants employed in these areas. [48905]

Mr. Rooker: Expenditure for the three financial years up to and including 1997–98 on MAFF food safety programmes PP1:01, 1:02, 1:03 and 1:07 (as defined in MAFF/IB 1996, 1997 and 1998 Departmental Reports) was £27.3m, £28.1m and £29.1m, respectively. Equivalent expenditure on food quality and nutrition programme PP1:08 was £12.7m, £11.3m and £10.5m. During the same three year period approximately 300 MAFF staff were engaged directly on food safety and standards work.

The above figures relate to direct costs only and do not take account of the cost of central functions.

A detailed breakdown of expenditure and receipts for all MAFF programmes is shown in the above Reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated level of resources to be transferred by his Department to the proposed Food Standards Agency for (a) staff research and (b) other relevant heads of account. [48852]

Mr. Rooker: All the resources currently devoted to food safety and standards work within the remit of the proposed Food Standards Agency (FSA), associated scientific research budgets, and a share of the relevant central corporate support budgets in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are expected to be transferred to the FSA when it is established. The precise boundaries of the Agency's responsibilities are still being determined in response to the consultation on the White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" and we hope to publish a draft Bill shortly for further consultation. Estimates of the resources to be transferred to the FSA will be made in the light of that consultation, and of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Farmers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the change in the number of farmers in the United Kingdom over the next 10 years. [48785]

Mr. Rooker: An estimate would require making a considerable number of hypothetical assumptions and I have made no such estimate.

Rendering Plants

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he has to reduce the subsidy paid to rendering plants to dispose of offal; [48788]

(2) what proposals he has to compensate farmers affected by the reduction in compensation to rendering plants for the disposal of offal. [48789]

Mr. Rooker: The objective of the rendering industry support was to avert the disorderly collapse of the red meat/animal waste chain in the immediate aftermath of the BSE crisis in March 1996. This objective was achieved.

Some £97 million was made available for the rendering industry in the financial year 1996–97. In return, renderers were required to maintain pre-crisis prices and charges to all their suppliers of animal waste. A further £59 million of aid, also designed to help the entire red meat/animal waste chain, was made available during the financial year 1997–98. The support, which was always intended to be temporary, was phased out gradually during 1997–98 as originally planned to enable the chain to adjust to the changing economics.

The support has served its purpose and there are no plans to reintroduce it. It is for the livestock industry to take responsibility for disposing of its waste in a safe and sustainable manner. The Government are, however, fully aware of the current difficulties faced by farmers in the disposal of fallen stock. Officials are liaising with farming representatives to consider how farmers should in future dispose of fallen stock and to encourage the industry to put suitable arrangements in place.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the implementation of his Department's proposed early retirement scheme for farmers; [48779]

(2) what conditions farmers will have to satisfy to be eligible for his Department's early retirement scheme. [48778]

Mr. Rooker: The Government do not currently operate an early retirement scheme for farmers. We are considering the responses to our recent consultation on 'Agricultural Restructuring', which sought views, among other things, on whether such a scheme, based on EEC Council Regulation 2079/92, should be introduced in the UK. Our conclusions will be announced in due course.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each county the number of herd breakdowns of tuberculosis for (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998 to date. [48587]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 July 1998]: Figures for the numbers of new confirmed herd breakdowns for 1996 were kept only on an Animal Health Divisional Office basis and are not available by county. These are presented, giving an indication of the counties which are covered by each Divisional Office. Figures for 1997 are given by county. Figures for 1998 cannot be provided by county in the time available, but I will write to the hon. Member with the information relating to the first six months of 1998 when I have it.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reduce the interval between tests for TB in cattle. [48585]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 July 1998]: We plan to review our cattle testing arrangements in the light of amendments recently agreed to the EC legislation which sets out the minimum testing requirements, the continued increase in TB incidence, and the work programme in hand to implement the recommendations in the Krebs report.

Rabies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that veterinary surgeons have unrestricted access to the inactivated rabies vaccines already approved by his Department for use on domestic animals under their care; and if he will issue instructions to this effect immediately. [47994]

Mr. Rooker: No. Great Britain is a rabies free island. There is therefore no need for British cats and dogs to be vaccinated, unless they are to be exported.

Bananas

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of EU negotiations on banana imports. [47983]

Mr. Rooker: The European Union Agriculture Council in Luxembourg on 22–26 June agreed changes to the EU bananas regime to bring it into conformity with World Trade Organisation (WTO) rules whilst ensuring continued access to the EU market for African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) bananas. This was one of the UK's Presidency priorities and the deal we secured honours both our commitments under the Lomé Convention and our obligations to the WTO; a declaration agreed by the Council recognises this.

Access for traditional ACP banana producers will be 857,700 tonnes at zero tariff, significantly above the current level of ACP sendings. The ACP countries have separately agreed to work together to ensure that the interests of the more vulnerable suppliers are not put at risk as a result of the loss of individual ACP quotas. Commonwealth Caribbean suppliers should now be able to export to the EU all the marketable bananas they can produce.

The operation of the revised import arrangements will be reviewed in 2004 but no date has been set for their termination. This should help to provide a reasonable period for the ACP suppliers to restructure their industries and improve their competitivity. Discussion on a new aid framework for the traditional suppliers are continuing.

Pensioner Shareholders

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioner shareholders with no tax liability currently recover tax credits directly; and how much these recovered tax credits cost in the last three financial years. [47691]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that some 300,000 shareholders aged 65 or over with no income tax liability received payments of dividend tax credits totalling around £20 million in 1995–96. Similar information is not yet available for 1996–97 or 1997–98.

Smugglers' Vehicles

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, column 274, on vehicles confiscated from smugglers, how many vehicles (a) were restored upon payment of a fee (b) were hire vehicles and (c) were restored to owners smuggling or bootlegging tobacco and alcohol. [48060]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that no central figures are kept.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to reply to the letters dated 13 March, 16 April and 21 May sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. D. Seyarajasinghe of 11 Kent Road West. [48147]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have done so.

MIRAS

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for 1996–97 the amount of MIRAS spent in Scotland and for 1997–98 and 1998–99 the estimated amount to be spent on MIRAS in Scotland. [47975]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost of mortgage interest relief in Scotland is estimated to be £180 million in 1996–97 and £150 million in 1997–98. The amount of relief given through MIRAS—mortgage interest relief at source scheme—is estimated to be £170 million in 1996–97 and £140 million in 1997–98.

These estimates are based on the regional distribution of the cost of mortgage interest relief from analyses of family expenditure surveys up to 1996–97. The estimates for 1997–98 are projections based on applying the same regional distribution as in 1996–97 to the total figure for 1997–98. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates below United Kingdom level for 1998–99.

Aviation Fuel Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of an aviation fuel tax applied (i) solely in the UK and (ii) solely in the EU; and if he will make a statement. [47979]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government support international action through the International Civil Aviation Organisation to remove tax exemption for aviation fuels. The ICAO Assembly is due to receive a report on the effect of environmental levies including aviation fuel tax in September. The Government also supported a mandate to the European Commission to study the environmental and economic impacts on the EU of an aviation fuel tax. This study is due to be completed in August. We will consider how to take forward policy in the light of the results of these studies.

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions the Government have intervened to protect the reasonable expectations of policyholders using their powers under the Insurance Companies Act 1982; and what guidance has been given as to the meaning of the term, "the reasonable expectation of the policy holders". [47597]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 June 1998]: Sections 38 to 45 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 give the Treasury a wide range of powers of intervention, which are regularly used to protect policyholders' interests. With regard to the reasonable expectation of policyholders, the most relevant power is likely to be Section 45 of the Act which gives the Treasury power to intervene in individual companies' affairs to protect policyholders against the risk that the company may be unable to meet its liabilities or—in the case of long term business—fulfil the reasonable expectations of policyholders. This is a reserve power, which may be exercised only where the Treasury consider that the purpose cannot be appropriately achieved by exercise of the other, more specific, powers conferred by sections 38 to 44 of the Act or by the exercise of those powers alone.

I am not aware of any occasion on which formal use has been made of section 45 for the specific purpose of protecting policyholders' reasonable expectations. But the mere existence of the power has to date been sufficient to make such exercise unnecessary. In practice, Chancellors of the Exchequer, as successive regulators, have been able to protect policyholders' interests by influencing companies' behaviour through discussion and agreement.

Guidance on the Government's view of policyholders' reasonable expectations was set out in a statement by the then Under-Secretary for Corporate Affairs on 24 February 1995, Official Report, columns 360–61. This set out a number of factors which the Government considered influenced such expectations, in respect of attribution of surplus between policyholders and shareholders in the long term funds of life insurance companies.

International Debt

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Third World countries which are financially indebted to the United Kingdom, breaking down the figures to show those organisations owed money; and if he will make a statement. [47750]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 June 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) on 23 June 1998, Official Report, columns 453–54.

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which HIPC countries have embarked on the process of debt relief; which will embark on the process (a) before and (b) after 2000 under the Mauritius Mandate; and if he will make a statement. [48437]

Mrs. Liddell: Of the twenty countries currently thought to be eligible for additional debt relief under the HIPC initiative, sixteen have embarked on the process of securing that debt relief. These are: Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Rwanda, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia.

The Mauritius Mandate expressed the hope that all twenty of the countries eligible for additional HIPC relief will have embarked on the process before the year 2000. At the Birmingham Summit in May, the G8 agreed that it would encourage debtor countries to meet this challenge.

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which countries have benefited from debt reductions under the HIPC Initiative; what level of debt relief each has received in (a) nominal and (b) NPV terms; and if he will list the other countries that are expected to benefit from the Initiative. [48439]

Mrs. Liddell: To date six countries have received decisions on the level and timing of their debt relief under the HIPC initiative: Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Guyana, Mozambique and Uganda. Of these six, only Uganda has so far reached its completion point and thus received actual debt relief. In April this year it received $347 million in additional debt relief in NPV terms under the HIPC initiative. This is equivalent to about $650 million in nominal terms.

There is no definitive list of eligible countries, but IMF estimates suggest that Burundi, Democratic Republic of Congo, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Myanmar, Nicaragua, Niger, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Tanzania and Zambia are also likely to be eligible for debt relief under the HIPC initiative.

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional resources are planned to be made available through the Mauritius Mandate in addition to those under the HIPC Initiative for each country affected in (a) nominal and (b) NPV terms; what is the timetable for securing a sustainable exit for each country; and if he will make a statement. [48438]

Mrs. Liddell: The Mauritius Mandate sets targets for the speedy and determined implementation of the HIPC initiative. Debt relief given to poor countries under the HIPC initiative is additional to the debt relief given previously by bilateral creditors. The amount of this additional HIPC debt relief is determined at the decision point. To date $3 billion in NPV terms has been pledged to six countries under the initiative. The table shows the debt relief in NPV and nominal terms, that has so far been pledged to these countries and their likely completion points at which their debt burdens will be reduced to sustainable levels.

| HIPC | Additional HIPC debt relief pledged (NPV terms) in $ million | Additional HIPC debt relief pledged (nominal terms) in $ million | Completion point |
|---|---|---|---|
| Burkina Faso | 115 | 200 | April 2000 |
| Bolivia | 448 | 600 | September 1998 |
| Cote d'Ivoire | 345 | 800 | March 2001 |
| Guyana | 253 | 500 | December 1998 |
| Mozambique | 1,487 | 2,900 | Summer 1999 |
| Uganda | 347 | 650 | 7 April 1998 |

The Mauritius Mandate aims to ensure that three quarters of the countries that are presently thought to require additional debt relief under the HIPC initiative will have had decisions on the level and timing of that relief by the millennium.

Mr. Jim Cunninghan To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total revenue which will be raised for the alleviation of third world debt as a result of tax allowances announced in the Budget. [48085]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The reliefs announced in the Budget are for charitable projects in the world's poorest countries for education and relief of poverty, not directly for repayment of their debt.

Low Pay

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many (a) men and (b) women working (i) part-time and (ii) full-time in Paisley, South earn less than (1) £3 per hour and (2) £3.60 per hour; and in each case if he will give the percentage of the total number employed. [48489]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Douglas Alexander, dated 3 July 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on earnings in Paisley South.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. However, the release of NES data is restricted to figures which are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and which have an acceptable level of accuracy. Estimates of the number of men and women in Paisley South who earn less than the levels quoted cannot be provided, because the small sample size produces unreliable statistics. I have therefore provided data for Renfrewshire in the attached table. These are based on the 1997 NES, the latest for which data are available.

The NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold and in particular those who work part-time.

The extent of this bias may be estimated for Scotland by using data from the NES augmented by data from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of employees aged over 21 years earning below £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 4 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the region, and so it would be wise to treat this figure as broadly indicative rather than a precise estimate.

Abortions

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which health authorities in England and Wales paid for fewer than (a) 50 per cent., (b) 70 per cent. and (c) 90 per cent. of abortions requested by their residents in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997. [48440]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Fiona Mactaggart, dated 3 July 1998:

[1] Provisional figures relating to notifications received by 19 May 1998, in respect of terminations performed during 1997 under the Abortion Act 1967 on women normally resident in England and Wales

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of abortions for residents in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland was funded by the NHS in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997. [48441]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Fiona Mactaggart, dated July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on abortions.

The percentage of abortions for residents in (a) England; (b) Wales and (c) Scotland funded by the NHS in 1996 and 1997 is as follows:

| | Percentage | |
|---|---|---|
| | 1996 | 1997 |
| England | 72 | 72 |
| Wales | 85 | 87 |
| Scotland | 99 | 98 |

Insider Dealing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to transfer responsibility for investigations of alleged insider dealing and decisions on prosecutions to the CPS. [48604]

Mrs. Liddell: The Director of Public Prosecutions, along with the DTI and the SFO, already has powers to take criminal prosecutions of insider dealing.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what deficiencies he has identified in the operation of the law on insider dealing; and what further legislation he plans in this area. [48602]

Mrs. Liddell: Insider dealing legislation is kept under continuous review. As part of our planned reform of the financial regulatory system, we intend to bring forward proposals to give the Financial Services Authority powers to prosecute insider dealing. DTI, SFO and DPP will retain concurrent powers. In addition, as a complement to the criminal law, we intend to introduce a new civil fines regime which will allow the Financial Services Authority to impose fines on any person or firm who engages in market abuse, including misuse of inside information.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the consultation paper on emissions and vehicle excise duty will be published. [48277]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 July 1998]: A consultation document seeking views on the options for reforming vehicle excise duty will be published shortly.

VAT Registration (North-west)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses (i) registered and (ii) deregistered for VAT in (a) Pendle and (b) the North-West in each year since 1990. [48599]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs hold information only concerning the number of businesses registered and deregistered each year by region. The North West Regional VAT Registration Unit in Liverpool covers Merseyside, Lancashire and Greater Manchester. The number of businesses registered and deregistered since 1990 is as follows:

| Year | Registrations | Deregistrations |
|---|---|---|
| 1990 | 20,574 | 16,015 |
| 1991 | 18,644 | 21,484 |
| 1992 | 17,326 | 21,370 |
| 1993 | 16,412 | 20,752 |
| 1994 | 15,174 | 18,600 |
| 1995 | 18,699 | 17,154 |
| 1996 | 18,269 | 14,196 |
| 1997 | 20,455 | 15,308 |
| 1998 (to end May) | 8,491 | 6,034 |

Bereavement Allowance

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy on the question of equalising the treatment of sexes in respect of the bereavement allowance; and if he will make a statement. [48504]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 July 1998]: We are looking carefully at all aspects of the tax system that might be seen as discriminatory. We are considering the wider implications of any changes to the rules for the Widow's Bereavement Allowance, particularly in the Social Security field. No decisions have yet been taken.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent of mis-selling of free-standing additional voluntary contributions; and if he will make a statement. [48776]

Mrs. Liddell: None. That is a matter for the Financial Services Authority.

Merchant Navy

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received concerning the impact on UK shipping of different taxation regimes in EU countries; and if he will make a statement; [48542]

(2) what representations he has received concerning low recruitment of cadets for the Merchant Navy; and if he will make a statement. [48541]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

We have received 54 letters from MPs on behalf of their constituents, and 7 from members of the public about the Chamber of Shipping's leaflet entitled "British Shipping Delivering for Britain" which includes references to the taxation regimes in some EU countries and the level of recruitment of new cadets for the Merchant Navy.

The Government are committed to increasing seafarer training and have introduced a new seafarer training support scheme—SMarT—which consolidates and expands on the previous training support schemes. We have allocated 30 per cent. more to SMarT than the total grant payments under the previous scheme in 1997-98 when 465 cadets were recruited. Under SMarT we have already agreed funding for 643 new cadets this year.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

India and Pakistan

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if it is the Government's policy that the World Bank should be allowed to give support to India and Pakistan following their recent announcement of nuclear testing. [47609]

Clare Short: The G8 Foreign Ministers communiqué of 12 June points out that the recent nuclear tests by both India and Pakistan have endangered the region's security and prospects for economic growth. The Ministers called on both countries to take positive action to defuse tension in the region and encouraged peaceful resolution to the differences between them.

The Ministers also agreed not to oppose loans from the World Bank and other international financial institutions for basic human needs but, in the light of the economic and financial implications of the test for both countries, to work for postponement in consideration of other IFI loans. The British Government are examining case by case those proposals for new loans due to come forward for consideration in the World Bank and other IFIs to examine whether they meet basic human needs and have a positive impact on the poor.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what levels of aid have been given to Sudan in each month between September 1997 and May 1998. [48903]

Clare Short: The table of monthly aid expenditure to Sudan is as follows:

| Month | Expenditure (£) |
|---|---|
| September 1997 | 2,063,508 |
| October 1997 | 164,334 |
| November 1997 | 103,435 |
| December 1997 | 296,091 |
| January 1998 | 136,094 |
| February 1998 | 2,137,807 |
| March 1998 | 1,285,141 |
| Prior year payments | 9,787 |
| April 1998 | 454,926 |
| May 1998 | 233,670 |
| Total September-May | 6,884,793 |
| June 1998 | 3,648,824 |
| Total September-June | 10,533,617 |

Includes £1.9 million allocated from the UK Bilateral General Account held by the World Food Programme to support its food aid operations in Sudan.

Funds are paid to international NGOs and United Nations agencies against clear evidence of need and a detailed budget. Further payments totalling £13 million to the World Food Programme and ICRC will appear in the July figures. We are also considering commitments of up to £5 million to NGOs operating in other vulnerable regions of Sudan.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations her Department received from which NGOs in each month between September 1997 and May 1998 concerning the situation in Southern Sudan. [48902]

Clare Short: Southern Sudan faces chronic problems every year. This year's problems were greatly aggravated by the fact that access to vulnerable populations was not possible in February and March.

The first formal indications of an impending crisis were contained in the FAO Crop Assessment Report dated December 1997 incorporated into the draft 1998 UN Consolidated Appeal for Sudan. We have been in regular contact with NGOs working in Sudan. World Vision (WV), Save the Children Fund (SCF) and Medicins Sans Frontieres (MSF) first expressed their concern about Bahr El Ghazal in February and we provided support for their emergency programmes.

In May we approved funding for further humanitarian activities by SCF, MSF, CARE and the International Committee of the Red Cross. Other proposals were received from Christian Aid/CAFOD, SCF, ACROSS, TearFund, GOAL, WV and Norwegian People's Aid.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Classic Cars and Motor Bikes

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals are planned and what measures have recently been implemented regarding the use of historic and classic cars and motor bikes. [47692]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No measures specifically relating to the use of historic and classic cars and motor cycles are planned or have been recently introduced. However, the recent Budget announced the freezing of the vehicle excise duty (VED) exemption for all vehicles over 25 years old, and the introduction of a fixed date VED exemption for vehicles constructed before 1 January 1973. This measure clearly affects certain classic and historic cars and motor cycles, as will the implementation of the EU proposal to ban leaded petrol. A lead replacement petrol will however be available for use by vehicles which currently use leaded petrol. This has been widely used in EU and other countries where leaded petrol has already been withdrawn.

M25

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what percentage of the additional traffic flow generated by M25 widening in 2005 and 2010 will be accounted for by Heathrow Terminal 5 traffic in the Government's projections; [47884]

(2) what is the current projection of traffic volumes and speeds in the western sector of the M25 in 2005 if, (a) neither Terminal 5 nor the M25 enlargement takes place, (b) Terminal 5 is built and the M25 remains at its present width, (c) Terminal 5 is not built and the M25 in widened and (d) Terminal 5 is built and the M25 is widened. [47883]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David York to Dr. Vincent Cable, dated 6 July 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about traffic flows on the M25. In his absence, I am writing on his behalf.

The information you ask for is not available for the year 2005. However, figures were made available at the T5 inquiry, for the target year 2003 and, with factoring where necessary, lead to the following:

(a) No M25 widening or T5: 8,500 vph and 63 kph.

(b) T5 built, no M25 widening: not assessed.

(c) M25 widened, No T5: 10,100 vph and 77 kph.

(d) M25 widened and T5 constructed: 10,300 vph and 74 kph.

These figures relate to M25 J13–14 northbound in the a.m. peak hour.

In answer to your second question, if T5 is connected to the widened motorway, we estimate that it will increase traffic on M25 J13–14 by 2% in 2003. This is taken into account as appropriate in answer to your first question. No figures exist for 2010, but those for 2016 estimate that by then the volume of traffic on the M25 J13–14 will be the same whether or not T5 is built because of the motorway's capacity.

Air Traffic

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the increase in air traffic flying in and out of London airports annually over the next five years. [48164]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority has provided the following forecast of aircraft movements for the next five years to be handled in the London Terminal Control Area, covering arrivals and departures at all London's airports.

| | Number of aircraft movements (thousand) |
|---|---|
| 1998–99 | 989 |
| 1999–00 | 1,019 |
| 2000–01 | 1,057 |
| 2001–02 | 1,094 |
| 2002–03 | 1,132 |

Seat Belts

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is his Department's current estimate of the percentage of children aged (a) 0 to 4, (b) 5 to 13 and (c) 14 years and over who wear seat belts in (i) the front passenger seat and (ii) the rear seats of cars; and if he will make a statement on trends; [48310]

(2) what is his Department's current estimate of the percentage of (a) drivers, (b) front seat passengers and (c) rear seat passengers who wear seat belts in cars. [48309]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The latest, as yet unpublished, biannual survey, carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory (TRL) on the Department's behalf in April 1998, showed that 91 per cent. of drivers, 92 per cent. of front seat passengers and 67 per cent. of all rear seat passengers in all cars were wearing seat belts.

The wearing rates for the front passenger seat cannot be broken down by the age groups requested. The surveys showed that of those travelling in the front passenger seat, 95 per cent. of 0 to 13 year olds and 88 per cent. of 14 to 29 year olds were wearing seat belts.

The survey also showed that of those travelling in the rear seats of cars, 87 per cent. of 0 to 4 year olds, 73 per cent. of 5 to 13 year olds and 48 per cent of 14 year olds and over were wearing seat belts.

The Government are not satisfied with the numbers of people who do not wear their seat belts. The percentage rates of seat belt wearing have remained fairly constant in recent years—in particular, the rate for adults in the rear seats of cars has remained stubbornly at 50 per cent. or below. That is why a publicity campaign to further promote rear seat belt wearing will be launched on 8 July.

Thameslink 2000

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the timescale for completion of the Thameslink 2000 project. [48909]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The new Thameslink 2000 station is an integral part of the work at St. Pancras which is included in Section II of the CTRL project, due to commence in 2001 for completion in 2007. We are discussing the full implications for Thameslink 2000 with the CTRL promoter LCR and Railtrack.

Employees (Health and Safety)

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions have been brought against employers under the Health and Safety at Work Act etc. 1974 in each of the last 10 years for failing to carry out an assessment of the risk their employees are exposed to whilst using public roads for work-related activities. [48746]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, following his recent announcement regarding the Channel Tunnel Rail Link, the widening of the M2 is to be proceeded with. [48819]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As announced last Summer, the Government will use all reasonable endeavours to see that the M2 widening works are completed within the period of construction of the Rail Link, and that the construction arrangements of the two projects are co-ordinated to minimise disruption to the public.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's role in discussions relating to the European structural funds for the period 2000 to 2006. [48773]

Angela Eagle: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry on 2 July 1998, Official Report, column 240.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Contracting Out

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish new guidance on market testing and contracting out; and if he will make a statement. [49326]

Dr. David Clark: Better Quality Services is published today.

It represents a major step towards fulfilling our promise of better public services for all our citizens, customers and taxpayers alike.

The guidance is in two documents—Better Quality Services: a Handbook on creating public/private partnerships through Market Testing and Contracting Out and Better Quality Services: Guidance for Senior Managers.

This is the guidance for central Government Departments, including their agencies and NDPBs, that I promised when I published the Government's 12 Guiding Principles in Using Market Testing and Contracting Out, 4 November 1997, Official Report, column 94.

Better Quality Services gives guidance on applying the 12 Guiding Principles. We aim to achieve better quality services for the customer at optimal cost to the taxpayer. Our pragmatic approach will apply competition as best suits the circumstances of each case. Departments should review all their services and activities over a five year period. All options should be considered on a case by case basis and Departments should use what works best.

In our consultations we were told that when market testing—an in-house team competing with external bidders—was used it was often used inappropriately, when a straight choice between internal restructuring and contracting out would have been better for customers, better for staff and better for taxpayers. Better Quality Services encourages Departments to make clear-cut decisions that take account of the degree of uncertainty for staff and the effect on morale of each option. In doing so, Departments should consult their staff and their representatives, and other stakeholders.

People are our key asset. When using contracting out, Departments should consider whether to specify that staff are to transfer to any new contractor—for example, to maintain expertise or on other grounds related to the service required. This will invoke the protection of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE). Otherwise, on the basis of legal advice, Departments should say whether, in the circumstances, TUPE is considered likely to apply.

The Government are committed to competition. Better Quality Services covers procurement, contract management, retendering and insourcing, which must always have a very robust justification. The guidance stresses probity, communication and openness. Departments must always be able to justify their decisions.

Partnership is stressed in the guidance: between the public and the private sectors, with staff and their recognised representatives, and between different parts of the public sector.

Producing this guidance has involved all Government Departments, the Council of Civil Service Unions, the Confederation of British Industry, the Business Services Association, those involved in developing Best Value in local government, and those concerned with the NHS. I am very grateful for all their help. This has been an exciting partnership, which will continue so that, together, we can bring about better quality services.

Better Quality Services has been placed in the libraries of the House. Copies have been sent to all who helped in producing the guidance, including the Council of Civil Service Unions, the Confederation of British Industry and the Business Services Association. The guidance will be on sale in bookshops and can be accessed on the Internet under "Key Policy Areas for Cabinet Office (OPS)" on the Cabinet Office web site: http://www.open.gov.uk/co/cohome.htm.

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when Lord Neill took up his duties as Chair of the Committee on Standards in Public Life; what is the rate of his daily remuneration in that capacity; how many full days and part days he has contributed to the work of the Committee; and how much he has earned for doing so. [48047]

Dr. David Clark: Lord Neill of Bladen QC was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Standards in Public Life on 10 November 1997. He is paid a daily rate of £500. Up to the end of April 1998, Lord Neill had spent the equivalent of 44 full days working on Committee business, for which he has paid a total of £22,000.

People's Panel

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for the People's Panel (a) the total value and duration of its contract with MORI, (b) the number of times it is expected to be convened in 1998, (c) the selection criteria and procedures used to pick its members, (d) which Ministers determined the terms of selection, (e) which Ministers will have access to the results of the Panel and (f) if the information made available to Ministers will be (i) placed in the Library and (ii) made publicly available. [48692]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 3 July 1998]: (a) The People's Panel contract with MORI is for three years, subject to a review after one year. As it is a Framework Agreement rather than a standard contract, its value will depend on the amount of research that is commissioned. The actual value of the Framework Agreement is a nominal £5. The cost of setting up the Panel is around £80,000 and first wave research will be about a further £300,000.

(b) The Panel will not be "convened" in that sense. It is not designed to meet as a single group—this would not be cost effective or useful. Groups of Panel members will be brought together for focus groups and other deliberative research, but research will generally be conducted on an individual survey basis.

(c) Potential panel members are selected from a random sample of Postal Addresses from across the UK. Individuals are randomly selected from within each household using a Kish grid. They are recruited by face-to-face interviews in their own homes.

(d) Cabinet Office Ministers decided that Panel members should be randomly selected, in order that the Panel is a representative cross-section of society.

(e) The results will be published and so all Ministers will have access to them.

(f) The results will (i) be placed in the House of Commons library, and (ii) be made publicly available, on the Cabinet Office website.

Service First Programme

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the estimated cost of changing the Citizens Charter programme into the Service First programme, indicating separately the costs of (i) the design of a new logo, (ii) the relabelling of buildings and stationery and (iii) promotion and publicity, and (b) the companies used and at what cost in connection with the project. [48693]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 3 July 1998]: All costs associated with launching the new programme have been met from within existing budgets. The final cost is not yet available, but it is expected to be in the region of £65,000. The new logo was developed by COI as part of a wider project to develop a user-friendly style for Service First publications. The total cost of this work was £6,800. No money has been spent on relabelling buildings or on advertising, £4,000 has been spent primarily on display stands and a pamphlet to inform public servants about the new programme. Service First stationery has been produced in-house using desk-top publishing equipment.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the focus group research which was commissioned in relation to proposals to change the Citizens Charter programme into the Service First programme, indicating (a) the total cost of the focus groups, (b) the names of the companies used and (c) the costs and composition of the new non-departmental public bodies to be established to help implement the Service First programme. [48694]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 3 July 1998]: Two focus groups to inform the development of the new programme were run on behalf of the Cabinet Office by MORI at a cost of £4,000. No non-departmental public bodies are being established to help implement the Service First programme.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the initiatives undertaken by her Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47056]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is:

| Initiative | Undertaken since | Geographical area |
|---|---|---|
| (a) The Londonderry initiative | 1998 | The Greater Urban Area of Londonderry |
| (b) 'Mentally Disordered Offenders Pilot' Scheme | 15 June 1998 | Greater Belfast |

Maternity Services

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the recommendations by Professor Donaldson's Medical Review Panel on (a) the development of a Province-wide comprehensive strategic plan for maternity services and (b) the problem of smaller obstetric units without 24-hour on-site paediatric cover. [47870]

Mr. Worthington: When I announced my response, on 13 November 1997, to the Independent Medical Review Panel's report on maternity services in Central Belfast, I commented specifically on the Panel's recommendation for a comprehensive strategic plan for maternity services in Northern Ireland. In doing so I made it clear that I would not be taking any specific action in this regard pending the final outcome of the reviews of acute services including obstetric care provision, in the Northern, Southern and Western Board areas. Such a review has already taken place, in 1993, in the Eastern Board area and since then obstetric services have ceased at Ards Hospital and, on present plans, will cease in the Downe also in the near future.

I am aware that there are a number of smaller obstetric units in Northern Ireland without 24 hour on-site paediatric cover and some of these are under scrutiny in the review process. Meantime mothers-to-be are advised of the facilities, or lack of facilities, including paediatric cover at a particular unit by, among others, their GP, Obstetrician, Midwife or the HSS Trust concerned. Moreover, during the course of their ante-natal care, expectant mothers at risk of complications are identified and assessed and, if appropriate, advised to have their baby delivered in an obstetric unit with the necessary back-up facilities.

Finally, it is important to remember that mothers-to-be have the right to choose where they wish to have their baby born and some, albeit a small number at present, opt for home delivery.

Ulsterbus

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the public subsidies Ulsterbus has received for the purchase of vehicles, indicating the amounts and dates of the subsidies paid. [47872]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The public subsidies paid to Ulsterbus for the purchase of new buses from 1993–94 to 1997–98 are:

1993–94: £2.216m;

1994–95: £1.722m;

1995–96: £2.137m;

1996–97: £0.225m and

1997–98: nil.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many girls (a) under 14 years, (b) aged 14 to 16 years and (c) aged 16 years and over were placed in Maghaberry prison in (i) 1993, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1995, (iv) 1996, (v) 1997 and (vi) 1998. [48355]

Mr. Ingram: There were no girls under 14 years placed in Maghaberry Prison (female) in any of the years specified. The figures for the other age categories, held in the Young Offenders Unit at the Prison, are as follows:

| | 14–16 years | 16–21 years |
|---|---|---|

TREASURY

Excise Revenue

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the factors taken into account when reducing the forecast revenue figures from excise between July 1997 and March 1998. [45401]

Dawn Primarolo: The forecast of hydrocarbon oil, alcohol and tobacco excise revenue for 1998–99 was revised up by £0.7 billion between July 1997 and March 1998.

Hydrocarbon oil duty receipts were revised up by £0.9 billion, reflecting the increases in duty rates announced in the 1998 Budget on 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 1110.

Alcohol and tobacco duty receipts were each revised down by £0.1 billion, reflecting the slightly lower than anticipated level of clearances in the second half of 1997–98. A number of factors are likely to have affected the 1997–98 outturn. An example of a factor that arose subsequent to the July 1997 forecast was the sharp decline in popularity of alcopops following their adverse publicity last year, which led to a decline in receipts in their duty category. Against this, GDP rose by more than was expected and the summer weather was warm, both of which are likely to have led to an increase in receipts. It is, however, difficult to be absolutely certain about the precise reasons for the small differences between forecast and actual receipts 1997–98 as a number of other largely counter-balancing factors are likely to have been involved.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the increase in excise revenue due to warm weather in the summer of 1997. [45408]

Dawn Primarolo: No estimate has been made.

Alcopops

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the reduction in excise revenue caused by the decline in popularity of alcopops in the period to March 1998. [43402]

Dawn Primarolo: Clearances of coolers (the duty category in which alcopops fall) fell by 29 per cent. between 1996–97 and 1997–98. If one assumes duty rates as of 1 January 1997 (for both years), then this fall is equivalent to some £27m in excise revenues.

The revenue loss to the Exchequer is less than this because it is likely that some consumption of alcopops has switched to other alcoholic drinks.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the General Government Expenditure, as defined prior to the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report 1998, (a) in cash terms and (b) as a percentage of GDP, in a (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01, (iii) 2001–02, (iv) 2002–03 and (v) 2003–04. [47118]

Mr. Darling: Projections of GGE from 1999/2000 onwards depend on the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the real annual percentage growth in (a) total managed expenditure and (b) general Government expenditure as defined prior to the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report 1998 for (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01, (iii) 2001–02, (iv) 2002–03 and (v) averaged over the period 1999–2000 to 2002–03. [47119]

Mr. Darling: Total Managed Expenditure (TME) is the sum of public sector current expenditure and public sector net investment. Series for both of these in cash terms from 1997–98 to 2003–04 can be found in table 4.4 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998 (EFSR). They can be converted into real terms using the working assumptions for the GDP deflator in table 4.1 of the EFSR.

A forecast of General Government Expenditure (GGE) in 1998–99 is given as a memo item in table 4A.1 of the EFSR. Projections of GGE beyond that date depend on the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Correspondence

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the volume of correspondence sent to and received from hon. Members by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the periods (a) 1 January to 26 March 1994 and (b) 1 January to 26 March 1998. [47687]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I receive large volumes of correspondence from hon. Members at my offices in the Treasury, in the House, and in my constituency, and at addresses in Downing Street, London and Fife. The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Privatisation

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria will be used to establish which publicly owned corporations will be considered for privatisation. [48062]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government apply a range of criteria when making decisions of this type. Each case is decided on its own merits.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those publicly owned assets which the Government propose to (a) privatise and (b) reconstitute as publicly owned corporations run on commercial lines during the next four years. [48064]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer the hon. Member to the Chancellor's statement of 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1195–1215, and section 4.2.3 on "Asset Disposals" of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (EFSR) published on 11 June.

Self-assessment

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the workings of the income tax self-assessment scheme. [48582]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Inland Revenue announced a review of Self-assessment in a Press Release on 23 February 1998 and asked for views on what aspects of self-assessment went well and what aspects needed improvement. The closing date for comment was 29 May 1998 and responses are now being reviewed. The Inland Revenue expect to issue a report in due course.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 53, if he will make a statement on the reviews his Department has undertaken of the potential impact on United Kingdom public funds of British Nuclear Fuels' proposed joint purchase with Morris Knudsen Engineering Company of the nuclear operations of Westinghouse; and if he will place in the Library papers relating to this agreement. [48922]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Department of Trade and Industry and the Treasury together looked very closely at the potential impact on public funds, and at the risks facing the business, before deciding that BNFL, in conjunction with the Morris Knudsen Engineering Company, should acquire substantial parts of Westinghouse Inc. The Government took account of reports by the company and its advisers as well as independent analysis of risks. These reports contain commercially sensitive information.

Windfall Levy

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated revenue from the windfall levy on privatised utilities for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [48460]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The revenue was £2.6 billion in 1997–98. It is expected to be the same in 1998–99 when the final instalment is due.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department had made of the likely impact of the current strength of the pound on inbound tourism to the United Kingdom. [47771]

Mr. Chris Smith: The level of inbound tourism is influenced by a variety of factors, including changes in overseas economies, as well as currency exchanges rates. It is not possible to isolate the impact of exchange rate fluctuations from other factors.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what the costs would be of introducing a concession of (a) 25 per cent., (b) 50 per cent., (c) 75 per cent. and (d) 100 per cent. on the television licence fee for (i) all pensioners, (ii) pensioners on income support, (iii) people in receipt of income support, (iv) people in receipt of disability living allowance, (v) people in receipt of attendance allowance, (vi) registered blind and (vii) registered deaf; [48021]

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the annual cost to the Treasury of the concessionary television licence scheme; [48023]

(3) what revenues he estimates would be generated from charging (a) hotels, (b) Government offices and parliamentary buildings and (c) other organisations a licence fee for each television set within their premises of (i) 50 per cent. licence fee for organisations with less than 50 television sets and (ii) a full licence fee for organisations with over 50 television sets. [48022]

Mr. Fisher: The concessionary television licence scheme is not funded by the Treasury but from within the television licensing system. The estimated cost of the scheme at current licence fee levels is £60 million a year.

Records of hotel licences are not held in such a way as to permit an accurate estimate of the additional revenue that would be raised by charging half price licence fees for hotels with fewer that fifty television sets and a full licence fee for those with more than fifty sets. No information is held centrally on the number of television sets installed at other premises.

The estimated cost of providing concessionary television licences at the level and to the groups indicated is as follows:

| | Category of beneficiary | Cost of licence fee reductions (£ million) 25% | 50% | 75% | 100% |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| i) | All 'pensioner only' households | 122 | 244 | 367 | 489 |
| ii) | Households including at least one pensioner receiving income support | 28 | 56 | 84 | 112 |
| iii) | Households including at least one individual in receipt of income support | 98 | 196 | 293 | 391 |
| iv) | Households including at least one individual in receipt of disability living allowance | 29 | 58 | 86 | 115 |
| v) | Households including at least one individual in receipt of attendance allowance | 19 | 39 | 58 | 77 |
| vi) | Individuals who are registered blind | 4 | 8 | 12 | 16 |
| vii) | Individuals who are registered deaf | 1 | 2 | 4 | 5 |

Tourism (Accommodation)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of UK accommodation and hotel rates on decisions by foreign tourists visiting the EU to include the UK in their itinerary. [47977]

Mr. Chris Smith: The level of inbound tourism is influenced by a variety of factors, including changes in overseas economies and currency exchange rates. It is not possible to isolate precisely the impact of accommodation costs from other factors.

The British Tourist Authority is, however, able to monitor changes to incoming tourism traffic through market intelligence and surveys of tourists and of the accommodation stock. It has seen a significant fall in traffic from some Asian markets, but in markets with strong economies and whose currencies have not depreciated significantly against sterling there has been continued growth. This would suggest that accommodation costs have not been a significant factor in influencing foreign tourists to travel elsewhere. Indeed, in a recent independent survey conducted in the USA, more previous visitors to Europe said they would like to return to Britain than to any other country.

Millennium Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the preparations which his Department is making to help the tourism industry draw people from abroad to the Millennium celebrations. [48790]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The Government fund the British Tourist Authority to promote Britain overseas and we are now developing plans specifically to promote the millennium celebrations. There are four main elements to these plans:

(1) a PR and promotional campaign, with launches this autumn in Europe, the USA and the Far East which are being developed in partnership with Embassies and the British Council;

(2) the launch in January 1999 of "The New Map of Britain", covering all new millennium attractions;

(3) provision of a comprehensive millennium information service to consumers; and

(4) advice and support to members of the travel trade and tourist attractions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Chief Inspector of Prisons

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Chief Inspector of Prisons about the Chief Inspector's right to comment on Government policy; what advice he has given; and if he will make a statement. [47981]

Mr. Straw: Both I and the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), who has responsibility for prisons and probation, meet Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on a regular basis. Discussions are wide-ranging and will, from time to time, extend to the nature of the Chief Inspector's role. These responsibilities are set out in the Prison Act 1952 and require that he inspect all prison establishments and report to the Home Secretary on the condition in which prisoners are being held. The Chief Inspector is also able to raise any other issue of concern with Ministers.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to prevent illegal drugs getting into prison; and if he will make a statement. [48199]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service has in place as part of its drug strategy robust measures aimed at preventing the entry of drugs into prisons. Measures include: searching of visitors and of prisoners following visits; use of closed circuit television in visits areas; and perimeter searching. Many establishments use drug dogs, which are an effective means of deterring visitors who may attempt to smuggle drugs. Prisoners found guilty of drug smuggling are liable to be placed on closed visits, while visitors may be arrested and denied future visits if found in possession of drugs.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of prisoners who are using illegal drugs; and if he will make a statement. [48202]

Mr. George Howarth: Our best estimate of the numbers of prisoners using illegal drugs derives from the results of random mandatory drug testing (MDT). However, random testing involves the testing of only a proportion of a prison's population each month. For this and a number of other reasons, MDT results cannot be a complete measure of the prevalence of drug misuse in prisons. In 1997/98, 20.8 per cent. of random MDT samples were positive for drugs.

Magistrates Courts (Essex)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional grant he will make to Essex Police following the closure of magistrates' courts in the county. [48538]

Mr. Michael: No additional grant will be paid. Police grant is allocated by means of a needs-based formula in which the location of court buildings does not feature. The Essex Police will have a spending power in 1998/99 of £166.2 million. This is an increase of 3.7 per cent. or £6 million over 1997/98. It is for the Chief Constable to determine the allocation of resources to meet the force's obligations, including any necessary adjustments to deployment as a result of changes in requirements for the attendance of officers at court.

Immigration Reviews

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the results of (a) the comprehensive spending review of asylum, (b) the review of immigration detention, (c) the review of immigration appeals and (d) the review of the regulation of unscrupulous immigration advisers. [48581]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will make announcements on the way ahead soon.

Medway Secure Training Centre

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much damage was caused during disturbances at the Medway Secure Training Centre on 25 and 26 June; and what steps are being taken to prevent a repetition of such disturbances. [48547]

Mr. Michael: There was a disturbance at Medway Secure Training Centre on the evening of 25 June. The estimated cost of the damage was about £5,300, mainly the cost of replacing broken windows. These costs are met by the contractor. The contractor has commissioned an inquiry into the events of 25 June and a report is expected shortly.

Ballot Papers

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research on the form of the ballot paper he has commissioned; and when he expects to publish the results. [48598]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office, together with the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Government Office for London, is contributing to research by the Constitution Unit and Social and Community Planning Research. This is looking at what would be the most suitable design of the ballot paper for list-based electoral systems, such as those being introduced for elections to the Scottish Parliament, Welsh Assembly, Greater London Assembly and European Parliament. A report is expected in the autumn.

Fingerprints

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the terms of reference for the 1988 Home Office review of fingerprint identification methods conducted by Mr. I. W. Evett and Mr. R. L. Williams; what progress has been made in implementing the conclusions of the review regarding (a) training, (b) certification testing, (c) performance testing, (d) file audits and (e) blind trials of fingerprint examiners and bureaux; if he will place the report in the Library; and what further studies have been commissioned by his Department. [48317]

Mr. Michael: The terms of reference were to conduct a review of the requirement for a fingerprint identification to be based on at least 16 points of comparison before evidence may be given in court. The report was published in its entirety in Fingerprint Whorld and the Journal for Fingerprint Identification, and I am placing a copy of the latter in the Library. The Home Office has not commissioned any further studies on this matter.

With regard to the conclusions reached by the review, in 1994 the Association of Chief Police Officers undertook a broad examination of the standards of fingerprint evidence, and decided that such evidence should in future derive from the expertise of fingerprint officers, rather than the traditional numerical point standard for which there appears to be no legal basis. The changes will be underpinned by Quality Assurance, standards, inspection and a regime of competency testing—a move very much in line with the recommendations of the Evett and Williams report. The date set for implementation of the change in fingerprint evidence is 3 April 2000.

Blasphemy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to remove the offence of blasphemy from the statute book. [48550]

Mr. Michael: This is a sensitive area which involves fundamental issues of belief, with strong and sincere views on all sides. In the absence of any consensus on the best way forward, we have no current plans to change the law.

Young Offenders (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the most common crimes committed by persons under 16 in each of Lancashire Constabulary's divisions for the latest year for which figures are available. [48502]

Mr. Michael: The available information shows the number of notifiable offences cleared up by Lancashire Constabulary that were committed by persons under 16. On this basis, the five most common offences cleared up in 1997 are shown in the table in rank order for each division within the force.

Notifiable offences committed by persons under 16 and cleared up by Lancashire Constabulary in 1997

Criminal damage of value £20 and under is not included

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives were proposed by Her Majesty's Government for tackling (a) illegal drugs and (b) other criminal activity during the UK presidency of the European Union. [48546]

Mr. George Howarth: Fighting organised international crime, including tackling illicit drug trafficking, was a priority for this Government during the United Kingdom Presidency, with a focus on practical action.

One of our main objectives was to begin consideration of the post-1999 European Union drugs strategy. The Cardiff European Council endorsed a report on the key elements of a new five year strategy, which strikes the necessary balance between demand and supply reduction activity. The strategy will be further developed under succeeding Presidencies, to take effect from the year 2000. We continued to promote Customs joint surveillance exercises to improve operational co-operation and exchange of intelligence.

Three practical exercises took place during the United Kingdom Presidency, including an exercise involving all 15 member states and the applicant countries of Central and Eastern Europe successfully targeting drug trafficking along the Balkan route. This resulted in seizures with a United Kingdom total street value of around £10 million. The United Kingdom was active as Presidency in ensuring effective European Union co-ordination in preparations for the United Nations General Assembly Special Session on drugs, which adopted a Political Declaration, guiding principles on demand reduction, and an action plan covering precursor chemicals, amphetamine-type stimulants, money laundering, judicial co-operation and alternative development. The United Kingdom Presidency also took forward important work on European Union regional drugs initiatives in Latin America and the Caribbean.

(b) Other criminal activity

Under the United Kingdom Presidency, work against other criminal activity, particularly serious organised crime, has been largely geared to implementing the European Union's Action Plan against organised crime, agreed in 1997 by the Amsterdam European Council. A progress report prepared for the Cardiff European Council in June this year described substantial progress with the implementation of the Action Plan's recommendations.

Work on all of the recommendations with deadlines for completion up to the middle of 1998 either has been completed or is well underway. Work has also begun on many of the recommendations with longer deadlines.

Specific achievements in the field of organised crime during our Presidency included:

the establishment of a funding programme to combat organised crime (FALCONE programme); political agreement on a joint action on participation in a criminal organisation;

the establishment of a mutual evaluation mechanism and setting in motion of the first round of national evaluations which will concentrate initially on reasons for delays in providing mutual legal assistance and urgent requests for restraint of assets; creation of a European Judicial Network to improve practical co-operation and communication;

adoption, ahead of schedule, of the Pre-Accession Pact on organised crime with the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, including the Baltic States and Cyprus; introduction and completion of a joint action on good practice in mutual legal assistance;

introduction of a joint action on the identification, tracing, freezing, seizing and confiscation of assets, on which discussion is continuing.

In addition to these achievements, the Naples II Convention on customs co-operation has been agreed, as has the Convention on Driving Disqualification which has been in negotiation for seven years.

A further priority for our Presidency was to secure full ratification of the Europol Convention. National ratification procedures have now been completed and the Europol Convention will enter into force on 1 October 1998. A fully functioning Europol will represent a step-change in the level of the European Union's response to organised crime.

On a more technical level, the United Kingdom Presidency promoted and concluded initiatives on the subjects of crime prevention, where national contact points were identified for exchange of information and dissemination of best practice, and on fingerprints, where agreement was reached on a common European Union standard for the exchange of fingerprint information.

Air Raid Siren, Ashley Heath

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will make arrangements with Dorset police to remove the air raid siren at Ashley Heath roundabout; and if he will make a statement. [48499]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand that Dorset Police have made arrangements to remove the siren in question by Wednesday 8 July.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to his Department of the erection of an air raid siren at Ashley Heath roundabout in 1991. [48498]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost of erecting this particular siren could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vulnerable Witnesses

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proposed timescale for implementing the recommendations relating to vulnerable witnesses in the report "Speaking up for Justice", June 1998. [48686]

Mr. Michael: On 10 June we announced a period of consultation on all the recommendations in "Speaking up for Justice", the report of the Working Group on Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses. We will take action as quickly as possible to improve the way vulnerable or intimidated witnesses are treated in the criminal justice system in the light of comments received during the consultation period.

Chief Police Officers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the invoices which he has paid, with dates, to the (a) Association of Chief Police Officers, (b) Association of Chief Police Officers Ltd. and (c) Chief Police Officers Staff Association in each of the last two years. [49218]

Mr. Michael: No. This expenditure is subject to parliamentary approval and audit, as is all Government expenditure.

It would be neither appropriate nor practical to place in the Library copies of invoices for administrative expenses incurred by the Association of Chief Police Officers and processed through the Home Office's Business and Accounting Strategic Systems.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the annual accounts for each of the last five years of the Association of Chief Police Officers, for England, Wales and Northern Ireland. [49221]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 296–97.

North Yorkshire Constabulary

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police constables were employed by the North Yorkshire Constabulary between 1978 and 1998; and what was the total police strength in each of those years. [49080]

Mr. Michael: The information available is set out in the table. It is not possible to provide details of the number of constables prior to July 1990.

North Yorkshire constabulary

[1] Figures provided are as at 31 March for each year

[2] Constable figures for 1990 are those at 30 June. The nearest available to March 1990

[3] Police numbers for March 1998 are provisional

Ministerial Visits (Prisons)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), plans to visit in July and August. [48924]

Ms Quin: I expect to make five visits to prisons, including one unannounced. However, final arrangements have not yet been made and alterations or additions to the programme are possible.

Dependent Territories

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what basis British citizenship is being considered for citizens of British dependent territories as part of the Dependent Territories Review; [49200]

(2) if British citizenship will be offered to citizens of dependent territories on a non-reciprocal basis. [49201]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We still have these matters under consideration. Final conclusions have not yet been reached.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of the Thames Division of the Metropolitan Police. [48467]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that a review of Thames Division is being conducted currently. This review will ensure that the demands of the changing river environment can be met. A restructuring of Thames Division may follow with best value being a key component of the review.

Civil Prisoners (Parole)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce parole for prisoners sentenced for civil matters; and if he will make a statement. [48999]

Mr. Michael: The Government have no plans to change the arrangements for the release of prisoners sentenced for civil matters. Civil prisoners, who are invariably short term prisoners (i.e. those serving less than four years), are not eligible for "parole" in its true sense. That is because all short term prisoners are subject to automatic early release at the half way point of their sentence under the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The only prisoners who are now eligible for release at the discretion of the Parole Board are long term prisoners serving sentences of four years or more and life sentence prisoners.

Fire Services (Essex)

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reached a decision on the application under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 of the Essex Fire Authority. [49464]

Mr. George Howarth: I have today advised the Essex Fire Authority that my right hon. Friend has agreed to its application to redeploy an aerial appliance and two foam carrying vehicles, with a consequent reduction of 16 firefighting posts and the regrading of a further post.

The advice we have received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services is unequivocal—that the proposals to redeploy the appliances are soundly based and that, if implemented by the Authority, the Essex Fire Brigade will still be able to meet fully the national standards of fire cover.

Statutory responsibility for the provision of an efficient fire service rests with the local fire authority. In considering applications by fire authorities for reductions in firefighting resources, my right hon. Friend must be satisfied that there has been adequate consultation and that, following any reductions, national standards of fire cover can continue to be maintained. In fulfilling this function, my right hon. Friend relies on advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services.

Both my right hon. Friend and I are satisfied that the Essex Fire Authority has consulted properly over its proposals. There has also been opportunity for representations to be made direct to the Home Secretary and those seven which have been received have all been thoroughly considered.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how staff numbers in her Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48883]

Clare Short: On 1 May 1997 the Department for International Development employed 1,001 permanent staff and 38 casual staff. On 31 March 1998 the number of permanent staff increased by 53 to 1,054. Casual staff remained the same.

Arms Sales (EU Code of Conduct)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on discussions her Department has had with (a) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and (b) the Department of Trade and Industry, regarding the implementation of the EU code of conduct on arms sales. [48870]

Clare Short: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office leads in Whitehall on the EU Code of Conduct. My Department participates in the ongoing discussions on implementation of the Code with all relevant government departments, including the Department of Trade and Industry.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contingency plans her Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when she expects them to be in place, and tested; and if she will make a statement. [48839]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) is working on making its business critical computer systems year 2000 compliant. The testing of the systems will start in September and is due to be completed by end-March 1999. The testing will be subject to Internal Audit certification. The outcome of the testing will provide DFID business managers the opportunity to decide on the degree and extent of contingency arrangements that need to be made for their own systems. An earlier start to contingency planning would be premature and possibly nugatory.

Rwanda

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 21 May 1998, Official Report, column 460, what decision was made regarding Rwanda's debt relief package on 2 and 3 June; and if she will make a statement. [48912]

Clare Short: The donors meeting held in Stockholm on 2–3 June established a "Multilateral Debt Trust Fund" designed to help meet Rwanda's debt service to multilateral creditors in the pre-HIPC period. An amount of US$53 million is needed for this for the period 1998–2000. The UK pledged £30 million. We are discussing with the Government of Rwanda what proportion of this should go to the Trust Fund.

Small and Medium Businesses

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what targets are set for the proportion of Commonwealth Development Corporation investment that is used for small and medium businesses. [48868]

Clare Short: No formal targets are set. Finance is provided for small and medium business through financial intermediaries such as venture capital funds, leasing companies, development banks, finance companies and commercial banks. At the end of 1997 the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) had £341 million invested in such sectors and would expect to maintain a substantial commitment.

Lomé Convention

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the progress made on the EU negotiating mandate for Lomé V. [48867]

Clare Short: The General Affairs Council adopted the EU mandate for negotiation of a new Partnership with those African, Caribbean and Pacific States (ACP) party to the Lomé Convention on 29 June. The mandate focuses on the elimination of poverty, the integration of the ACP into the world economy, and promoting peace, security and stability. On development assistance, the UK succeeded in strengthening the mandate to secure stronger backing for the international poverty eradication strategy and targets. On trade, we secured agreement to duty free access for essentially all products from least developed countries by 2005. We also secured a commitment that the non-least developed countries in the ACP who do not join Free Trade Areas with the EU should retain access equivalent to that provided under Lomé IV after 2005. This provides a good basis for negotiations with the ACP which are due to open at the end of September.

DEFENCE

Defence Exhibitions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution (a) financially, and (b) in terms of UK armed forces personnel his Department will be making to the 1999 Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition. [48497]

Mr. Spellar: My Department will support the new Defence Systems and Equipment International exhibition both financially and through the participation of UK Service personnel. The extent of our involvement in both areas is still under discussion with the exhibition organisers and the Defence Trade Associations. However, on the financial side, it is intended that our contribution will be limited to aspects of the exhibition which are directly related to MOD interests. These will include the costs of a Ministry of Defence presence and the funding of a reception for official visitors invited by Her Majesty's Government. In terms of Service personnel, a number of officers will be employed to assist, principally in managing the Government to Government invited delegations. We also hope that the Army will be able to provide equipment and personnel to take part in a mobility demonstration.

Trident Submarines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce the number of nuclear warheads carried in each Trident submarine; and if he will make a statement. [47198]

Mr. George Robertson: We will make clear our decisions on this issue when we announce the conclusions of the Strategic Defence Review.

Eurofighter

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that missile performance characteristics will be the primary criteria for the selection of a missile for the Eurofighter 2000 aircraft to meet Air Staff Target 1239. [47805]

Mr. Spellar: We will be seeking the best value for money in selecting a Beyond Visual Range Air-to-Air Missile for Eurofighter. All relevant factors will be taken into account, including missile capability, technical risk, cost, and industrial factors.

Territorial Army (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the cadet forces in Shropshire associated with Territorial Army battalions. [47680]

Dr. Reid: Final decisions on the Strategic Defence Review will be announced this week but we have already made it plain that we plan no reduction in numbers or resources of the Cadet Forces. Every effort will be made to minimise the impact on the cadets of other measures arising from the Review.

Naval Surface Vessels

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what type and how many naval surface vessels will require to be decommissioned in 1998. [48180]

Dr. Reid: The following Royal Navy vessels have been or will be, decommissioned in 1998:

| Vessel | Month |
|---|---|
| HMS Itchen | February 1998 |
| HMS Spey | May 1998 |
| HMS Blackwater | May 1998 |
| HMS Arun | July 1998 |

These are all River Class patrol vessels.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49229]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally by the Department. This is a complex question as the fleet is large and responsibilities are delegated to individual budget holders, and would involve disproportionate cost.

South Atlantic Frigate

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the future role of the South Atlantic frigate. [49144]

Mr. George Robertson: In the course of the Strategic Defence Review, I have discussed the Falkland Islands Guardship with fellow members of the Government. I have not received any other representations on this issue.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 7, when it was decided to assign the 1 Battalion The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the 1 Battalion The Black Watch to public duties in Scotland during the summer of 1999; if this represents a change from previous plans; and what were the defence considerations involved in the decision. [48804]

Mr. George Robertson: The decision to assign the 1st Battalion The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the 1st Battalion The Black Watch to public duties in Scotland during the summer of 1999 was made at a routine planning conference which took place in Scotland about a year ago. This did not represent a change from previous plans. Such planning decisions take into account the Army's operational commitments, the need for units to perform essential military tasks such as training, and the need to provide each unit with the opportunity to fulfil a variety of different defence roles.

Salisbury Plain and Otterburn Training Areas

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the size of (a) Salisbury Plain training area and (b) Otterburn training area; and what proportion of each is available for military training. [48676]

Dr. Reid: Salisbury Plain Training Area contains some 38,000 hectares of land, of which up to 80 per cent. can be available for military training. Otterburn Training Area contains some 23,000 hectares, of which 95 per cent. is available for military training.

Missile Training

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the contribution to the UK national interest of training the army in the use of the AS90 mobile gun and the multiple-launch rocket system on new infrastructure at Otterburn army field training centre. [48675]

Dr. Reid: My Department's requirement for Army training in the use of the artillery systems, AS90 and Multiple-Launch Rocket System (MLRS), and its proposals for development of the Otterburn Training Area to that end, were fully set out in evidence to the non-statutory public inquiry into the proposed development which concluded last September. I am satisfied that there remains a strong defence need for the development at Otterburn in order to permit units equipped with these systems to be properly trained.

PRIME MINISTER

Focus Groups

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the focus group work he has commissioned in the course of his official duties, indicating the cost in each case. [45460]

The Prime Minister: Neither I nor my staff in 10 Downing Street have commissioned any research by focus groups. The position on research by the Cabinet Office (which included my office) was set out in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 5 March 1998, Official Report, columns 763–65.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will direct Ministers to place in the Library a copy of focus group work undertaken on behalf of their departments or the executive agencies for which they are responsible, indicating the cost in each case. [45461]

The Prime Minister: It is for individual Ministers to decide whether to publish the results of research.

Mr. Lance Price

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister when he first received the application from Mr. Lance Price for the position of his deputy press spokesman; on what dates interviews were conducted with Mr. Price; and on what date the decision was taken to employ Mr. Price. [46445]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 June 1998]: As has been the case with all Special Adviser appointments, Mr. Price's appointment was made fully in accordance with paragraph 48 of the Ministerial Code.

Pakistan

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings have taken place between Government Ministers and their Pakistani counterparts since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [48183]

The Prime Minister: We have had a number of discussions with the Pakistan High Commission in London and with other representatives of the Pakistan Government. The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) met the Prime Minister of Pakistan in London on 16 June.

Constitutional Reform

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of a wholly elected second chamber; and if he will make a statement. [48031]

The Prime Minister: The Government will publish their proposals for fulfilling their Manifesto commitments on the reform of the House of Lords in due course.

EU Presidency (Costs)

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the total cost to the Government of hosting the presidency of the EU, including the cost of publicity for each Government department, broken down by department and item. [48082]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Final bills for FCO-led Presidency events (including the European Council) are not in. On current projections, the outturn will be within the figure given in a reply by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) on 27 February 1998, Official Report, column 386.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, column 313, if the telegrams from Sierra Leone relating to Sandline were copied to No. 10 Downing Street. [48017]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 July 1998]: I refer to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in the House during the debate on 18 May 1998, Official Report, columns 604–11, in which he announced the investigation by Sir Thomas Legg KCB QC into allegations about Government involvement with the supply of arms to Sierra Leone by UK citizens and firms, and said that the Terms of Reference would be placed in the Library of the House. He intends to publish the report of the investigation.

Physiotherapists

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what is the precise number of letters he has received from National Health Service physiotherapists against the staging of the current year's pay award. [48177]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Since the publication of the Report of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine in January, my office has received 147,849 items of correspondence from members of the public. Of these 1,100 were copies of a standard campaign letter on the subject of staging the pay award for physiotherapists and other professions allied to medicine. 46 other letters on this subject were also received.

Rural Affairs

Mr. Gray: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to create a Ministry of Rural Affairs. [48796]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 252.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48849]

Mr. Fatchett: The FCO is replacing its core office automation system with millennium compliant systems. Other non-compliant systems are being corrected or replaced. All FCO business-critical computer systems will be year 2000 compliant by September 1999.

All FCO operational units, both at home and overseas, are being asked to prepare contingency plans for the continuation of business in the event of any internal or external computer system failure. It is intended that these will be in place by 30 June 1999.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48871]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 1 April 1997 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office employed 5,595 UK-based staff (including 56 casuals) counted as full-time equivalents. Its agency, Wilton Park, employed 35 staff (no casuals) on the same basis. At 1 April 1998 the equivalent figures were 5,493 (including 81 casuals) and 38 (including 1 casual) respectively. So the number of staff employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office decreased by 102 between 1 April 1997 and 1 April 1998 and the number of staff employed by the Wilton Park agency increased by 3 during the same period.

Mr. Roderick Henderson

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress of the French authorities in their investigation of the death in Paris of Mr. Roderick Henderson. [48887]

Mr. Fatchett: The Examining Magistrate in charge of the investigation has confirmed that police officers are working full-time on the case. Progress in the investigation is slow as witnesses to the attack have not come forward and the French police have few leads to follow. One witness who did come forward subsequently moved address and has not yet been traced.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in how many meetings with the French authorities officials of the British Embassy have raised the investigation into the death in Paris of Mr. Roderick Henderson; at what levels the matter has been raised; and if he will list the meetings concerned. [48888]

Mr. Fatchett: Two formal meetings have been held. The Deputy Head of our Embassy in Paris raised the matter with the Diplomatic Adviser to the Interior Minister on 21 April. The Consul-General met the Examining Magistrate in charge of the case on 29 April. Our consular staff in Paris speak regularly on the telephone to French officials and to Mrs. Henderson's French lawyers about the investigation into the death of Mr. Henderson. We will continue to press the French authorities to do all they can to bring Mr. Henderson's murderer to justice.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he or his Ministers have had with (a) Ministers and (b) officials of the French Government at which the investigation into the death in Paris of Mr. Roderick Henderson has been raised. [48865]

Mr. Fatchett: The matter has not been raised at Ministerial level, but we are active in pressing the French authorities to do all they can to bring Mr. Henderson's murderer to justice.

Falkland Islands

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of oil revenue taxation from oil fields off the Falkland Islands will accrue to (a) the Falkland Islands authority and (b) the Treasury; and what the statutory or other basis is for this arrangement. [48343]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Any oil revenues will accrue to the Falkland Islands Government. I discussed revenue sharing, should oil be found, with the Falkland Islands Councillors during a visit to the Islands in April. I welcomed their generous offer made in 1994 to share revenues from oil production with HMG and we agreed that we should now discuss arrangements for this in a spirit of cooperation and partnership.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what degree of autonomy the authorities in the Falkland Islands have in fiscal matters. [48342]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Under Section 61 of the Constitution of the Falkland Islands, fiscal matters fall under the responsibility of the Governor as advised by the Islands Executive Council.

Dependent Territories

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if British citizenship will be offered to citizens of dependent territories on a non-reciprocal basis. [49148]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The question of whether and on what basis British citizenship might be offered to the Overseas Territories which do not currently have it is still under consideration. No final decisions have been taken yet.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the results of the Dependent Territories Review will be published. [49146]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Some key issues relevant to the Review and White Paper are still being discussed. Until these are resolved, it is not possible to give a date for publication.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many residents of dependent territories are holders of British Dependent Territory passports. [49149]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Approximately 99,950 residents of the Overseas Territories either hold or are eligible for British Dependent Territories passports.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which dependent territories requested British citizenship for their populations, as part of the Dependent Territories Review. [49147]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: All the populated Overseas Territories, with the exception of the Falklands and Gibraltar, which already have access to British citizenship, have expressed an interest in this proposal.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many residents of dependent territories are holders of (a) passports other than British Dependent Territory passports and (b) British passports. [49150]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Approximately 55,700 residents of the Overseas Territories are holders of passports other than British Dependent Territory passports or British passports. Approximately 35,380 residents of the Overseas Territories are holders of British passports.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Blackwall Tunnel Emissions

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) by what means the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system will emit air into the roof of the Millennium Dome; [48134]

(2) how visitors to the Millennium Dome will be notified of emissions from the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system; [48142]

(3) how the atmosphere within the Millennium Dome will be monitored for pollution levels; [48139]

(4) at what level of emission from the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system the warning system would be activated within the Millennium Dome; [48137]

(5) how emissions from the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system are released into the atmosphere; [48141]

(6) under what circumstances the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system will be activated; [48143]

(7) what plans there are for the evacuation of the Millennium Dome in the case of high levels of emission from the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system; [48140]

(8) by what means the Blackwall Tunnel ventilation system will be activated. [48133]

Mr. Mandelson: The Dome is entirely separate from the ventilation shaft and there is no prospect of pollutants transferring from one to the other. The ventilation fans draw air through the tunnel to ensure appropriate air quality levels in the tunnel. The fans increase in speed as pollutant levels in the tunnel reach pre-determined thresholds. During the Dome's construction, the increase in fan speeds is accompanied by a warning sound. This is simply to inform construction workers, who may be overhead, that the noise generated by the fans is about to change. Contingency plans and procedures are in place for emergency incidents arising in either the tunnel or the Dome.

Millennium Experience (Logo)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) if he will make a statement on the process by which the logo for the New Millennium Experience was chosen; what consideration was given to the use of a male figure; and if the figure chosen was designed specifically for the project; [45390]

(2) what is the cost of the logo for the New Millennium Experience; and who was responsible for choosing it; [45389]

(3) which projects Mr. Martin Lambie-Nairn is currently working on for the New Millennium Experience. [45423]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: The logo, which is part of a wider brand identity reflecting the central role of the Millennium Experience in the UK's millennium celebrations and supporting the New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC) sponsorship and commercial income strategies, was selected by the Company following a competitive process. During that process, Mr. Martin Lambie-Nairn presented proposals for branding and identity which incorporated designs for a logo by the artist Mark Reddy. The logo was designed specifically for the Millennium Experience.

NMEC's Board considered that Mr. Lambie-Nairn's proposals best met their criteria for a brand identity for the Millennium Experience and awarded Mr. Lambie-Nairn's company a contract worth up to £250,000. This contract covers the development and application of the identity across the project (both the Dome and the associated National Programme of events and activities); corporate style (for example printed material and merchandise branding); and advising on the design language used on the Dome site (for example, signing and visitor information). Within this contract, Mr. Reddy's design work cost £50,000.

SCOTLAND

Health Service (Review Panels)

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many independent review panels have investigated matters relating to the NHS in Scotland in the last five years; and what was the average length of time each took to produce its report. [46788]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 23 June 1998]: Information on the numbers of reports from independent review panels convened under the current NHS complaints procedure (introduced on 1 April 1996) to date and the length of time of production of reports is given in the table.

Respiratory System Disease

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) consultations there were between doctors and GPs in 1997, (b) how many of those consultations were for asthma and (c) how many were for other respiratory system diseases, excluding influenza. [47973]

Mr. Galbraith: In 1997 GPs referred 1,034,767 patients to other doctors for outpatient consultations. Of these, 15,284 were referrals to respiratory medicine consultants. The number of cases of asthma is not available.

78,853 patients were admitted to hospital with respiratory diseases as the main diagnosis (excluding influenza). Of these 8,563 had asthma.

Health Service Expenditure

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each month in 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 (a) capital expenditure and (b) revenue expenditure on the NHS in Scotland. [47972]

Mr. Galbraith: As required by the rules of Government Accounting, payments to health bodies are made by way of advances from suspence accounts. Expenditure is therefore debited to the vote account only once the exact amount is reported to the Scottish Office, which can be up to 2 months after the date of the actual expenditure. The information held by the Scottish Office is not therefore a reliable indicator of the monthly expenditure by the NHS in Scotland. The net annual audited expenditure for 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 is set out in the table. Estimated outturn information is provided for 1997–98 as audited expenditure is not yet available.

| Year | Revenue expenditure | Capital expenditure | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1994–95 | 3,922 | 38 | 3,960 |
| 1995–96 | 4,090 | –7 | 4,083 |
| 1996–97 | 4,226 | 16 | 4,242 |
| 1997–98 | 4,421 | –5 | 4,416 |

The capital expenditure provided in the table relates to direct capital expenditure by Health Boards net of capital receipts. In 1995–96 and 1997–98 income from the sale of land and buildings was greater than expenditure on capital. Capital expenditure by NHS Trusts is funded from the revenue income they receive from Health Boards and by loans from the Scottish Office.

Hypothermia

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each month in the years 1994, 1995 and 1996 the number of admissions to hospital from people suffering from hypothermia. [47971]

Mr. Galbraith: The number of inpatient and day case discharges from acute NHS hospitals in Scotland where a diagnosis of hypothermia was recorded in each month in 1994, 1995 and 1996 is given in the table.

Number of inpatient and day case discharges where a diagnosis of hypothermia[1] was recorded

| Year/month admitted | Number of discharges |
|---|---|

Fisheries and Offshore Oil Consultative Group

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the minutes of meetings of the Fisheries and Offshore Oil Consultative Group since its incorporation in September 1995. [47991]

Mr. Macdonald: The Fisheries and Offshore Oil Consultative Group was set up by the Secretary of State for Scotland in 1974. The Group provides a forum for representatives of the offshore oil and fishing industries to exchange information on matters concerning both industries so that each may carry out its operations with minimum interference to the other.

Copies of all minutes of Group meetings held since September 1995 will be placed in the Library.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46689]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 June 1998]: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Department routinely consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of White Papers and consultation papers on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. I have therefore confined my reply to major exercises. It is our normal practice to place the results of the consultations in the Library where appropriate.

City Status

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria are used in Scotland to award city status to towns; and when the last applications for such an award were made. [48490]

Mr. McLeish: There are no settled criteria for the award of city status to towns in Scotland. There has been no such award since Dundee was given city status in 1889. Any further award would be a matter for Her Majesty The Queen acting under the Royal Prerogative on the advice of the Government of the day. I am not aware of any application for such an award in recent times, although inquiries were made on behalf of Paisley in 1991 and Inverness in 1996.

Registered Schools

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set a timescale within which schools which fall to be registered under section 61 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, as amended by section 34 of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, must submit applications to the registration authority after being notified by that authority of the need to register. [48448]

Mr. Galbraith: The amendment to the 1968 Act by the 1995 Act brought a number of additional schools within the registration provisions. Registration of these schools was not required until 1 April 1997 and schools had adequate opportunity to submit applications. As it is unlawful to run a registrable residential establishment which is not registered, setting a time-scale would not be appropriate. It is for local authorities to take action if applications are not submitted.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48842]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office is currently producing quarterly Year 2000 compliance activity reports which include information on contingency planning. These reports are published on the Internet and place in the Library of the House of Commons. The Scottish Office is currently working towards achieving tested Year 2000 compliance on all critical systems by the end of December 1998, with contingency arrangements which are appropriate to the perceived risks remaining being put into place in the course of 1999.

Charges

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the powers local government, Scottish Office agencies and quangos have to impose charges, together with the acts conferring those powers. [48340]

Mr. Dewar: Local authorities and other public bodies make a wide range of charges for various services, under different statutory powers. A full list of the charges and their statutory basis could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Further and Higher Education

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average percentage pay increase in further and higher education colleges for (a) teaching staff, (b) administrative staff and (c) the board of directors in the years (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [48347]

Mr. Wilson: Pay settlements are the responsibility of individual colleges' Boards of Management. Information on individual annual pay settlements is not held centrally.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase local representation on the boards of further and higher education colleges. [48345]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. The Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 already requires that the Board of Management of a further education college should be fully representative of local interests. Its membership must include the Principal of the college, two staff and one student representatives, a person nominated by the local enterprise company and others with an interest in the work of the college.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to return further and higher education colleges to local control. [48358]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to return further education colleges to local authority control. Each college is now managed by a Board of Management whose members represent various local interests.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent advice he has given to the boards of further and higher education colleges on pay settlements for (a) teaching staff, (b) administrative staff and (c) the board of directors. [48346]

Mr. Wilson: In 1993 the further education colleges became autonomous bodies and each college's Board of Management assumed full responsibility for pay settlements in respect of college staff. Board Members themselves are unpaid. My right hon. Friend has not issued advice on pay settlements.

Litter Acts

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1998, Official Report, column 271, on the Litter Act, how many persons were arrested and charged under the Litter Act 1958, the Litter Act 1983 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990, in each year since 1983; and if he will indicate what the total amount of fines levied each year since 1983 would be at 1998–99 prices. [48508]

Mr. McLeish: The available information is given in the table. Separate information is not readily available on the amount of fiscal fines imposed or on the number of persons arrested and charged by the police.

Offences recorded by the police and the total amount of fine levied where the main offence is an offence under the Litter Act 1983 or related legislation[1] by the courts in Scotland 1983–1997

Health Service Waiting Lists

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated costs of the Government's plans to reduce Scottish NHS waiting lists in the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48458]

Mr. Galbraith: £44.5 million of extra funding has been made available to the NHS in Scotland in 1998–99 specifically to drive down waiting lists and waiting times. The additional funding has been made available on a recurrent basis to achieve sustained reductions in waiting lists. No decisions have been made on funding for the year 1999–2000.

Fines

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the powers local government, Scottish Office agencies and quangos have to impose fines, together with the acts conferring those powers. [48341]

Mr. Dewar: Fines are imposed on those convicted of criminal offences by the courts, and a full list of the statutory offences which are punishable by fines could be completed only at disproportionate cost.

Class Sizes

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated costs of reducing class sizes to under 30 for all pupils in primaries 1, 2 and 3 in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48349]

Mr. Wilson: Detailed cost estimates are not available. The Government are committed to reducing class sizes to a maximum of 30 pupils in the first three years of primary education by August 2001. I recently announced the allocation to local authorities of £4 million this year to enable them to take early action towards meeting this target. The need for further resources for 1999/2000 and beyond is being considered in the context of the Comprehensive Spending Review and in the light of advice received from joint working with COSLA and a number of local authorities. Further detailed guidance about cost estimates and plans will be made available to authorities as soon as possible.

New Deal

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on the New Deal programme to get 18 to 25 year olds back to work in the year 1997–98; and what are the estimated costs for (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48510]

Mr. Wilson: The provisional amount spent on the New Deal for young people (18–24 year olds) in Scotland for 1997–98 is £1.5 million. A final figure will be available by the end of August. The New Deal is financed from the receipts of the Windfall Tax on the privatised utilities. Expenditure is planned over the duration of the Parliament and unspent resources in any single year are available for spending on the New Deal in future years.

The estimated cost for 1998–99 is £59 million and for 1999–2000 is £67 million. The New Deal is demand led and actual provision for any particular year will be decided in the light of the level of unemployment and experience gained in running the New Deal.

Health Service

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated savings from reducing management and administrative costs in the Scottish NHS in the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48462]

Mr. Galbraith: The estimated savings from reducing management and administrative costs for 1998–99 are £8 million and in 1999–2000 will be £22 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when officials were first notified that the consignment of nuclear material from Georgia included (a) weapons-grade and (b) low-grade nuclear material; who provided the details of the low-grade nuclear material in the consignment; on which dates each minister in each department was informed by her officials that the Georgian consignment contained low-grade nuclear material; which public bodies were informed of the presence of the low-grade material; and on what dates. [46245]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 16 June 1998]: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reported in his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, column 314, officials were notified in July 1997 that the Georgian Government would agree to the removal of all the remaining nuclear material in Georgia. The particular focus at the time was on the unirradiated and irradiated highly enriched uranium. The technical information relating to the probable nature of the consignment was among detailed documents received from US officials in February 1998 in the course of a meeting on security and transport issues. These details were passed promptly to technical specialists at Dounreay so that they could make all necessary preparations for the receipt and safekeeping of the Georgian material.

Due to a breakdown of communications between technical specialists and DTI policy officials, Ministers were first informed that the consignment contained low-enriched uranium on 5 June and the information was notified to the House on 10 June 1998, Official Report, columns 594–95.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the report, the Social and Economic Effects of Dounreay's Projected Programme of Work, 1995–2005, prepared by the UK Atomic Energy Authority, in September 1995, prior to the decision on Dounreay announced on 5 June 1998, Official Report, columns 385–86. [45773]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 17 June 1998]: Nothing is more important than safety in the operation of nuclear licensed sites. Within this overriding requirement, the decision to accept no new commercial reprocessing at Dounreay was taken on economic grounds after receiving advice from UKAEA. Before making its recommendations to my Department, UKAEA has taken into account all relevant information they have produced, including any the report referred to may contain. UKAEA have also assured me that there will be no sudden major job losses resulting from the Government announcement on 5 June. As the reprocessing plants at Dounreay complete their work, most of the staff attached to them will be required for their decommissioning, which will continue for many years. Taken together with other important investments at Dounreay, including the remediation of the waste shaft there, it is unlikely that employment at Dounreay will decline significantly over the next few decades.

Dr. Fox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how far into the decommissioning timetable the United Kingdom will be able to fulfil its treaty obligations in relation to the reprocessing of nuclear material at Dounreay. [47718]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 June 1998]: Article 37 of the Euratom Treaty requires Member States to provide to the European Commission certain data relating to any plan for the disposal of radioactive waste. The Commission then has six months in which to deliver its opinion on the plan. In relation to the decommissioning of the Dounreay reprocessing plants, we shall take the necessary steps to comply with our Treaty obligation when the UKAEA have a firm and detailed plan for the disposal of the radioactive waste arising from the decommissioning.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the existing commercial reprocessing contracts which remain to be carried out at Dounreay. [47758]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The fuel cycle area at Dounreay has signed commercial contracts outstanding for fuel fabrication, fissile material recovery, and reprocessing. I have written to the Chairman of the UKAEA requesting him to prepare the information that can be made public and to seek the agreement of their commercial customers. His reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the Prime Minister's reply of 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 598, if, during the meeting in Washington on 24 February, her Department's officials and their security advisers were informed of the US Government's wish to transport to Dounreay the additional quantity of 9kg of low-enriched uranium; and if she will make a statement. [48929]

Mr. Battle: At the meeting in Washington on 24 February, technical information on the probable nature of the consignment was among the documents received from US officials. The exact amount and type of material in the Georgian consignment could be confirmed only once it had all been unloaded and checked at Dounreay. The precise quantities were given in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 10 June 1998, Official Report, column 598.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the (a) country and (b) establishment of origin of the nine kilograms of low-enriched uranium included in the shipment of nuclear material from Georgia to Dounreay; if it was contained in the same flight as the highly enriched uranium and spent fuel rods from Tbilisi; from which airfield it left the former USSR for its destination at Kinloss; at what exact time and date it arrived at Kinloss; and if she will make a statement. [48928]

Mr. Battle: The low-enriched uranium included in the consignment of nuclear material from Georgia to Dounreay came from the same research institute at Tbilisi in Georgia as the high-enriched uranium. All the nuclear material arrived in one American transport aircraft which departed from the airport at Tbilisi in Georgia on 23 April, flew directly to the UK, and landed at Kinloss at 0206 GMT on 24 April.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many flights were required to transport the recent consignment of nuclear material from Georgia to Kinloss; how many cargo aeroplanes flew from Georgia to Kinloss during April; what were the contents of each of these aeroplanes; at what exact times and dates the aeroplanes landed at Kinloss; and if she will make a statement. [48927]

Mr. Battle: One American military transport aircraft, a Galaxy C5, was used to fly all the nuclear material in the Georgian consignment to Kinloss. It arrived at Kinloss at 0206 GMT on 24 April. A second American Galaxy C5, containing specialised handling equipment to assist with unloading the containers at the Dounreay site, arrived at Kinloss at 1547 GMT on 25 April.

Export Control Orders

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if exports of equipment relating to satellite or satellite-related technology and communications or civil space technology and communications are covered by the export control orders. [46482]

Mrs. Roche: The export of a range of goods and technology related to satellites and space-launch vehicles is controlled under many of the entries in Categories 7 and 9 of Annexe 1 to European Union Council Decision 94/942/CFSP. The export of communications-related goods and technology is controlled under entries in Category 5 of Annexe 1. Other entries in the export control legislation may also be relevant, for instance in export of military satellites may be controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended (the so-called 'Military List').

Other exports may be controlled under the End-Use Control in Article 4 of EC Council regulation 3381/94 on the export of dual-use goods.

Copies of the relevant legislation are available in the Library of the House.

Post Office

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sums the Post Office has indicated to her it wishes to invest in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [47519]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The Post Office has indicated provisionally that it wishes to undertake capital investment of between £450 million and £550 million in each of the three years.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department plans to review the number of post offices able to issue (a) vehicle excise licences, (b) passports and (c) game licences. [49103]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Decisions on the number of post offices able to issue motor vehicle licences and passport application forms are the responsibility respectively of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and the United Kingdom Passport Agency. I understand from the Post Office that game licences issued on behalf of the Home Office and the Scottish Office are available at those post offices at which there is a demand for them.

Power Generation (South-east England)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, column 321, (1) if he will publish the National Grid Company's advice to him detailing the benefits of black start capacity in relation to the security of supply for London and the South East; [48190]

(2) on power generation, if she will place in the Library a copy of the National Grid Company letter to her on the benefits of black start capacity in relation to the security of supply for London and the South-East. [48673]

Mr. Battle: It would plainly be impractical for the Secretary of State to publish every piece of advice or representation she receives, leaving aside for the moment the question of whether the correspondent wishes the document to be made public. In this case, I understand the National Grid Company is only too happy to provide a copy direct to the hon. Member.

Wind Farms

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made as part of the energy review of the potential for offshore windpower generation. [47783]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 June 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 2 July 1998, Official Report, column 237.

Power Generation

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the environmental criteria applied to the recent energy review. [47775]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 June 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to Chapter 4 (paragraphs 15–19) and Chapter 5 (paragraphs 19–23) of the consultation document on the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation, published on 25 June 1998.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she intends to adopt to promote increased competition in the electricity generation market. [48313]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 July 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to Chapter 4 of the consultation document on the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation, published on 25 June 1998.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the public registers which her Department has responsibility for. [47346]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The following are the public registers for which my Department is responsible, including its Executive Agencies and other bodies:

Register of Companies (Companies House)

Register of Designs, Patents, Trade Marks, Patent Agents, and Trade Mark Agents (Patent Office)

Register of applications, appeals, and decisions (Office of Employment Tribunals)

Register of Agreements (Registrar of Restrictive Trading Agreements)

Register of Coal Licences (Coal Authority)

Registers kept by the Director General OFTEL

The Consumer Credit Public Register (Director General of Fair Trading)

The Estate Agents Public Register (Director General of Fair Trading).

Defence and Aerospace Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps her Department has taken to ensure that UK companies compete on equal terms for contracts in European national defence and aerospace markets; [48192]

(2) what steps her Department has taken to assist UK firms in the restructuring of the UK and European defence and aerospace industry; [48194]

(3) if she will ensure that all Government contracts affecting UK defence and aerospace companies are awarded within Europe solely on criteria of price, performance, quality and time scale. [48193]

Mr. Battle: Following the trilateral statement by the Heads of Government of the UK, Germany, and France on 9 December, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I, and my officials, have held many discussions with the aerospace and defence industry, and with Ministers from other countries in support of the European industry's efforts to restructure.

I shall be meeting my industry Minister counterparts from five other European countries again in Paris on 9 July.

I also liaise closely on these issues with the other departments which are involved in restructuring.

We see the restructuring of the industry as vital to ensure that UK companies remain globally competitive, and we will seek to assist wherever possible. In carrying forward this work on restructuring, we shall certainly seek to promote fairness and transparency in procurement practices.

Specific issues relating to Government procurement contracts for aerospace and defence equipment services are largely a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Export Control Organisation

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the staff by grade in the Export Control Organisation on (a) 3 May 1997, (b) 1 January 1998 and (c) 3 May 1998. [48229]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: On 1 August 1997 my Department changed its staff grading structure, for ease of comparison the list of staff by grade at 3 May 1997 shows the old and new structure.

| 3 May 1997 | 3 May 1997 | 1 January 1998 | 3 May 1998 |

Public Sector Contracts

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information her Department makes available to private companies regarding public sector contract opportunities; how this information is accessed by private companies; and if she will make a statement. [47855]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Information on public sector contract opportunities is available on the internet on the 'Key Contacts' website, through the 'Government Opportunities' bulletin (published monthly) and 'Tendering for Government Contracts'. Certain contracts for goods and services above an EC £104,435 threshold are also advertised in the European Journal (OEJC).

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 499, for what reasons information relating to (a) reactor discharges and dispatches by site and (b) exports and imports of plutonium is no longer to be published; and where the details of amounts of plutonium held in the United Kingdom on behalf of foreign customers will now be published. [48919]

Mr. Battle: The publication of the figures which I announced on 2 June 1998, Official Report, column 162, are in the format agreed by the informal group of nine countries, as part of the international guidelines on the management of national holdings of civil plutonium. This is in a format which facilitates international comparisons on a consistent basis. Details of the amount of plutonium held in the United Kingdom belonging to foreign organisations are included amongst the figures published on 2 June 1998, Official Report, column 162.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department made of the impact on competition in the electricity generation market of proposed restrictions on the construction of gas-fired power stations. [48312]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 July 1998]: The proposed stricter consents policy would prevent existing distortions from prejudicing diversity and security of supply while the programme of competitive reforms is undertaken. To have continued to give the current distortions free rein would have damaged fair competition.

Arms Trade

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals her Department has relating to the licensing of arms brokers' activities in the United Kingdom. [48860]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the White Paper on "Strategic Export Controls" (Cm 3989), the publication of which was announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 1 July 1998, Official Report, columns 211–13. Section 3.3 of the White Paper contains specific proposals to control the involvement of persons in the UK, or UK persons abroad in certain trafficking and brokering activities.

Small Businesses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to encourage long-term planning within small and medium size enterprises. [48527]

Mrs. Roche: The network of Business Links now covers the whole country, providing local access to information and advice for all firms regardless of size. Personal business advisers in Business Links aim to build and maintain long-term relationships with small firms with growth potential, and help them develop and implement long-term plans.

New Businesses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many new businesses were formed in (a) Coventry, (b) the West Midlands and (c) the United Kingdom by people aged 18 to 24 years in the five years up to 1997; and how many of those failed in their first 12 months. [48526]

Mrs. Roche: The table shows the number of businesses registering for VAT each year 1992 to 1996, and the per cent. still trading 12 months later each year 1992 to 1995, the latest estimates available.

Many of the smallest new businesses do not register for VAT. The percentage still trading 12 months later is not available for Coventry and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The age of business owners is not recorded on the VAT Register.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Derbyshire Magistrates Courts

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place a copy in the Library of the business case of the Derbyshire Magistrates Courts Committee for reorganising the county's magistrates courts. [48130]

Mr. Hoon: The Outline Business Case, which has been prepared as a basis for inviting bids, contains information which is commercially confidential and is not being made public at this stage. Disclosure of specific details to bidders may affect the pricing of bids and the value for money which may be obtained. A full business case will be prepared, once negotiations with a preferred bidder have been concluded, as the basis for entering into a contract.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assumptions have been made on the disposal value of Swadlincote Magistrates Court and on the period it may be vacant and unsold. [48080]

Mr. Hoon: A value based on alternative use has been included in the Outline Business Case for the PFI project for Derbyshire magistrates courts. Financial details have not been published as this information is commercially confidential and disclosure may affect the pricing of the bids received and the value for money which may be obtained. Bidders are to be invited to make proposals for disposal of surplus courts where this improves value for money, in which case the risks of disposal would be transferred.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many licence applications and of what type were dealt with in Swadlincote Magistrates Court in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [48128]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect or hold information on the number and type of licence applications heard at magistrates courthouse level. The Justices' Chief Executive for the Derbyshire Magistrates Courts Committee has informed me that the number of licence applications for the Derby and South Derbyshire petty sessional division area, which includes the Swadlincote Court, were 2,319 in 1995–96 and 2,365 in 1996–97. These figures cannot be broken down by type.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the estimated cost of the investigation and preparation of the Private Finance Initiative for projects connected with Derbyshire magistrates courts. [48076]

Mr. Hoon: The estimated cost of advisers in the investigation and preparation of the Private Finance Initiative project involving Derbyshire magistrates courts is £490,000.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the estimated additional revenue cost of providing and resourcing 11 as against nine courts in Derby in the proposed reorganisation of the county's magistrates courts. [48078]

Mr. Hoon: The outline business case, which has been prepared by the Derbyshire Magistrates Courts Committee as a basis for inviting bids, includes costed options for providing either eleven or nine courtrooms in Derby. This information is commercially confidential and is not being made public at this stage. Disclosure of this detail to bidders may affect the pricing of bids and the value for money which may be obtained.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the operating cost of Swadlincote Magistrates Court in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [48079]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect or hold financial information at magistrates courthouse level. The Justices' Chief Executive for the Derbyshire Magistrates Courts Committee has informed me that it is not possible to identify separately the operating costs of the Swadlincote courthouse from the overall cost of the Derby and South Derbyshire petty sessional division of which it is a part.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements would be made to accommodate the local Probation Service and to provide its services in South Derbyshire, and at what cost should the proposed closure of Swadlincote Magistrates Court proceed. [48129]

Mr. Hoon: The Home Office has responsibility for the Probation Service. Each individual Probation Committee is responsible for providing suitable accommodation to perform its functions and for decisions on their location.

Derbyshire Magistrates Courts Committee has a statutory responsibility to provide an efficient and effective service for court users. It is for that Committee to decide the number and location of the courthouses it needs. On 18 May 1998, Derbyshire Magistrates Courts Committee determined that its future needs should be met with courthouses centred at four locations. To effect this, the Committee intends to retain one courthouse but provide three new premises as replacements for eleven of the existing magistrates courts, through the Private Finance Initiative scheme. Final timings for both the closures and the opening of new courts will be determined once the Private Finance Initiative project plan has been agreed. Current expectations are for the year 2000.

Derbyshire County Council has exercised its right of appeal to the Lord Chancellor in accordance with section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. The closure of Swadlincote Magistrates Court is one aspect of the County Council's appeal, which is being heard now by consent of the two parties to aid the overall project.

It is, therefore, inappropriate for me to comment at this stage on the closure of Swadlincote Magistrates Court.

Courts (Access)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish his strategy for the distribution of and provision of access to magistrates, crown, county and high court centres; and if he will make a statement. [49129]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates courts are locally managed by magistrates courts committees under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. Decisions concerning the future and number of magistrates courts in their area are for the relevant MCC to determine. A local authority that contributes financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. The procedure for such appeals is set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. In the absence of an appeal, however, the Lord Chancellor plays no part in the process.

The Court Service Agency is responsible for all civil and the higher criminal courts. It keeps court accommodation under constant review. In relation to the civil courts the Lord Chancellor is considering how and when the current changes in the working methods and procedures might create opportunities for better use of resources whilst maintaining similar or improved levels of facilities and services. No major changes to the current number or distribution of criminal centres are planned.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what criteria in respect of the public's travelling time, distance and cost he takes into account when considering the closure of any court. [49126]

Mr. Hoon: There are no specific cost or time thresholds which need to be breached before a closure proposal would be refused. Whilst distance and cost are important considerations, public facilities at the courts, waiting times, workload levels, and the overall standard of service which can be made available over the area as a whole also need to be taken into account.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [2] Courts where Circuit Administrators have undertaken to continue local District Judge sittings in suitable accommodation subject to demand

Note:

Two county court closures have been announced recently: Rochdale County Court and Holywell County Court will close on 7 September 1998

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the Middleton report's recommendation on county courts closures alongside the Woolf report's recommendation that the report's civil justice reforms should be introduced by April 1999. [49128]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor does not consider the Middleton Report's recommendations for widespread county court closures, without providing services in other ways, as the right way forward and has no plans to implement them.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many county courts there are currently in England and Wales; which have facilities for hearings in open court; which have family, bankruptcy and district registry jurisdictions; and if he will list those which his Department or the Court Service are currently considering for or consulting on closure (a) in the current financial year and (b) in each of the next four years. [49120]

Mr. Hoon: There are currently 233 county courts in England and Wales. With the closure of Rochdale County Court and Holywell County Court in September 1998 the number will be 231. All the county courts have facilities for hearings in open court. 177 county courts have family jurisdiction. In September, with the closure of Rochdale County Court, there will be 176. 112 county courts have bankruptcy jurisdiction. With the closure of Rochdale County Court there will be 111. 135 county courts have a district registry. When Rochdale County Court closes there will be 134.

In the last financial year the Lord Chancellor gave permission to go to public consultation on the following county courts: Hemel Hempstead, Holywell, Rochdale, Camborne & Redruth, Poole, Shrewsbury, West Bromwich and Evesham.

The only other permission given by the Lord Chancellor to go to public consultation relates to the current financial year and is in respect of Corby and Loughborough County Courts.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the reduction in (a) revenue and (b) capital budgets of the Court Service as a consequence of the closures of county courts in each of the last four years for which figures are available. [49122]

Mr. Hoon: There has been no reduction in either revenue or capital budgets as a direct result of court closures.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many Court Service or Lord Chancellor's Department jobs were abolished as a result of county court closures in the last four years. [49124]

Mr. Hoon: The business case in support of a proposal for closure of a county court must give information on the numbers and grades of staff together with details of their redeployment. Any reduction in staff numbers is a result of a fali in civil business generally and not of court closures.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the Middleton report's recommendation that on financial grounds large numbers of county courts should be closed; and if he will make a statement in that regard about his policy of increasing access to justice. [49127]

Mr. Hoon: The civil justice reforms on which Sir Peter Middleton reported form only part of major current changes in the working methods and procedures of the civil courts. The Lord Chancellor is considering how, and when, those changes might create opportunities for better use of resources while maintaining similar or improved levels of facilities and services. This is a better way forward than the wholesale closures recommended in the Middleton report. Court accommodation is kept under continuous review and proposals for the closure of courts are considered on an individual basis.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the financial implications of county court closures for (a) the Legal Aid Board and (b) non-legally aided litigants. [49123]

Mr. Hoon: There are no specific financial thresholds that need to be breached before a closure proposal would be refused. Whilst financial implications are important considerations, the costs and practical implications of running a court, the public facilities, waiting times, workload levels and the overall standard of service that can be made available over the area as a whole also need to be taken into account.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in the last four years for which figures are available his Department or the Court Service has consulted the public about a proposed county court closure in England and Wales and, as a consequence, not closed the court, identifying in each case the court in question. [49125]

Mr. Hoon: In the last four years two county courts have remained open following public consultation. Closure of Gravesend County Court was not taken forward after consultation in 1994. Kettering County Court, proposed for closure in 1993 was later relocated within Kettering in more satisfactory accommodation.

HEALTH

Hospital Trusts (North West)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each acute hospital trust in the North West Region in each of the last 13 financial years (a) the sums allocated by specialty, (b) the sums spent by specialty and (c) the numbers of patients treated by specialty. [47539]

Mr. Milburn: This information cannot be provided in its entirety because records are kept centrally for a five year period only. It is not possible to provide the sums allocated by specialty as the contracting system between health authorities and trusts is not done on an individual specialty basis. However, it is possible to provide the sums spent by the main specialty groups and the number of patients treated by specialty in the main specialty groups, for the five year period from 1992–93 to 1996–97. This is shown in the tables, copies of which are available in the Library.

Kingston Hospital

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Kingston Hospital will receive the capital funding necessary for the new permanent ward block. [47552]

Mr. Milburn: Approval to build a new permanent ward block will follow the normal route for such schemes. The first stage is the submission by the trust of a strategic outline case. This is expected to be submitted to the National Health Service Executive by the autumn of this year. If it is felt that the scheme is not likely to attract private sector interest it will then be considered for inclusion in a future annual regional capital programme. Alternatively the trust will seek a private sector partner to develop the scheme under the Private Finance Initiative. In this case, public capital will not be required.

Dental Services

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the introduction of new classes of dental auxiliaries; [48013]

(2) what plans the Government have to amend the Dentists Act 1984 to allow pilot trials to test the effectiveness of new classes of dental auxiliaries. [48014]

Mr. Milburn: We have let the General Dental Council know that we strongly support their proposals for trials of new classes of professionals complementary to dentistry to see if there are duties which could be delegated by registered dentists. We are looking for a legislative opportunity to make the amendments to the Dentists Act 1984 which are necessary to permit these trials.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will strengthen the powers of (a) nursing home inspectors, (b) the Secretary of State and (c) the courts to prevent the precipitate closure of nursing homes by the owner's liquidator or receiver; [48172]

(2) what powers are available to (a) him, (b) nursing home inspectors and (c) the courts to prevent the precipitate closure of nursing homes by the owner's liquidator or receiver; [48171]

(3) if he will intervene in the proposed closure of Abbey Nursing Home, Great Haywood, Stafford. [48173]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 30 June 1998]: There are no legal powers to prevent the closure of a nursing home by a liquidator or receiver appointed by a home owner. Independent care homes are private businesses and neither we, nor registration authorities nor the courts have any powers to intervene in a decision by the owner of that business to cease trading.

Care homes can close for a variety of reasons, including emergency closures by a registration authority to protect the health and welfare of residents.

Health and local authorities should have contingency plans, drawn up in consultation with service providers, for dealing with the sudden closure of homes to ensure residents are transferred to suitable accommodation. Health and local authorities have a direct responsibility for making alternative arrangements for anyone they place in a nursing home which subsequently closes.

While the closure of the Abbey Nursing Home in Great Haywood is regrettable, we understand that the health authority and social services staff have moved quickly to find alternative accommodation for all the nursing residents. We understand that 12 of the 13 residents have been found suitable accommodation, and one is in hospital.

We appreciate how traumatic it can be for people in residential care and nursing homes when they have to move out at short notice. We will consider whether arrangements can be strengthened to minimise the anxiety to residents when a home closes, as part of our commitment to reforming the current regulatory arrangements for social services and nursing homes.

Health Care Assistants

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Government have made of the benefits of including health care assistants in the frameworks governing (a) the registration and (b) the career development of nurses. [48436]

Mr. Boateng: The current independent review of the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979 is expected to raise a number of issues in relation to health care assistants. We will carefully consider all the recommendations upon receipt of the report during the summer. Funding is available to enable National Health Service employers to support staff who wish to train as nurses.

Pharmacies

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the proportion of people who feel ill who make the local pharmacy their first point of contact with a professional health carer. [48238]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 July 1998]: We have made no such estimate. We understand that research has shown that from whom people seek help and advice depends on the nature of their symptoms and a range of other factors.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many closures of independent pharmacies there have been in the last five years. [48240]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 July 1998]: In the five years to 30 September 1997, 264 National Health Service community pharmacies in England closed. In the same period 284 opened. The Department does not hold separate information for independent pharmacies.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has evaluated into the (a) actual and (b) potential savings to the NHS of healthcare advice provision by community pharmacists; and if he will make a statement. [48242]

Mr. Milburn: We have made no such assessment. We propose to publish a policy document in the autumn setting out proposals for the future role of community pharmacy within the National Health Service.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the numbers of people without access to public transport who use community pharmacies. [48243]

Mr. Milburn: None.

Health Authorities (Legal Directions)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions in the last 30 years when the Secretary of State for Health has issued a legal direction to a health authority requiring it to withdraw a public consultation. [49118]

Mr. Dobson: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49227]

Ms Jowell: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available without incurring disproportionate costs.

Complementary and Alternative Medicine

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential benefits of the use of complementary and alternative medicine. [48530]

Ms Jowell: As part of its policy research programme, the Department has commissioned a two-part study from the Medical Care Research Unit at Sheffield University. The first part was published by Sheffield University in August 1995 and concerned the scale and scope of access to complementary medicine practitioners via general practice. Copies of the report are available in the Library.

A report on the second part of the study is expected later this year. This part involves ten detailed case studies of different complementary medicine schemes within primary care and aims to assess the benefits and problems of each, and to make practical recommendations about the way forward for the potential integration of complementary medicine in primary care. Particular attention is being paid to the range of National Health Service complementary medicine provision that is currently available free at the point of access.

The NHS research and development programme is currently funding the following research projects:

complementary therapies in the management of back pain;

acupuncture for the management of pain in primary care;

the effectiveness of different psychosocial interventions for patients and their families following cancer diagnoses and treatment;

evaluating the effectiveness of acupuncture in defined aspects of stroke recovery; multi-centre study of acupuncture for episodic tension headaches;

a double blind, randomised, parallel group, study evaluating the efficacy of a homoeopathic remedy in asthma;

the use of complementary therapies by women with breast cancer in South Thames region; art therapy as an adjunctive treatment in severe mental illness;

non-pharmacological approaches to the management of irritable bowel syndrome;

the efficacy of acupuncture versus local anaesthetic injection in the treatment of myofascial pain in the jaw muscles; assessing the effectiveness of hypnotherapy for pain relief in patients with chronic low back pain; the effect of abdominal massage on the bowel habit of adults with cerebral palsy;

tea tree oil as an aid to fighting infection;

reflexology in the treatment of irritable bowel syndrome in a primary care setting.

Health Care (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the NHS has introduced to improve the provision of healthcare services in Coventry since 1 May 1997. [48512]

Mr. Milburn: Healthcare services in Coventry have benefited from significant extra resources since May 1997, including £1 million towards the cost of winter pressures and a further £1.8 million to fund waiting list initiatives in Coventry, which will facilitate a reduction of 24 per cent. in the total inpatient waiting list by the end of March 1999.

The newly approved £174 million Walsgrave Private Finance Initiative scheme will lead to the reprovision of general hospital services and acute mental health services within Coventry which will allow for a sound foundation for the further development of excellent health services in Coventry well into the next millennium.

Smoking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he plans to take to reduce the number of women who smoke during pregnancy. [48511]

Ms Jowell: We currently fund the Health Education Authority to run an adult smoking education campaign costing £5.5 million. The campaign identifies five key target groups, and two of these groups are adults in the 16–24 age group and women, particularly pregnant women.

Our future plans to reduce smoking will be set out in our White Paper on Tobacco Control, later this year.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the estimated costs of the Government's plans to reduce NHS waiting lists in the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48461]

Mr. Milburn: We have provided an extra £417 million to tackle waiting lists in England in 1998–99. By next April we will deliver a record reduction to bring them below the 1.16 million level inherited from the previous administration. This will be the first step in delivering the pledge to bring them down by 100,000 from the inherited figure. Resources for 1999–2000 and beyond are being considered as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Health Service Administrative Costs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the estimated savings from reducing management and administrative costs in the NHS in the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48464]

Mr. Milburn: On 23 December 1997, I announced a programme of measures to reduce National Health Service management costs by £73 million in England in 1998–99, together with a £7 million reduction in Departmental running costs. Target reductions for 1999–2000 and beyond will be announced in due course.

The White Paper, "The New NHS", sets out a programme of action to release £1 billion from bureaucracy over five years. Reductions planned to date will ensure that by the end of this year £240 million, which would otherwise have been spent on bureaucracy, will have been released for patient care.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received on the sale of vitamin B6. [49191]

Ms Jowell: The Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have received over 12,000 representations from a variety of sources including consumers, organisations representing consumers, Members of Parliament, practitioners and retailers. Many of these are standard letters.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I met representatives of certain organisations representing consumers, manufacturers and retailers of dietary supplements, and representatives of complementary medicine interests, to discuss proposed controls.

Foreign Patients

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-United Kingdom citizens were treated by the NHS between 1 May 1997 and 1 May 1998; and what was the total cost to the NHS. [49145]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients who had had one or more children prior to in vitro fertilisation treatment received such treatment on the National Health Service in 1996–97. [48800]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per patient of in vitro fertilisation treatment on the National Health Service. [48803]

Ms Jowell: The average cost per patient of in vitro fertilisation treatment on the National Health Service is not collected. However, we have estimated, using information supplied by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and the national infertility awareness campaign, that the cost is £2,000-£3,000 per cycle.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his policy that primary care group areas should be coterminous with the geographical areas of social services responsibilities. [48954]

Mr. Milburn: No.

WALES

Housing Renovation (Flintshire)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the modernisation of housing estates, with particular reference to Flintshire. [47422]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We aim to tackle the worst problems on local authority housing estates by co-ordinating efforts to raise the quality of the housing stock, along with social and environmental improvements. In this context, it is for councils to determine their own spending priorities in the light of local needs within the resources available to them. For 1998–99 we were able to increase local authority housing capital provision to £214.2 million, an increase of 11 per cent. on inherited spending plans. Provision for future years is being considered in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

For 1998–99 Flintshire County Council received £1.331 million as the housing element of its Basic Credit Approval; an additional £1.881 million under the Capital Receipts Initiative for housing and housing related works; and an allowance within the housing subsidy calculation of £6.874 million for the management and maintenance of council housing. The Council also received £6.151 million for the renovation of private housing and disabled facilities grants. The Council did not submit a bid under the Estates Partnership Programme.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff are employed by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; where those staff are located; and how many civil servants are directly employed at his Department's offices in London. [48463]

Mr. Ron Davies: The number of full time equivalent staff (including casuals) employed by the Welsh Office and its Executive Agency CADW are as follows:

| | Location | Number |
|---|---|---|
| Welsh Office | Cardiff | 1,602.22 |
| | Out Stations | 504.48 |
| | London | 20.00 |
| CADW | Cardiff | 82.50 |
| | Monument Sites | 119.09 |

Access to the Countryside

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the principal extensive areas of open countryside in Wales to which public access is not at present available. [48863]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The extent of "open countryside" in Wales is estimated to be between 0.8 and 1 million ha. About 0.3 million ha of that is accessible through statutory provisions and voluntary agreements.

There is little information on how much of the remainder is or is not available for public access.

Roads (A487)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the starting date of works on the A487 trunk road between Llanllyfi and Groeslon; and if he will make a statement. [49014]

Mr. Hain: The A487 Llanwnda—Llanllyfni scheme is subject to the current review of the Welsh trunk road programme. A report on the review will be published later this year.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public registers for which his Department has responsibility. [47365]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 29 June 1998]: My Department has responsibility for the following public registers:

Register of independent schools in Wales

Register of approved voluntary children's homes

Register of medical centres in Wales responsible for the administration of yellow fever vaccine

List of Buildings of Special Architectural or Historic Interest

Schedule of Ancient Monuments
Register of Historic Parks and Gardens
Register of Historic Landscapes.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disability Discrimination

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what measures have been taken by each Government department to implement the provisions of the employment code of practice issued in connection with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; [38758]

(2) what measures have been taken by each Government Department to implement the provisions of the goods, facilities and services code of practice issued under Part B of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [38759]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 20 April 1998]: In July 1996 the Head of the Civil Service wrote to all Departmental Permanent Secretaries to alert them to the implications of the employment provisions in Part II of the Act and the employment Code of Practice for Government Departments as employers. As a result, Departments have taken a variety of steps reflecting their particular circumstances to ensure that they comply with the provisions. Departments will continue to keep the need for further action under review. All Departments are committed to equal opportunities and do not discriminate against staff or eligible applicants for posts on any grounds including disability.

An action pack entitled "Government as a service provider" was also sent to all Permanent Secretaries. The pack gives guidance to Government officials and those working in executive agencies and associated bodies to assist them in complying with the first rights of access to goods and services introduced under the Act. The guidance was for dissemination to key staff with responsibility for overseeing implementation of these new duties upon providers of services to the public. Departments will continue to keep the need for further action under review.

A selection of actions taken is as follows:

Cabinet Office

The Cabinet Office (Office of Public Service) in addition to its role as an employer promotes and monitors the overall effectiveness of the Civil Service's equal opportunities policy. To help departments and agencies with the implementation of the Disability Discrimination Act, the following actions were taken:

General

In 1995 the OPS set up an Inter-departmental Focus Group on the Act to help Departments and Agencies comply with the legislation. The Group looked at issues around monitoring of disabled staff, changes to the recruitment Orders in Council and the revision of the Programme for Action to Achieve Equality of Opportunity in the Civil Service for Disabled People, and the information handbook, Focus on Ability. It also met with officials from the DfEE to discuss the draft Code of Practice and the implications for the Employment Service's Positive About Disabled People symbol.

The (revised) Programme for Action

In 1996, the Programme for Action to Achieve Equality of Opportunity for Disabled People was updated and revised to take account of the changes in the law. To help departments and agencies meet these duties, the "checklists" in the revised Programme for Action were highlighted in bold to show they originated from the requirements of the Act. Copies of the revised Programme were issued to departments and agencies through the Equal Opportunities Officers/Disabled Persons' Officers (EOO/DPO) network in November 1996.

Focus on Ability: A Practical Guide to Good Practice in the Employment of Disabled People

A revised copy of the handbook, Focus on Ability: A practical Guide to Good Practice in the Employment of Disabled People, was issued to departments and agencies on the EOO/DPO network in March 1997. The revised handbook included advice on implementing the Act.

Progress Report

On 2 April 1998, Equal Opportunities in the Civil Service: A progress Report 1995–1997 was published. This report demonstrates good progress in promoting equality of opportunity in the Civil Service during the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1998, with at least 80 per cent. of departments and agencies reporting specific action to comply with the Act. Some of the more common actions include: issuing guidance notes to staff, organising seminars and workshops, buildings audits, staff surveys, drawing up action plans and updating existing personnel and training guidance notes.

The Civil Service Data Summary

With the introduction of the Act, the disability categories used to collect information for MANDATE were amended to reflect the Act's definition of a disabled person. (MANDATE is the OPS's database of information about Civil Service personnel. It covers most, but not all, Government departments and agencies and is updated quarterly. Because it has records on a person-by-person basis it is possible to examine combinations of features such as grade, age, gender and disability. The records are made anonymous by departments and agencies so that individuals cannot be identified in OPS.)

Cabinet Office (OPS) as an Employer

The Department has integrated the requirements of the employment Code of Practice within its personnel procedures. Disability is included within the ambit of the Department's equal opportunities statement which make it clear that everyone shall have equality of opportunity for employment and advancement on the basis of their ability, qualification and suitability for work. When necessary, reasonable adjustments are made to enable those with disabilities to compete freely and openly for work. This includes the provision of sign language interpreters and consulting the Employment Service's Placing Assessment and Counselling Teams when disabled staff join or become disabled whilst in post. The Department has commissioned a disability audit of its buildings and actions recommended by the report are being carried out. Disability awareness was included in the training of the Department's network of Harassment Contact Officers. The Department is participating on policies which improve the position of disabled people within the Civil Service such as Workable.

The Department has no significant involvement with the provision of goods and services to individual members of the public but selected publications are available in alternative formats; and if a request was received to give information in an alternative format, arrangements would be made for this to happen.

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

The provisions have been brought to the attention of all staff. Recruitment practice and all internal procedures for staff have been reviewed. Additional guidance has been issued to personnel staff. Material on equal opportunities for training courses has been updated. Managers of staff who have declared a disability which has an impact on their work have been provided with specific guidance, in addition to the annual guidance issued to all staff on all equal opportunities aspects of staff appraisal. Additional seminars on disability awareness and the employment considerations of disability have been held for personnel and other staff.

When recruiting, the Ministry welcomes applications from individuals with a disability, and is taking part in the "Workable in the Civil Service" programme. A disability audit of all its buildings is almost complete and many recommendations are already in place or underway.

The Ministry is keeping under review access to services and premises under the Citizens Charter initiative and in the light of responsibilities under the Act. It is ready to respond to requests for information in alternative formats and able to provide guidance and support on the use and completion of forms. The disability audit of the MAFF estate will address the needs of disabled customers as well as staff.

Department for Culture, Media and Sport

The Department is committed to equal opportunities and does not discriminate against staff or eligible applicants for posts on any grounds including disability. All possible steps are taken to ensure that staff are treated equally and fairly and that decisions on recruitment, selection, training, promotion and career management are based solely on objective and job related criteria. The Department recently launched a programme of equal opportunities awareness training for all staff, which includes a session on the Act. It has also provided application forms in alternative formats.

All the Department's buildings are accessible to people with disabilities and a full disability access audit was commissioned at the end of 1997. The report is due to be finalised shortly and the Department will then consider what action is necessary.

The Department is largely a policy department and sponsors a wide range of public bodies to deliver its objectives. These bodies are in the front-line of service delivery to the public and are each responsible for ensuring that they do not discriminate against disabled people.

Ministry of Defence

The provisions provided an underpinning to many of the Department's existing civilian practices in respect of the employment of disabled people. For example, the Ministry already had a programme to promote the employment of people with disabilities, and used the Positive About Disability symbol.

The Department has ensured that its statutory responsibilities towards disabled people, as defined in the Act and its supporting Code of Practice, were communicated to all staff, both civilian and those Service personnel with responsibilities for managing civilian staff. Means used included: publication of a Defence Council Instruction; specific guidance in the MOD Personnel Manual and the proofing of existing Departmental personnel management procedures and practice; disability awareness issues in equal opportunities training programmes and seminars; and articles in in-house journals. Early this Summer, the launch of a new Departmental Programme of Action on Disability, which includes comprehensive guidance on how the needs of disabled applicants or staff should be met, will provide a further opportunity to disseminate best practice aimed at improving the Department's performance as an employer of disabled people.

The Department has communicated to staff those responsibilities relating to the implementation of the goods, facilities and services provisions contained in legislation and in the Code of Practice. Dealings with the public are limited and consequently to many of its personnel the Department's role as a service provider will not be immediately obvious. Nevertheless where there is contact with the public, for example, in the provision of printed information or at "Open Days", the Department has emphasised the need for staff to take into account the needs of disabled people.

Department for Education and Employment

The Department has undertaken a number of measures to implement the provisions. A confidential survey was made of all staff to ascertain the incidence and nature of any disability or impairment in DfEE. The survey also covered what help was already being received, if further or new help was required and if there were any need to receive communications in an alternative format. Presentations were held in all locations to promulgate both information about the Act and to impart best practice in the management of staff with disabilities. Copies of the employment Code of Practice were issued to all senior managers.

In November 1996 the Equal Opportunities Team issued a guide to help staff and line managers to understand and comply with the Act. It is now being revised in the light of the issues which have arisen since the provisions came into force. An Advisory Group for People with Disabilities was set up to act as a forum to discuss any issue relating to people with disabilities. The Group has a DfEE Board member as a sponsor who acts as a direct link between the Group and the DfEE Board. The Positive about Disability symbol was adopted in April 1996. Its use has been reviewed to ensure that the system is working successfully.

All the Department's Directorates develop and implement action plans to mainstream equal opportunities in all policies and services. The Department has undertaken surveys of all its headquarters sites in anticipation of the Act's provisions, it also considers carefully the impact of any works or alterations on its facilities and provision of services with regard to the Act. The Department has assessed its provision of information to include various media and has made its public inquiry point as accessible to people with disabilities as is practicable.

Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Within the central core of the Department, a special working group was established to develop existing employment policy and ensure compliance with the provisions. Initially the group spearheaded an awareness programme which included the issue of a specific guide on the Act for all staff, training modules for practitioners, senior managers, and harassment contact officers; circulation of the DfEE videos, good practice information and questionnaires. The group was recently re-established with a new remit to update departmental guidance material and to consider wider issues such as disability in relation to Investors in People.

As part of the Department's strategy on developing disability policy it has adopted the Positive About Disability Symbol; it operates a staff network for disabled staff; and it maintains a special budget for aids and equipment to assist disabled staff.

The Department produced a legal and policy framework for the goods, facilities and services provisions which provided full details of the requirements of this part of the Act and how to comply. All Property Managers within the Department have received copies of the document and were asked to ensure they comply fully. They have been encouraged to undertake Access Audits of their properties and to plan actions appropriately.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

All staff were informed by telegram of the introduction of the Act and its implications. A disabled persons officer co-ordinates reasonable adjustments for disabled staff. A budget is also available for the purchase of aids and equipment. A disability access audit of the FCO main building is being conducted.

The FCO operates a guaranteed interview scheme for people with disabilities who meet the initial sift criteria. There is a requirement for Diplomatic Service recruits to be able to serve at any post overseas; this is not required of people with disabilities.

A disability access audit has been carried out on the plans for the Public Information Centre currently under construction.

Department of Health

The Department cascaded details of the employment provisions of the Act to line managers in December 1996. In addition personnel officers received general disability awareness training and specific training on the Act. In terms of recruitment the Department's Job Specific Selection (JSS) process, introduced in August 1996, was based on fair and open competition in line with the Civil Service Commissioners Code. Recruitment panel members received training on JSS which covered equal opportunities and specifically disability issues. In addition, the Department is a Positive about Disability symbol user. The Department has taken steps to monitor retention of staff with disabilities, and its main personnel functions are also monitored regularly for their equal opportunities performance.

A network of harassment advisers was set up to give advice to staff, including for harassment or discrimination on grounds of disability. The Department also has a Disability Working Group, a staff reference group focusing on disability issues including the Act. The Department has made various adjustments to enable existing staff to be retained, for example supplying special computer equipment and secretarial support. For job applicants with disabilities application forms are made available in Braille, large print, and audio tape on request. At the interview stage, special arrangements can be made, for example using an induction loop for candidates with a hearing impairment.

The Department makes publications available in Braille, audio tape and large print. They are generally distributed through agencies who have regular contact with those people who have special needs, including the sensorily impaired.

Home Office

Staff have been informed by notices and other publications of the provisions and implications of the Act including specific guidance on the duty of reasonable adj tment. Focus groups and workshops are used for two-way feedback. Disability awareness seminars have been held across the UK and awareness raising continues according to need, such as in relation to hearing impairments. Presentations by the Centre for Accessible Environments have been held for key staff on the physical features that need to be taken into account to make buildings accessible to staff with a range of disabilities.

"Enabling Technology at Work" seminars led by the Computability Centre have taken place and equal opportunities contact points provide advice to staff on all aspects of the Act, including DfEE and DSS booklets. The Home Office is a Positive about Disability symbol user. The Home Office has monitored effective implementation through a telephone survey: staff surveys will be carried out later this year to update existing data on the extent and nature of disability.

Reasonable adjustments are made on request and signers are provided for meetings and interviews. Most conference rooms have permanent or portable induction loops. Internal communications have been available in large print and in Braille and audio cassette on request. Health and safety officers are aware of the need to take disabled staff into account when considering health and safety issues. Staff with mobility problems have personal evacuation plans in the event of emergencies. All major office buildings occupied by the Home Office have wheelchair accessible toilets. Where possible, access has been taken into account in refurbishment, and this also applies in the acquisition of new buildings. Evaluation criteria of tender bids take into account the requirements of the Act.

Staff across the Department dealing with the public have received training on the service provisions. Publications are produced in alternative formats whenever practicable. Areas of the Home Office dealing directly with the public have minicom systems and members of staff trained in signed language skills.

The Home Office Constitutional Unit, with disability organisations, is exploring ways of making the electoral process more accessible for disabled electors. A Working Party on Electoral Procedures has considered a number of proposals about improving procedures which affect disabled voters and has authorised work to take these forward.

Department for International Development

The Department's equal opportunities policy has been amended to reflect the provisions and staff have received training in its implications. A guide to the law on discrimination has been drawn up and made available to members of recruitment and promotion boards. Other measures include an access audit carried out for the Department by the Centre for Accessible Environments. Adjustments to premises include the installation of induction loops in conference rooms, visual fire alarm warnings, adaptation of toilet facilities and emergency evacuation chairs for people with mobility impairments. Adjustments are also made in response to a number of individual needs. Testing and assessment materials have been modified for use by candidates with visual and hearing impairments.

The Department has no significant involvement in the provision of goods, facilities and services to individual members of the public but these measures have also contributed to meeting its responsibilities towards disabled customers.

Law Officers' Departments

These Departments endeavour to meet the provisions by ensuring that all recruitment, induction, general development and promotion opportunities are free from discrimination. Consideration is given, where necessary, to adjustments to working environments to ensure the workplace permits disabled staff to perform their duties to the best of their ability.

The Crown Prosecution Service has implemented a programme of modifications to the premises it occupies and new occupations and refurbishments take into account the requirements of the Act and reflect the needs of disabled users.

Lord Chancellor's Office

Detailed guidance has been supplied to all staff and a copy of the employment Code of Practice supplied to all senior managers. Further practical guidance on specific aspects of the Act, internal magazine articles and specialist videos have been widely circulated and guidance notes produced for welfare officers. Internal training courses and procedures for recruitment, induction, selection and appraisal, and a confidential questionnaire to staff have been reviewed and revised. An accommodation user group has been established which includes staff with disabilities.

The Department has commissioned a set of studies throughout the Estate to ensure best practice for the future. These reports were received in February 1998 and are currently being analysed before a schedule of works is produced. Guidelines dealing with the provision of courtroom interpreters for deaf litigants and witnesses have been prepared.

Northern Ireland Office

The Equal Opportunities Unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel has issued a revised Code of Practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the Northern Ireland Civil Service. The main aim of the Code is to provide a framework to help Departments in Northern Ireland to achieve equality of opportunity for people with disabilities and to make full use of the skills and abilities that people with disabilities possess, through career development, training, opportunities for flexible working and the provision, where necessary, of adaptations to premises, equipment or support.

A copy of the Code of Practice on access to goods, facilities, services and premises was issued to staff in Northern Ireland Departments with specific responsibility for the Act when the Code was published in Northern Ireland in December 1996. The then Permanent Secretary of the Department of Health and Social Services wrote to all Northern Ireland Permanent Secretaries about the new Act's duties enclosing a copy of the Code of Practice. In August 1996 all Northern Ireland Principal Establishment and Finance Officers and Principal Establishment Officers were alerted to the implications of the Act for Northern Ireland Departments as both employers and service providers.

Scottish Office

The Scottish Office set up a steering group to consider the implications of the provisions for all aspects of employment practices, including recruitment, career development, and promotion and dismissal. The Department has undertaken a survey of all staff, giving them the opportunity to self-declare any disability which meets the definition given by the Act. In promotion and recruitment the Department has extended to candidates who self-declare a disability the same support which was previously offered to registered disabled candidates in line with DDA requirements. Training on the Act and disability awareness, which was open to all staff, has been held. Staff with disabilities can also seek specialist support and equipment from a centrally held budget.

The Department has also carried out an access audit on all buildings in the Scottish Office estate. A programme of work has been drawn up to address the areas identified in this exercise. Works being carried out include fixed and portable induction loops for people hard of hearing; fixed and portable wheelchair ramps; automatic doors to some major buildings; tactile floor surfaces on stairways; providing disabled toilet facilities; providing dedicated car parking spaces. All of these will benefit disabled customers as well as disabled staff. Work was started in 1996 and will continue on a rolling programme basis over the coming years.

Department of Social Security

The Department has examined its personnel policies and practices to make sure that they are not potentially discriminating and amending them as necessary to take account of the new legislation. It runs legal awareness seminars on the employment provisions of the Act for personnel staff across the Department as well as disability awareness sessions for staff covering the implications of the new legislation. Some business units are also undertaking staff disability surveys using the Disability Discrimination Act definition of disability.

The Department has made all estates staff aware of the content and implications of the Act and of their role in establishing accommodation that is both accessible and suitable for disabled people. An increasing number of buildings occupied by the Department now fully meet the requirements of the new legislation. Now that the ownership and management of most of its buildings have transferred to the private sector, contracts are in place which will ensure that our private sector partners comply with the legislation.

Department of Trade and Industry

The Department has issued a notice to all staff setting out the main provisions of the Act and how it may impact on the Department's practices and procedures, providing examples of reasonable adjustments. Guidance material on staff appraisal and internal transfers includes examples of best practice in dealing with applications for promotions and transfers from staff with disabilities. Training liaison officers consider any special requirements which staff attending training events may require. The Department maintains an electronic noticeboard which covers disability issues.

The Department has also established a Disability Group to co-ordinate issues affecting disabled staff and has established focus groups to discuss specific issues. Staff with disabilities are represented on Building User Groups. Central budgets are available to provide adaptations to equipment and information technology.

The Department's Inquiry Unit has a textphone and guidance has been issued to all managers about what they can do to ensure that publications are more accessible to a disabled audience. It has arranged for access surveys to be carried out by RADAR on all DTI headquarters buildings and is currently following up the recommendations as appropriate. The Department has also established a Disability Group to co-ordinate issues affecting disabled people including building access, access to information services and services open to the public.

HM Treasury

HM Treasury keeps under constant review all recruitment, accommodation and employment arrangements and is doing so in light of the Act. Action taken so far includes raising awareness with the issue of information to all staff about the employment provisions of the Act, reminding staff of the services of the disabled persons officer and the support which is available and announcing the launch of the Bursary Scheme for Civil Servants with disabilities and inviting all eligible staff to apply. A full disability audit was conducted to identify which employees are, or may be, disabled persons under the terms of the Act and a re-survey will be undertaken soon to try to improve response rates.

The Department is also considering a full audit of the physical features of the buildings used by the department to identify any features which may place disabled staff or visitors at a disadvantage. Meanwhile, it has installed evac-chairs in both buildings and in its main building increased the number of disabled car parking spaces available. Evacuation procedures relating to disabled persons have been revised. Standing instructions on recruitment have been revised to provide for the needs of disabled candidates. Application forms, with specific reference to identifying the needs of disabled candidates, and monitoring procedures covering recruitment, appraisal, postings, and promotion have been revised to reflect the new definitions of disability under the Act.

HM Treasury has notified all staff of their obligations under the Act in the provision of services to the public and their needs will be addressed in the access audits undertaken.

Inland Revenue

A major task has been systematically to review personnel policies and practices to ensure that the Act's provisions are met. Additionally, a project team of key personnel was established; the Positive about Disability symbol introduced; disabled persons' officers established to provide support and guidance to disabled people, their managers and colleagues. A disability survey was carried out in 1995 and personnel procedures and practices are monitored to ensure they do not impact adversely on disabled people.

Model competence-based schemes have been introduced for recruitment at junior levels. A disability strategy and related programme of action being developed should ensure that disability issues are dealt with in a pro-active manner and employer responsibilities are fulfilled. Regular articles in departmental publications inform employees of developments and build awareness of their responsibilities. A guide for all employees helps them understand the implications of the legislation and their individual responsibilities.

The Inland Revenue has been taking steps to meet its current obligations under Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and to prepare for its future obligations to make adjustments. Qualitative research into the needs of disabled customers has been completed which has been used to inform policy and the Department is working towards a written policy statement on services to disabled customers. All new buildings will provide a range of facilities for disabled people. Existing buildings are being audited for disability access, and such items as induction loops provided to help people with hearing problems as part of any modernisation or refurbishment programme. If a disabled taxpayer is unable to visit his/her local Tax Inquiry Centre, or if the building is not accessible, an appointment can be made to see the taxpayer at an outreach clinic, or if necessary, the taxpayer can be visited at home.

The Inland Revenue introduced a Departmental Braille service in 1996 to provide letters for blind customers. It has also produced guidance to staff on how to use large print and audio cassette formats in letters to blind and partially sighted taxpayers. The Department has produced four leaflets in Braille, large print and audio tape and is currently reviewing the possibility of greatly extending this. The Department has also issued guidance to staff on how to help disabled taxpayers fill in their tax forms.

Within Revenue offices, private interview rooms or a quiet room elsewhere in the building can be provided for those with hearing difficulties. Whilst it is not yet a requirement of the Disability Discrimination Act, the Department is working towards providing signers for those taxpayers who wish to use British Sign Language.

HM Customs & Excise

All staff were informed of the DDA provisions and the Department's equal opportunities policy. Personnel policies affecting recruitment, conditions of service and appointment, as well as equal opportunities trainer awareness and other courses have been amended to reflect the requirements of the Act. Legal seminars were given to equal opportunities officers and disabled persons officers on interpretation and practice of new provisions of the Act and briefings given to staff assistance officers and other personnel practitioners. The employment Code of Practice and Guidance on disability issues has been issued to personnel practitioners. The Department is a Positive about Disability symbol user.

Relevant provisions relating to services are incorporated into the Department's equal opportunities policy and also policy areas affecting estate management and publication of information for customers. Equal opportunities policy staff are trained in the provisions of the Act. A new Departmental policy on the provision of alternative formats of published information for customers with disabilities has been developed.

An access programme is undertaken of all offices and buildings wherever practicable and an access audit pack was developed with the Centre for Accessible Environments.

Welsh Office

The Welsh Office reviewed its personnel policies and procedures and amended them where necessary to reflect the requirements of the Act and the employment Code of Practice.

Those staff involved with the provision of goods, facilities and services have been informed of the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

Forestry Commission

The Forestry Commission has introduced a wide range of measures to implement the provisions, covering issues such as recruitment, training, equal opportunities, career development, promotion, grievances, accommodation and technical support.

The Forestry Commission ensures that all new recreational facilities it provides have access for the disabled, and many of its existing facilities such as holiday cabins and visitor centres already have such access. The Commission is also an active participant in the BT "Countryside for All" initiative and has just published a gazetteer which shows the location of all facilities where easy access is provided.

New Deal (Business Start-ups)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance will be offered under the New Deal to young unemployed people who wish to start up new businesses. [48529]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for young unemployed people provides extensive help and guidance for those who wish to enter self-employment. This includes an initial session to ensure that participants' ideas are viable and that they fully understand the work involved in setting up their own business; further advisory seminars and intensive guidance during the Gateway; financial support and advice throughout the Employment Option—Self Employment; and the provision of a supporter with experience in the field of self-employment. During the follow-through stage of the New Deal, people who did not originally opt to enter self-employment but who have, through their experience on other options, come to view self-employment as a possibility, will be given advice and training.

Undergraduates

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the numbers and percentage of undergraduates accepted in each of the last 10 years by (a) Oxford and Cambridge universities, (b) other universities and (c) those universities previously incorporated as polytechnics from (1) independent schools, (2) grammar schools, (3) church schools, (4) grant maintained schools, (5) local authority schools and (6) other institutions. [48465]

Dr. Howells: The available information is in the following table, covering UK applicants accepted onto full time first degree, HND and DipHE courses through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) for 1994 to 1997. Prior to 1994 there were two application systems, the Universities Central Council on Admissions (UCCA) and the Polytechnics Central Admissions System (PCAS), and the required information is not available. Such information as was published by UCCA and PCAS appears in their annual reports, available in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Women's Refuges

14. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what methods and what criteria are used in the allocation and distribution of funds for women's refuges. [47481]

Ms Ruddock: Refuges are supported through a complex patchwork of funding. Most comes from Local Authorities or through the Housing Corporation. Resources may also be available from Housing Association schemes. Refuges charge rents and many women residents claim Housing Benefit.

We recognise that refuge funding is complex, and needs to be made simpler and more effective. That is why we are supporting research into their needs.

Pensioners

22. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations the Government have received on inequalities in income amongst pensioners. [47492]

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of (a) present and (b) future inequalities of pensioner incomes; and what action she plans in this area. [47501]

Mr. Denham: We want today's and tomorrow's pensioners to enjoy security in retirement. Income inequality between the best and worst off pensioners has grown since 1979, and estimates show that this inequality is set to widen in the future.

Our first priority is to get extra help to the poorest pensioners. Preliminary findings from our pilot projects and research published recently show that the pilots have so far discovered pensioners who are missing out between 24 pence and £51 a week. They would also be missing out on their £50 winter fuel payment as well as cold weather payments.

It is a scandal that so many pensioners are living below the breadline. The research and pilots are an important step towards putting that right. The full results should be available early in the New Year.

Child Support

23. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment the Government have made of the need to reform the current system of child support. [47493]

28. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's proposals to reform child support. [47498]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer my hon. Friends to the statement made earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of non-resident parents with a child support assessment are not paying maintenance. [48827]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Of the 740,000 non-resident parents assessed by the Child Support Agency, more than half are not paying any maintenance.

Benefits (Scotland)

25. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to her oral answer of 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 698, concerning delivery of benefits in Scotland, to which new initiatives to ensure a better service for all customers in Scotland the answer referred. [47495]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department is currently engaged in a wide variety of initiatives such as our New Deal for Lone Parents and Poorer Pensioners pilots which are designed to provide better, more integrated and secure services for our customers. These initiatives are at the heart of the development of Active Modern Service and have been piloted in a variety of locations. The lessons and best practice learnt will benefit our customers throughout the United Kingdom.

Part-time Working Directive

26. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the effect of the part-time working directive on women. [47496]

Ms Ruddock: We are committed to part-time workers having at least the same rights as full-time workers. This is particularly important for women as 83 per cent. of part-time workers are women. Implementation of the Part-time Working Directive will remove discrimination against them and increase the status of part-time work generally. This is a positive step for all those who choose to work part-time in order to balance work and family life.

Flood Victims (Northampton)

27. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she is taking to improve benefit payments to flood victims in Northampton. [47497]

Mr. Denham: The Government fully recognise the distress and suffering caused to people in Northampton who were victims of the recent floods. While compensation would normally be through insurance policies we recognise that those without insurance may need help from the social security system. The discretionary social fund can help in such circumstances.

Most of the flood victims who applied to the social fund for help have received it. However, in view of representations received, officials will be reviewing social fund provision for victims of disasters.

Benefit Fraud

29. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets she has set for the reduction of the levels of benefit fraud over the next five years. [47499]

Mr. Field: The Government are committed to tough action to stop social security fraud. We are currently reviewing all existing counter fraud arrangements to ensure they meet the Government's strategic objective of working towards a permanent, structural reduction in benefit fraud. Our approach contains three elements; improved detection, more effective deterrence and better prevention. We have not set a numerical target for the reduction in the level of benefit fraud over the next five years.

Child Support Agency

30. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she next expects to meet the chief executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss the work of the Child Support Agency. [47500]

Mr. Keith Bradley: My noble Friend Baroness Hollis of Heigham the Minister with day to day responsibility for child support, has regular meetings with the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss operational issues.

32. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to change the distribution of offices of the Child Support Agency. [47504]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Child Support Agency has recently transferred the routine processing work, which does not involve face to face contact, from its local sites to the six large Child Support Agency Centres. This will mean that it can be handled more efficiently. This change has released resources to deal with rising workloads and it will allow the Agency to offer significantly more face to face contact with its clients in a greater range of locations, including, in the future, local Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the current estimated arrears which are owed to the Child Support Agency; [47343]

(2) how many requests have been received from a parent wishing to have a personal interview with a Child Support Agency official in England and Wales during the last 12 months. [47340]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 3 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about arrears which are owed to the Child Support Agency and interviews with officials of the Child Support Agency.

The amount of child support full maintenance assessment debt outstanding at the 31 May 1998, was £731,620,185.51. The Agency undertakes a Debt Analysis exercise at the end of each financial year. The Debt Analysis exercise for 1996–97 indicated that the percentage of full maintenance assessment debt regarded as probably uncollectable was 38%. Similar analysis is being carried out for 1997–98 and the results will be published in the Agency's 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts in July 1998, in a format which will satisfy the Committee of Public Accounts recommendation that the Agency " ... examine the scope for eliminating a significant amount of this debt, since it is unlikely ever to be collected ... ".

We now have a computerised Debt Management System which identifies cases promptly where payment comes overdue. The system allows staff to automatically track debts and to prioritise cases for early telephone contact with defaulting non-resident parents. The voice link system automatically dials the defaulters and presents answered calls to staff, giving details of the relevant cases on the computer screen which saves considerable staff time. Early dialogue is then established with the non-resident parent to seek to re-instate payments. This robust approach [illegible] non-compliant non-resident parents will lead to progressive improvements in collection and enforcement. Such contact with the non-resident parent also leads to early identification of changes of circumstances which can prevent inappropriate debt accruing.

As part of its ongoing commitment to provide a high quality service to its customers, the Agency offers face to face interviews to both non-resident parents and parents with care.

The facility for face to face interviews is widely publicised by means of:

The Child Support Agency Charter.

The Maintenance Application pack and Maintenance Enquiry pack include notes for parents telling them that they can contact an Agency local office if they want advice or further information.

Parents contacting the Child Support Agency national Enquiry Line are advised of the facility for face to face interviews, where appropriate.

During the 12 months up to 31 March 1998, the total number of interviews held by the Agency was 55,577; 51,368 of these were in England and Wales.

These figures are collated to measure performance against the Agency's Charter Standard to see callers within 10 minutes of arrival when an appointment has been made; this has been achieved for over 2 years in all cases.

I am quite convinced of the need for much increased face-to-face contact, not least because of its effectiveness in reducing the incidence of fraud, improving the explanations available to customers, and improving their compliance and co-operation.

We have recently changed our organisational structure, and we aim to offer significantly more face to face contact on a peripatetic basis, in a greater range of locations which we hope in future will also include for example, CAB premises.

As part of the wider strategy to improve face-to-face contact with DSS customers, the Government announced last year that CSA would be working more closely with their colleagues in the Benefits Agency which will provide customers with a one stop service. From 1 April 1998, Benefits Agency staff have been interviewing and assisting all new Income Support parents with care to complete their maintenance application form, where appropriate. The latest available figures show that between 1 April 1998 and 17 April 1998 the Benefits Agency have interviewed approximately 8,000 customers with Child Support Agency interest.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the total arrears for (a) category A interim assessments and (b) full maintenance assessments which are owed to the Child Support Agency. [48859]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Simon Burns, dated 3 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about arrears owed to the Child Support Agency.

A large proportion of the maintenance outstanding attributable to category A interim maintenance assessments relates to the first two years of the Agency when interim maintenance assessments were more frequently imposed because of non co-operating non-resident parents. The Agency is developing the way it contacts non-resident parents, and the emphasis is now to make personal contact with non-resident parents as early in the assessment process as possible to reach agreement. In a large proportion of cases this now avoids the need to impose an interim maintenance assessment and prevents arrears of maintenance building up.

The total amount of category A interim maintenance assessments outstanding (accrued since 1993) at 31 May 1998 was £728,203,563.

The move away from imposing punitive category A interim maintenance assessments to concentrating on completing full maintenance assessments has therefore led to an increase in the total full maintenance assessment debt. But this puts the Agency in a better, more realistic position to increase the flow of maintenance to parents with care, because the assessment reflects the actual circumstances of the non-resident parent. This is demonstrated by maintenance of £547.14 million being collected or arranged in 1997–98; an increase of 37 per cent. on the amount achieved in 1996–97. For 1998–99 the Secretary of State target requires £750 million of child maintenance to be collected and arranged by the Agency.

The information on full maintenance assessment debt has recently been disclosed in response to a Parliamentary Question, 9 June 1998, Official Report, column 552.

The amount of child support full maintenance assessment debt outstanding at the 31 May 1998, was £731,620,186. For £341,376,152 of this amount the Agency has obtained agreement from the non-resident parent to pay off the arrears by regular instalments. A large proportion of the remainder is either possibly or probably uncollectable. The Agency undertakes a Debt Analysis exercise at the end of each financial year. The Debt Analysis exercise for 1996–97 indicated that the percentage of full maintenance assessment debt regarded as probably uncollectable was 38 per cent. Similar analysis has been carried out for 1997–98 and the results will be published in the Agency's 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts later this month, in a format which will satisfy the Committee of Public Accounts recommendation that the Agency " ... examine the scope for eliminating a significant amount of this debt, since it is unlikely ever to be collected ...".

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the impact of introducing a £15 per week disregard for income support when CSA assessments are awarded to income support recipients. [48459]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The estimated cost of disregarding £15 a week of maintenance received in Income Support is £140 million in 1999–2000. The Green Paper "Children First" presented to Parliament today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security proposes allowing lone parents on Income Support to keep up to £10 a week of any maintenance paid, bringing real help to children in the poorest families.

Lone Parents

33. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the number of lone parents finding work under the new deal for lone parents. [47505]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Full independent evaluation of the New Deal for Lone Parents is being carried out. Interim findings of the research, published on 21 May 1998 show that the programme is having a real and measurable impact on the lives of lone parents and their children, with a marked effect on the rate at which lone parents move off Income Support.

Cumulative results for the period up to and including 29 May 1998 show that: 23,881 initial letters have been issued; 9,932 initial interviews have been arranged; 7,740 lone parents have attended interviews; 6,888 lone parents have agreed to participate in the programme following their initial interviews; and 2,241 lone parents have found jobs following agreement to participate in the programme.

A copy of the interim report is in the Library.

The final evaluation report will be available in Autumn 1999.

Notes:

1. Since 6 April, when the New Deal for Lone Parents was extended to all lone parents making a new claim to Income Support (phase 2), the monthly results have been collated by the Employment Service. Results for the eight prototypes (phase 1) have been amalgamated with those for phase 2.

2. The figures are subject to further validation.

35. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the interim report on the new deal for lone parents. [47507]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The interim findings of research into the initial phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents shows that it is having a modest but marked effect on the lives of lone parents and their children. The research shows that there has been a reduction of 1.9 per cent. on the overall target population in the New Deal areas, as compared to control areas. And, for new claims, the effect is greater: by 31 March, the numbers of lone parents who started new or repeat claims for Income Support since July 1997 was 6.6 per cent. lower in New Deal areas than in Control areas.

The findings translate into around 800 lone parents and an estimated 1,600 children who have left Income Support because of the New Deal for Lone Parents in the eight prototypes. Those lone parents who have moved into work are, according to DSS calculations, on average £39 per week better off. Not only are these lone parents in work better off, but they have each reduced their benefit dependency—by approximately £42 per week.

In helping lone parents reduce their benefit dependency we are able to offer lone parents the same opportunity to gain financial independence as everybody else. The key to the success of the New Deal for Lone Parents is the role of the Personal Adviser who gives lone parents help and information on jobsearch, skills training, child care and in-work benefit.

Notes:

1. Target population refers to those lone parents on Income Support whose youngest child is of school age.

2. The interim report provides an initial estimate of what the New Deal for Lone Parents has achieved in its first eight months. The final evaluation report will be available in late 1999.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on Government action to help the poorest lone parent families during the last year. [47489]

Mr. Denham: Our New Deal for Lone Parents has already helped some of the poorest lone parents to improve their living standards by moving off Income Support into work. Lone parents who have been helped into work are better off by, on average, £39 a week.

We have announced a Working Families Tax Credit which will include a child care tax credit. This will provide lone parents with more help with child care costs than ever before.

We are also increasing Child Benefit for the eldest child and the family premium in the income related benefit by £2.50 a week from next April. Earlier help will be directed towards families with young children from this November through a £2.50 increase in the child allowances in the income-related benefits.

These measures will mean that around one and a half million lone parents will be better off overall, after taking account of the measure to align Child Benefit and family premium rates.

Women's National Commission

34. Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement about the effects which the Government's review of the Women's National Commission will have on women. [47506]

Ms Ruddock: A full report of the recommendations of the Government review of the Women's National Commission (WNC) will be published shortly. The Government Review Group attended the WNC plenary meeting on 23 June to discuss their findings. In many areas these coincided with those of the WNC's own review.

Some of the key conclusions that we have agreed with the WNC include the Commission retaining the status of a non-departmental public body funded by Government; the membership being increased by fifty per cent., to seventy five full member organisations; clear targets, objectives and priorities being agreed with Ministers; and regular liaison meetings between the WNC and the Ministers for Women.

Full implementation of the recommendations will result in the WNC becoming a more focused, responsive and influential organisation; better able to represent the views of a broader spectrum of women's organisations, and thereby a greater range of women; and in direct communication with Government.

Women's Juries

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the value of women's juries in influencing policy. [47476]

Ms Ruddock: The pilot juries have been a valuable exercise and a positive experience for those involved in them. They have provided an opportunity for women whose voices are not normally heard to contribute more directly to the policy making process. The two juries made over 60 recommendations, covering a range of issues including the regulation of childcare, parental leave, and part-time working. The responses are being fed into the consultation processes on "Fairness at Work" and "Meeting the Childcare Challenge".

I wrote to each of the jurors last week enclosing a copy of the Government's response. A copy of each set of recommendations and the Government response is being placed in the Library today.

A formal evaluation of the contribution juries can make to our Dialogue with Women and their effectiveness as a consultative mechanism will be carried out over the summer months.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has had on the taxing of disability living allowance. [47494]

Mr. Field: We have had representations from a number of sources on this issue, most recently in the Social Security Committee's fourth report on DLA published on 20 May. We have made it clear in our Green Paper that DLA will remain a national and universal benefit and as such it will not be subject to a means test. Taxation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor.

Pensions Review

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received on progress with her pensions review. [47503]

Mr. Denham: We received more than 2,000 responses to the first part of the Pensions Review, and more than 200 responses to the technical consultation document on our proposals for stakeholder pensions. We are continuing to receive contributions and ideas from a wide range of people and organisations with an interest in pensions.

As set out in the Green Paper, "New ambitions for our country: A New Contract for Welfare" (CM 3805), we will publish a Green Paper on pensions later this year. There will then be a period of further consultation before final proposals are developed.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will list the subject matters of the (a) oral briefing and (b) written briefing and submissions given by civil servants to each Minister in her Department on the policies being pursued by her Department between 28 April and 20 May 1997 and on related issues, and the dates on which these briefings and submissions were made; [47093]

(2) if she will list the dates when each Minister in her Department was first informed by civil servants orally or by written submissions or briefings of the Benefit Integrity Project; [47094]

(3) what oral or written briefings or submissions each Minister in her Department received from civil servants on aspects of the Benefit Integrity Project prior to 29 May 1997. [47095]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 24 June 1998]: At the time of the election, briefing was prepared for newly appointed Ministers. An initial pack providing an overview of the Department's activities and the main current issues was given to my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Minister for Welfare Reform, on 3 May 1997 and to me and other ministers at the beginning of the following week. The Benefit Integrity Project was not mentioned in this initial pack.

A general briefing pack on disability benefits was provided for my noble Friend Baroness Hollis on 9 May. My noble Friend had a wide-ranging introductory meeting with officials on 21 May based on the written briefing pack. The briefing pack included a paragraph which described the Project but which did not highlight the project as an issue of particular concern or about which decisions needed to be made, and it was not discussed at the meeting.

Also on 21 May, the House of Lords gave judgments on two cases about the scope of Disability Living Allowance. A briefing note was sent to all Ministers on the cases on the same day about the judgment. There was no direct connection between the two cases and the Project, but there was a brief description of it in a general briefing note on Disability Living Allowance attached to the paper. The handling of the paper within each Minister's office is set out in the table.

The attention of my noble Friend Baroness Hollis was not drawn to the project until 29 May, following a meeting between officials and representatives of disability organisations. On 30 May a paper describing the Project in detail was sent to all Ministers. The handling of the paper within each Minister's office is also set out in the table. The Project was discussed at a meeting at which all Ministers were present on 5 June.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her Department's monitoring of the administration of winter fuel payments. [47487]

Mr. Denham: We were kept informed of all significant developments as they arose. The delivery of these payments to almost ten million eligible pensioners in over seven million households was an enormous and unprecedented achievement for the Department.

The experience of making those payments will be used to inform the delivery of next winter's payments.

Disability Benefits (High Peak)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many residents of High Peak, within the last 12 months for which records are available or on the last available date, (a) are claiming sickness or disability related benefit, (b) have been investigated by the Benefit Integrity Project, (c) have had their benefits reduced by the Benefit Integrity Project, (d) have had their benefits increased by the Benefit Integrity Project, (e) have appealed against their level of benefit and (f) have won appeals against their level of benefit. [47701]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefit Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Tom Levitt, dated 3 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many residents of High Peak, within the last 12 months for which records are available or on the last available date (a) are claiming sickness or disability related benefit, (b) have been investigated by the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP), (c) have had their benefits reduced by the BIP, (d) have had their Benefits increased by the BIP, (e) have appealed against their level of benefit and (f) have won appeals against their level of benefit. As Mr. Mathison is on annual leave, I am replying.

The number of residents in High Peak claiming sickness and disability benefits is shown in the table at Annex 1.

The information concerning the BIP is not available in the format requested. To provide geographical information routinely would incur high costs and disrupt processing of ongoing casework. Figures are available on a national basis only.

As at 30 April 1998, a total of 172,026 cases, including 27,991 renewal cases have been selected for action under the BIP. At the same date a total of 81,221 cases have been examined. Of the total cases dealt with 1,864 have had their benefit increased, 63,380 have remained unchanged, 10,058 have had their benefit reduced and 5,919 have had their benefit stopped.

The total included 16,366 renewal cases of which 505 had their benefit increased, 8,407 have remained unchanged, 4,436 have had their benefit reduced and 3,018 have had their benefit stopped.

1,513 requests for an appeal have been received, of these 1,103 have been sent to the Independent Appeals Tribunal (ITS) for action, 61 have been finalised by ITS. Of the 61 cases, 10 had the Benefit Integrity Project decision maintained, 36 were restored to the original award, 7 were awarded at a lower rate than their original award and 8 were awarded at a higher rate than their original award.

A monthly statistical report, concerning the BIP, can be found in the House of Commons Library.

The number of residents in High Peak who have appealed against their level of benefit and who have won appeals against their level of benefit is shown in the table at Annex 2.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

It should be noted that Local Authority districts may contain parts of more than one parliamentary constituency and will therefore also include customers from other constituencies e.g. Derbyshire Dales is found in both High Peak and West Derbyshire Parliamentary Constituency. The figures cannot therefore be taken as actual estimates for Parliamentary Constituencies.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when her Department expects to pay Mr. Le Feuve the jobseeker's allowance awarded to him on appeal by the Independent Tribunal Service on 22 March; and if she will make a statement. [48851]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Jobseeker's Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 3 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent parliamentary Question asking when her Department expects to pay Mr. Le Feuve the Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) awarded to him on appeal by the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) on 22 March. As Mr. Mathison is on annual leave, I am replying.

The Tribunal's summary decision on Mr. Le Feuve's appeal was received at his local Benefits Agency Office on 1 April. On receipt of the decision an independent Adjudication Officer (AO) identified this case as being potentially worthy of an appeal to the Commissioner and requested a full statement of the facts and reasons for the decision from the ITS. This request was made on 14 April and further requests were made on 15 May and again on 5 June.

Until the information is received from the ITS a decision on whether an appeal to the Commissioner is appropriate cannot be made. Payment of benefit awarded by a Tribunal may be suspended whilst an AO considers an appeal to the Commissioner for a maximum of three months from the date the decision is received. This can be extended if the customer is given written notice.

However, as Mr. Le Feuve has not received any notice from the AO, payment of benefit is due. Mr. Le Feuve has therefore received payment of JSA for the period 19 to 21 July 1997, amounting to £21.07. The payment was sent to him on 2 July.

I hope that this is helpful.

Research Projects

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the research undertaken by the Centre for Research in Social Policy, Loughborough, into incapacity benefit and the contributory principle will be published; and if she will place a copy in the Library; [48801]

(2) when the research undertaken by Market Opinion Research International on attitudes towards disability benefits will be published; and if she will place a copy in the Library. [48802]

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the research undertaken by Alan Hedges, on pensions and retirement planning is due to be published; and if she will place a copy in the Library; [49179]

(2) when the research undertaken by Market Opinion Research International on attitudes towards welfare reform will be published; and if she will place a copy in the Library. [49151]

Mr. Denham: These four research projects form part of a wider programme of research on public attitudes to welfare reform issues. We plan to draw together the findings of these and other studies in a report which we expect to publish towards the end of this year. As appropriate, some of the studies will also be published individually. The work on Pensions and Retirement Planning will be published as part of the DSS Research Report Series by early Autumn. Copies of these research reports will be placed in the Library.

BSE

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the losses incurred by lowland suckler farmers during the period when BSE has been in the UK beef herd; and what public funds they have received in respect of the effect of BSE on their businesses. [47851]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 1 July 1998]: In March 1997, the UK Agriculture Departments and HM Treasury commissioned an independent study from DTZ Pieda Consulting to assess the economic impact of BSE on the UK economy. The study was completed in March of this year and a copy of the published report has been placed in the Library of the House. The report includes an estimate of the impact of BSE on the beef sector as a whole, but not for lowland suckler farmers separately.

Producers of animals suspected of having BSE receive compensation based on average market prices. Additional public funds, totalling in excess of £2.5 billion, have been spent on BSE-related measures since March 1996. Lowland suckler producers will have benefited, directly or indirectly, under many of these measures, but it is not possible to quantify the sums involved.

Meat Imports

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from which countries Britain imports meat from any species in respect of which the abattoirs do not comply precisely with EU requirements. [47854]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Controls on the hygienic production of fresh meat for sale for human consumption are set out in Council Directive 64/433/EEC. This sets out the licensing, structural and veterinary supervision requirements to be applied in all abattoirs in all Member States. Implementation of the requirements is a matter for each Member State. The European Commission is responsible for ensuring that all Member States comply with their Community obligations in properly implementing and applying the Directive. The Directive applies similar requirements on third country establishments wishing to export to the Community. These establishments are also inspected by the Commission to ensure that they comply. They are approved on a Community basis, not by individual Member States.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what instructions have been issued to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise with regard to meat imports. [48782]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 July 1998]: Meat imported from non-EU countries must enter the Community at approved Border Inspection Posts (BIPs), most of which are operated by local authorities. HM Customs and Excise have a statutory responsibility to withhold clearance of this meat until they have been notified by the Official Veterinary Surgeon at the BIP that relevant veterinary checks have been completed satisfactorily. These responsibilities have been promulgated to operational staff at ports and airports.

Beef Industry

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to implement the recommendations of paragraph 31 of the Agriculture Committee's report on the UK Beef Industry (Third report, Session 1997–98, HC 474). [47892]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 1 July 1998]: I have nothing to add to the reply on this point provided on page iv of the Government response (HC 720) to the Agriculture Committee's report.

Rabies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the central veterinary laboratory will test animal sera submitted by British veterinary surgeons for antibodies to rabies; and what is the current scale of fees for testing by the RFFIT technique. [47995]

Mr. Rooker: The testing of animal sera is the responsibility of the Veterinary Laboratories Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive to reply to my hon. Friend direct.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 6 July 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on whether the Central Veterinary Laboratory (CVL) test animal sera for antibodies to rabies.

The Veterinary Laboratories Agency, formerly called the CVL, will test animal sera submitted by British veterinary surgeons for the presence of antibodies to rabies. The current fee for a single test is £38.50, excluding VAT. For ten or more tests submitted at the same time, the price is £28.50 per test, exclusive of VAT.

Livestock

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to take to improve the standard of livestock in the United Kingdom. [48781]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 July 1998]: In the financial year 1997–98, the Department spent some £10 million on research into livestock science, the broad thrust of which is to improve the performance of British livestock.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he uses to determine the standard of livestock in the United Kingdom. [48780]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 July 1998]: EU legislation provides for the classification of carcases of slaughtered cattle, sheep and pigs by reference to conformation and fat cover. Abattoir operators are encouraged (but not required) to fix prices to producers on the basis of the classification reached by carcases at slaughter.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations his Department has received on the implementation of the Krebs report. [49223]

Mr. Rooker: We received over 300 responses to the formal consultation on the Krebs report and have received more since it ended. Respondents fell into five main groups: badger groups and individuals interested in badger conservation; other welfare and wildlife interests; farmers and farming organisations; the veterinary profession; and research interests. I am hoping to make an announcement before the House rises for the summer recess.

New Zealand Lamb Quota

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the New Zealand lamb quota will next be renegotiated. [47850]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The current import quota for New Zealand sheepmeat was negotiated in the context of the GATT Uruguay Round. The basis for the quota is actual sendings in the years 1986–1988. The next round of World Trade Organisation multilateral trade negotiations will begin in 2000.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce the Government's policy on the sale of vitamin B6 following the completion of his recent consultation exercise. [49199]

Mr. Rooker: Ministers will consider the results of the consultation exercise on the Government's proposals on restrictions on the sale of vitamin B6, together with the report of the Agriculture Committee, before deciding how to proceed. An announcement on the Government's policy will be made as soon as we are in a position to do so.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the individuals and organisations consulted on the subject of vitamin B6 during the consultation period on the draft statutory instrument on its retail sale. [49192]

Mr. Rooker: The lists of those to whom the consultation document on the Government's proposals on vitamin B6 was sent are set out.

In accordance with normal procedures for consultations on Government proposals, full details of the consultation will in due course be placed in the MAFF Main Library, 3 Whitehall Place, London SW1A 2HH for public scrutiny. This will include copies of the responses received, other than those requesting confidentiality. A copy of the consultation document and the list of respondents will also be placed in the Library of the House. Separate consultations were undertaken in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the projects undertaken by her Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if she will place the results of the research in the Library. [46678]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 30 June 1998]: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments routinely consult the public, interested parties and client groups, by way of consultation papers, discussion papers, and White Papers on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. I have therefore confined my reply to other major exercises.

9 March-18 May 1998

Research to assess public attitude and reaction to a range of issues covering personal confidence in the future; attitudes to paramilitary violence; and the Belfast Agreement. The results are available on request to political parties.

Integrated Schools

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the (a) numbers and (b) percentage of the total, of those studying in integrated schools in the (i) nursery, (ii) infant, (iii) junior, (iv) secondary, (v) further education, (vi) higher education and (vii) teacher training sectors of education in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [48298]

Mr. Worthington: In the schools sector, only primary and secondary schools have integrated status. There are 3,846 pupils at integrated primary schools, which represents 2.1% of total primary enrolments and 4,308 pupils at integrated secondary schools which represents 2.8% of total post-primary enrolments.

The religious composition of students at further education college and universities is mixed. There are 85,669 enrolments at further education colleges and 39,178 enrolments at universities in Northern Ireland.

There are 1,530 enrolments on initial teacher training courses in Northern Ireland. Of these, 25.4% are at universities where the religious composition is mixed. The remaining 74.6% are at: St. Mary's College, where the religious composition of enrolments is predominantly Roman Catholic, and Stranmillis College, where the religious composition of enrolments is predominantly Protestant.

Belfast Harbour

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the value of the contract for the development of Belfast Harbour Exchange Retail and Leisure Park. [47894]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 July 1998]: I understand from the Belfast Harbour Commission that the value of the development agreement between the Commissioners and the developer of the D5 site, is represented by future rental income for the land resulting from the granting of leases to future occupiers of the development when completed. As these leases have still to be finally negotiated, it is not possible to put a specific value on the rental flow.

The £65 million estimate mentioned in recent press reports is the value which the commercial property market might place on the development when completed and fully let, and does not reflect the cost of constructing the development, which is the responsibility of the developer.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which company has been awarded the contract for the development of the Belfast Harbour Exchange Retail and Leisure Park. [47895]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 July 1998]: I am advised by the Belfast Harbour Commissioners that they have appointed the joint venture group of Aquis Estates Limited and Anglia General Developments (Harbour Exchange) Limited as the preferred developer of the D5 site, known as Belfast Harbour Exchange.

Fair Treatment Analyses

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to make policy appraisal and fair treatment analyses available to those who contribute to, or are affected by, them. [48357]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Appraisals carried out under the terms of the 1993 Policy Appraisal for Fair Treatment (PAFT) guidelines are not published. The implementation of PAFT is reported on in annual reports, which are available from the Central Community Relations Unit free of charge. A report for 1997 is in preparation. The White Paper 'Partnership for Equality', contains proposals for a statutory obligation on the public sector to promote equality of opportunity which would include a requirement for equality appraisals of policies, superseding the PAFT initiative.

Injuries Compensation (Lisnevin)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many boys have been compensated for injuries received in Lisnevin which were inflicted by (a) staff and (b) other children since 1991. [48351]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Two boys were compensated for injuries allegedly inflicted by staff in Lisnevin during the eight-year period. One incident occurred in 1995 and the other in 1996.

Training Schools

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list all Social Services Inspectorate reports on training schools since 1991. [48353]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The Social Services Inspectorate have carried out part or full inspections of the four Training Schools as set out in the table.

| Year | Training schools |
|---|---|
| 1991 | None |
| 1992 | All training schools |
| 1993 | Rathgael and St. Patrick's |
| 1994 | St. Joseph and Lisnevin |
| 1995 | None |
| 1996 | All training schools |
| 1997 | Rathgael, St. Patrick's and Lisnevin |
| 1998 | St. Joseph's |

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the maximum capacity of each training school in relation to (a) boys and (b) girls in (i) 1993, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1995, (iv) 1996, (v) 1997 and (vi) 1998. [48354]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The table indicates the capacity in each of the Training Schools for offenders over the period 1993 to 1998. Rathgael is the only school which accommodates boys and girls and there are no limits imposed on the maximum number of either sex within the capacity of the Centre.

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Rathgael (Boys and Girls) | 50 | 50 | 50 | 50 | 50 | 50 |
| St Patrick's (Boys) | 54 | 54 | 19 | 19 | 19 | 19 |
| St Joseph's (Girls) | 5 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 4 | 4 |
| Lisnevin (Boys) | 56 | 56 | 40 | 40 | 40 | 40 |

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date Rathgael Training School ceased to be classified for use by non-Roman Catholics; and what the reasons were for the change. [48350]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 July 1998]: At no time has Rathgael Training School been classified for use by non-Roman Catholics only. The Rathgael and Whiteabbey Management Board have always run the Centre on a non-denominational basis.

Ombudsman

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to extend the remit of the Northern Ireland Ombudsman to include the operation of the Northern Ireland Office (Criminal Justice Services) and related agencies. [48352]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The Northern Ireland Office and its agencies come within the remit of the GB Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. There are no plans to extend the remit of the Northern Ireland Ombudsman.

Forensic Science Agency

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what key targets were set for the Forensic Science Agency of Northern Ireland in 1997–98; what further plans have been prepared by the Agency; and what arrangements have been made for the publication of this year's plans. [49637]

Mr. Ingram: The following key targets were set for the Forensic Science Agency of Northern Ireland in 1997–98.

Service Provision

1. To have satisfied the Royal Ulster Constabulary that their essential needs for forensic science services are being met, through appropriate measurement by survey.

Financial Performance

2. To recover the full economic costs of the Agency.

3. To have service level agreements in place by 1 April 1998 with the Agency's main customers which quantify the volume of service expected, the quality of the service and the estimate of cost.

Quality of Service

4. To turnaround 97 per cent. of alcohol analyses within 30 days of the job request and all within 40 days throughout the year.

5. Based on a maximum intake of 4,250 other cases, to turnaround an average for the year of 42 per cent. within 30 days of the job request and 90 per cent. within 120 days. The target will be modified depending on the intake as shown in the Business Plan.

6. Based on an annual intake of 240 cases in which people are remanded in custody, to produce 90 per cent. of reports within 90 days of first remand (or of notification if that happens to be more than 10 days after first remand). The target will be modified depending on the intake as shown in the Business Plan.

7. To have reduced the number of cases older than 120 days to 75 at 31 March 1998.

Quality of Science

8. To have retained accreditation for the named scientific processes whose continued accreditation is justified by the business needs of the Agency.

9. To have made formal application for the accreditation of the named scientific processes by 31 March 1998.

10. To receive accreditation for the named scientific processes.

Human Resources

11. By 31 March 1998, the competencies of appropriate staff to carry out the named processes will have been assessed against competence frameworks.

Efficiency

12. To secure efficiency savings of £40k.

13. To have an accurate unit cost for the Agency calculated for the year ending 31 March 1998.

Achievement against these key targets will be recorded in the Agency's Annual Report for 1997–98 which will be published as soon as possible.

The Agency has published a summary of its Corporate Plan 1998–2001 and Annual Business Plan 1998–99 which explains its business and organisation, describes its key targets for 1998–98, and sets out the assumptions about workloads and resources which support its planned activities. Copies of the summary plans have been placed in the Library of the Houses. Copies will be available to the public from the Agency.

Prison Service

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland Prison Service intends to publish its 1998–2001 Corporate and Business Plan; and what performance targets have been set for 1998–99. [49638]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Prison Service's Corporate and Business Plan for 1998–2001 was published today. The following key performance targets have been set for 1998–99:

1. To ensure 100 per cent. security for prisoners in high and top risk categories.
2. To ensure at least 99.5 per cent. security for prisoners in medium and low risk categories.
3. To ensure that the number of significant breaches during 1998–99 does not exceed 7.1 per 100 prisoners.
4. To increase the target number of hours of constructive activity undertaken each week by prisoners by 3 per cent. from 23 hours to 23.7 hours.
5. To establish baseline information for each establishment on the number and duration of, and potential improvements to, visits.
6. To offer sentence planning to all eligible prisoners and to achieve a 50 per cent. uptake.
7. To achieve an average of 5 days training and development per member of staff.
8. To ensure that the average cost per prisoner place does not exceed £75,766 (a reduction in real terms of 3.9 per cent. on the target for 1997–98).

The average cost per prisoner place is based on a staffed prisoner places figure of 1776. Due to the completion of two new house blocks at Maghaberry and events elsewhere in the prison estate, this figure may change during the year.

Assembly (Verbatim Record)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the estimated cost of the published verbatim record of proceedings of the Northern Ireland Assembly. [49462]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The cost will depend, in part, on the number of plenary meetings during the year—a matter not yet discussed by the Assembly. As an indication of cost, one meeting each week for 40 weeks in a full year is estimated to cost in the region of £800,000 per annum.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ensure that a verbatim record of proceedings of the Northern Ireland Assembly will be available (a) in the Vote Office and (b) on the Internet. [49461]

Mr. Paul Murphy: An official report of debate on the Northern Ireland Assembly will be available in the Vote Office. Whether it will be on the Internet is a matter which the Assembly might wish to decide.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on dealing with problems of rough sleepers in each of the past five years; and what estimates he has made of the total numbers sleeping rough for each of those years. [49184]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose Chief Executive has advised me that research has failed to find evidence of a rough sleeping problem in Northern Ireland. Nevertheless, the Executive is to be represented on a steering group which will provide a "street outreach service" in Belfast, which should assist with early identification of problems and inform decisions on whether any further research may be necessary.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Over-lenient Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases in 1997 appeals against over-lenient sentences resulted in an increase in sentence. [48325]

The Attorney-General: In 1997, the Law Officers referred the sentences imposed on 70 offenders to the Court of Appeal for their sentences to be reviewed under the provisions of section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. Of the References that have been heard, sentences have been increased in respect of 43 offenders. One References was withdrawn. Three References are yet to be heard.

PRIME MINISTER

Rough Sleepers

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the work of the Social Exclusion Unit on rough sleepers. [49465]

The Prime Minister: I am today publishing the Government's conclusions on the second report of the Social Exclusion Unit on rough sleeping. The report sets out a new strategy to cut the numbers of people sleeping rough by two thirds within three years.

A new Ministerial Committee, led by the Minister for Local Government and Housing, will be responsible for co-ordinating the policy across Government.

The Committee will lead a programme of prevention to ensure that the most vulnerable, often from institutional backgrounds, are better equipped to live on their own.

In London, where the problem is most acute, the Government will consult on setting up a new body to take over all the different programmes currently targeted on rough sleepers. Outside London, local authorities will be helped to coordinate activity better.

The rules of the New Deal will be changed to mean rough sleepers can qualify for the intensive help available under the scheme from the moment they sign on for benefit. This is a tremendous opportunity to break the "no home, no job" cycle. Finally, there will be a programme to challenge the business and voluntary sectors and the worlds of art and sports to make their own commitment to help rough sleepers. The Government will support a rough sleeper mentoring initiative if a suitable proposal is made.

Copies of the report are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hunting

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward legislation to give local authorities the power to license or not license hunting with hounds. [47641]

Mr. George Howarth: Several approaches to the question of hunting with hounds are being discussed, including the option of local referendums.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of charges (i) imposed, (ii) collected and (iii) waived since 1987 under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; and what is the total amount of charges outstanding. [49169]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Charges totalling £117.3 million had been levied to 31 May 1998. Of this sum, £78.3 million had been paid, and £28.7 million waived following representations from carriers. £10.3 million remained outstanding.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48872]

Mr. Straw: Figures covering the period 1 April 1997 to 1 January 1998 (available in the Library[1], and on the Internet[2]) are summarised in the table. It is not possible to provide information retrospectively for the specific dates requested except at disproportionate cost.

| Area | FTE[3] staff numbers at 1 April 1997 | FTE staff numbers at 1 January 1998 |
|---|---|---|
| Home Office Main (excluding Agencies) | 9,358 | 9,195 |
| Fire Service College | 215 | 261 |
| Forensic Science Service | 1,185 | 1,208 |
| UK Passport Agency | 1,407 | 1,220 |
| Home Office Main (including Agencies) | 12,165 | 11,884 |
| Her Majesty's Prison Service | 37,704 | 38,779 |
| Total Home Office including Agencies and Prison Service | 49,869 | 50,663 |

Ministers (Threats)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Ministers are personally informed of the details of threats made against them. [49134]

Mr. Straw: Ministers are personally briefed if there is a significant threat to their personal security.

Mr. Roderick Henderson

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will offer the assistance of Scotland Yard to the French police in their investigation the death of Mr. Roderick Henderson in Paris. [48864]

Mr. Michael: The investigation into the death of Roderick Henderson is a matter for the authorities in France, where he died. The police in England and Wales do not offer their services to investigating authorities overseas but will respond positively to requests for assistance; the French authorities have not requested the presence of a British police officer in France to assist with this investigation.

Mr. Henderson was attacked on the Champs Elysees in Paris by a gang of rollerbladers during the early hours of Sunday 27 October 1997. He was kicked in the head by a rollerblade and died on 28 October from his injuries. He was with his son-in-law at the time. His wife and daughter had returned to their hotel by taxi.

French police have confirmed that the case is being treated as a murder investigation. An Examining Magistrate, M. Deparis, has been placed in charge of the investigation. Consular officials do not have access to the Magistrate's confidential file on the investigation. However, Mrs. Henderson's lawyers do have access to this file.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, through consular staff in Paris, are in regular communication with the Examining Magistrate and the French Police regarding the investigation. Our Consul met the Examining Magistrate on 29 April to underline the importance that is attached to the case and our Deputy Head of Mission raised the matter with the French Diplomatic Adviser to M. Chevenement, the French Interior Minister.

The French authorities have confirmed that police officers are assigned full-time to the investigation. They appear to have made little progress and have few leads to follow.

The Coroner for North Kent has opened an inquest and, through the consulate, has requested copies of reports relating to Mr. Henderson's death. Kent Constabulary are in liaison with the family and are assisting the Coroner with his inquiries. The National Central Bureau of Interpol are liaising with the French Police as are the European Liaison Unit of Kent Constabulary.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many explanatory statements have been (a) received and (b) dispatched to the Independent Appellate Authority for listing of appeals from the date on which his Department assumed responsibility for the dispatch of explanatory statements following refusal of applications by entry clearance offices in British missions overseas; and if he will make a statement. [48742]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 1 December 1997, 3,625 explanatory statements have been received and 3,194 dispatched. These include approximately 900 explanatory statements processed under the previous arrangements but received after 1 December 1997. I regret that the necessity of dealing with this backlog, together with other administrative problems, which have now been addressed, initially caused delays in dispatch.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters dated 12 March, 16 April and 21 May sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Abdul Wahort, 208 Park Bank Lane. [48146]

Mr. Straw: I sent a reply to my right hon. Friend yesterday. I regret the delay in responding.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Royal Collection

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the inventory of works of art in the Royal Collection was completed; and if he will make a statement. [48501]

Mr. Fisher: I understand from the Royal Household, which is responsible for the Royal Collection Department, that the computerised inventory of the Royal Collection was completed in December 1997. Further development work on the use of the inventory, especially to enhance electronic public access to the Royal Collection, will take place over the next five years.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many Grade I and Grade II listed buildings have been destroyed since 1992. [48600]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on 7 February 1996, Official Report, column 284, which gives the figures for the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95, and the answer given to him on 14 May 1996, Official Report, column 438, which gives the figures for 1992–93. The figures for the last three years are:

| | 1995–96 | 1996–97 | 1997–98 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Grade I | 2 | 1 | 0 |
| Grade II* | 0 | 5 | 2 |
| Grade II | 49 | 55 | 56 |

The figures represent cases where local planning authorities notify the Department that they intend to grant consent for the total demolition of a listed building, consents which the Department issues and other total demolitions which are brought to the Department's attention. Since the House of Lords judgment in the case of Shimizu (UK) Limited v. Westminster City Council, the demolition of a curtilage building is likely to amount only to an alteration and hence is no longer included in the demolition statistics form 1997–98.

TREASURY

Mortgage Companies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new action the Government are planning in respect of mortgage companies which specialise in attracting clients with poor credit ratings. [49181]

Mrs. Liddell: In response to the question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Caplin), I announced on 7 April 1998, Official Report, column 151, that the proposed legislation to establish the Financial Services Authority as a single regulator will include reserve powers which could enable it to regulate mortgages. The Treasury is monitoring the operation of the mortgage code introduced by the Council of Mortgage Lenders (CML) to see whether it is capable of protecting all mortgage borrowers—not just those with poor credit ratings—to the standard that the Government are determined to see achieved.

Royal Mint

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if a prior options review will be undertaken at the Royal Mint. [49423]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government will be reviewing all the options for a public/private partnership for the Royal Mint, including full and partial sale and other forms of private-sector involvement, to enable it to take advantage of new commercial opportunities.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 28, on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link guarantee, what risk assessment the Government applied to the project; and what were their conclusions. [48691]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The Government commissioned external consultants' assessments of the commercial and construction risks. The assessments concluded that, under the deal announced on 3 June 1998, the various private sector parties are taking a substantial level of risk. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister set out the conclusions regarding Government support of the project in his statement to the House of 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 28, on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link, if he will place a copy of (a) the assessment and (b) the review of that assessment prepared by external consultants, in the Library. [48690]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 3 July 1998]: No. The model of London and Continental Railways' future finances, which was reviewed by external consultants, is commercially confidential.

Education Spending

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much capital spending on education increased (a) on average over the period 1978–79 to 1997–98 and (b) in 1998–99. [46432]

Mr. Darling: Table 3.7 of Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses 1998–99 (Cm 3901) shows figures for central Government and local authority capital spending on education for 1992–93 to 1997–98. An equivalent figure for total capital spending on education in 1998–99 has not yet been published. Data on a comparable basis are not readily available back to 1978–79, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. National Accounts data for general government capital expenditure on education, which use a slightly different definition and are presented on a calender year basis, show an average fall in real terms of around 0.2 per cent. per annum over the period 1978 to 1996. A figure consistent with this series for 1997 is not yet available.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he takes to ensure that payments made from European structural funds towards projects in Wales and Scotland are additional to the expenditure blocks defined by the Barnett formula; and if he will make a statement. [48818]

Mrs. Liddell: Article 9 of Structural Funds Regulation No 2082/93 stipulates that Structural Funds allocations may not replace structural or comparable expenditure undertaken by the Member State. This additionality requirement applies to each of the Structural Fund Objectives in the whole of the territory eligible under that Objective. So, for example, the UK must demonstrate each year that it has complied with the additionality requirement for Objective 2, taking the expenditure in all eligible regions of Scotland, Wales and England into account.

Forecasting Staff

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the staff numbers involved in forecasting in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of forecasting to his Department in the current financial year. [48996]

Mrs. Liddell: Around 8 members of staff in the Treasury work mainly in preparing forecasts of the economy and the public finances. Their full costs, including pay, employers' contributions, superannuation, and share of accommodation and other common services will range from about £44,000 to £73,000 per head in the current financial year depending on grade.

These individuals are engaged mainly, but not exclusively, in forecasting activities. Similarly, other members of staff contribute to the Treasury forecasts but are engaged mainly with other duties. KPMG Management Consulting's Final Report "Market Testing the Treasury's Macro-Economic Forecasting Function" (May 1997) gave a breakdown of resources devoted to forecasts and other forecast-related activities on a full-time equivalents basis (Table 1, page 15).

That report concluded that the quality of Treasury forecast output is generally perceived to be high, and that the potential for net quality improvements or net resource savings was not sufficient to justify a market test. A copy of the Report is available in the House of Commons Library.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48841]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury is currently working on a wider review of the business continuity plans for the Department as a whole. We shall build on the results of this review to ensure that Treasury's plan deals adequately with year 2000 issues. We aim to have this completed by the end of 1998.

NUTS 2

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy not to support a reduction in the size of the EU structural funds for the period 2000 to 2006 in a manner which will lessen the chances of those NUTS 2 areas which, on current criteria, would qualify for Objective I status, from so qualifying. [48899]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government believe that it is in the interests of the United Kingdom, as a substantial net contributor to the EC budget, to resist any large increase in the size of the Structural and Cohesion Funds, particularly in the light of the forthcoming enlargement of the EU to Central and Eastern Europe. This view is shared by all the major net contributors to the EC budget.

At the same time, the Government are actively seeking a fair deal for the United Kingdom and its constituent countries and regions. The Government recognise that, in order to ensure that enlargement is affordable, all the current Member States must be prepared to accept reductions in their Structural Fund receipts. But those reductions must be shared equitably: the Government would strongly resist any proposals which hit the United Kingdom disproportionately hard, particularly in comparison with richer Member States.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 24, if he will make a statement on those areas contained in the new NUTS 2 areas for Wales. [48822]

Mrs. Liddell: The statistical justification for the new NUTS 2 areas for Wales was provided in my response to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 24.

Personal Pensions

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken to encourage independent financial advisers to complete their reviews of personal pensions. [49559]

Mrs. Liddell: Today, I have met senior representatives from large firms of independent financial advisers (IFAs), and the IFA networks to emphasise the priority the Government attach to early action to put right past mis-selling and to ask them to take personal responsibility for their firms' actions. Together, the 30 firms invited account for over half the IFA market.

Last year, I called in senior representatives from over 40 large firms, mostly life insurance companies, to give them the same message. I have been reporting to this House on their progress, most recently on 17 June 1998, Official Report, columns 208–10.

At last, most of those firms have now made big strides—both in terms of their actual progress with the review and in their attitude towards the review.

The picture in the IFA sector is strikingly different. Little progress has been made by many IFAs, and all too many firms still seem to have the attitude that their inaction is defensible. I have been particularly troubled to see how many IFAs, when faced with the second phase of the mis-selling review, have chosen to blame everyone except themselves for the problem. The truth is people have lost out as a result of having been sold products that were wrong for them. IFAs have a clear responsibility to sort out whether any of their customers deserve redress as a result and to make redress where that is warranted.

Yesterday, the Personal Investment Authority announced disciplinary action taken against 41 IFAs for failings connected with the pensions review. This makes absolutely clear to all IFAs that discipline is a real prospect if they fail to deal with their cases. IFAs' reviews must be tackled with professional diligence and businesslike rigour.

IFAs rightly make much of their independence, their ability to provide impartial advice as agent of the customer, to offer a full financial planning service, and deliver ongoing customer care. The reality as displayed by many firms' conduct in the pensions review is that, all too often, the customer is neglected. Failure to take reasonable steps to identify cases, failure to conduct reviews properly, inadequate resourcing, and ultimately failure to resolve and redress cases. All these failings are failures of customer care. In the long term, if the IFA sector fails to put its house in order, and genuinely command the trust of customers, it will call into question not only the viability, but possibly the desirability, of the current industry structure.

In my opinion, people should think long and hard before using an IFA. Some have clearly set their faces against doing a proper job of finding and putting right past mis-selling, and hopelessly poor progress has been made by others. My recommendation to anyone thinking of taking advice is to check out the IFA thoroughly. Check their attitude to the consumer protection that regulation provides, and to putting right past problems—including their progress with the pension review. Ask if they have ever been fined or disciplined by the regulators.

Hospital Repairs

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 29, if he will publish the classification rules for the national accounts. [48792]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the classification rules of the national accounts.

The methodology underlying the national accounts is, like all methodology underlying ONS outputs, made available to users. In this case the current rules on the treatment of hospital repairs are in Chapter 12 of United Kingdom National Accounts Sources and Methods published by HMSO in 1985. Methodological Notes in subsequent annual editions of United Kingdom National Accounts—The Blue Book have updated some sections of Sources and Methods. Copies of both publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Paragraph 10 of chapter 12 of Sources and Methods says: "Expenditure on current repairs and maintenance make good breakages in fixed assets and keep them in proper working order, while outlays on capital repair and alteration lengthen the productivity of the goods significantly. The capital outlays should consist of significant alterations and additions to, or replacements in, the parts of fixed assets. In order to be classified as fixed capital formation, the newly incorporated parts should have an expected lifetime of use of one year or more and involve substantial outlays and should also lengthen the expected lifetime of the use of the fixed assets, or alter the character or volume of services which they yield".

The ONS will be publishing a new version of Sources and Methods in the Autumn consistent with the 1995 version of the European System of Accounts. There is no change to the rules concerning the classification of hospital repairs.

Abortions

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of abortions were funded by the National Health Service for residents of each constituency in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [48925]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Fiona MacTaggart, dated July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on abortions.

Abortion statistics are not available by parliamentary constituency. ONS produce abortions statistics by regional office and health authority.

Causes of Death

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times (a) heroin, (b) ecstasy, (c) cocaine, (d) LSD, (e) cannabis, (f) amphetamines, (g) temazepam, (h) paracetamol, (i) alcohol, (j) solvents, (k) co-proxamol, (l) methadone and (m) tobacco have appeared on death certificates in each year between 1992 and 1996. [48070]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated July 1998

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on deaths.

Data for 1992 may be obtained from Table 10 of Mortality Statistics: Injury and Poisoning 1992, Series DH4 no.18, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. The attached table lists all substances mentioned in the records of deaths assigned to accidental and other poisoning by solid or liquid substances. 1992 data on cases of drug dependence or non-dependent abuse of drugs would only be available at disproportionate cost.

Often a number of drugs (including alcohol) are listed on the death certificate. If, for example, both heroin and cannabis are mentioned on a death certificate, the death will occur twice in the table, once under 'Heroin' and once under 'Cannabis'.

Deaths in England and Wales 1993–1996

| | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 |

| Cocaine | 12 | 21 | 19 | 15 |
| LSD | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 |

| Amphetamines | 22 | 20 | 40 | 29 |

| Tobacco | 58 | 47 | 48 | 29 |

[1] Figures are for mentions of the word 'paracetamol' only and not any of the associated compounds, although co-proxamol has been given separately as requested

[2] Data supplied by St. George's Hospital Medical School and include those deaths involving all volatile substances. Figures for 1996 will appear shortly in their report 'Trends in Deaths Associated with Abuse of Volatile Substances 1971–1996. Report 11'

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many people in (i) the constituency of Worthing, West, (ii) the borough of Worthing, (iii) the district of Arun, (iv) West Sussex, (v) England, (vi) Wales, (vii) Scotland, (viii) Northern Ireland and (ix) the United Kingdom earn less than the proposed national minimum wage, broken down by (a) gender, (b) age and (c) full or part-time employment. [48687]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 7 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on earnings.

The national minimum wage (NMW) will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for those aged over 21. A development rate of £.300 per hour will apply for workers aged 18 to 21. The proposals also include a provision for a rate of £3.20 which will apply to those over 21 years receiving accredited training during the first six months of a new job with a new employer, but we are unable to provide data on this. Workers aged 16 and 17 and all those on formal apprenticeships will be exempt.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £3.40 and £2.80 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates and I have provided supplementary data for these levels.

The attached tables present adjusted New Earnings Survey (NES) and Labour Force Survey (LFS) data for the number of employees earning less than the proposed NMW rates. I will arrange for a copy of the tables to be placed in the House of Commons Library. These estimates are based on our preferred method for assessing the coverage of the proposed NMW. This method adjusts for the fact that the NES is based on a one percent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff, earning below the tax-threshold, and in particular those who work part-time.

It is not possible to use this method for small areas and where necessary data solely from the NES have been provided.

The extent of the bias in the NES data may be estimated for the South East by using the adjusted NES and LFS data. This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of employees aged over 21 years earning below £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 3 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the region, and so it would be wise to treat this figure as broadly indicative rather than a precise estimate.

Registration Records

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive an options paper from the Registrar General about improved access to registration records; and if he will make a statement. [48814]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 7 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on registration.

No timetable has been set for the production of the options paper.

The options paper will consider the use of information technology to improve the service to customers and to provide better data management. It will also consider the possibility of working with a wide variety of organisations outside the public sector.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Multinationals (OECD Guidelines)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what consultations her Department has had with the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the current review of the OECD guidelines for multinational enterprises. [49158]

Clare Short: Officials in my Department are in regular contact with officials in the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI), which has lead responsibility within the Government for the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises. Most recently, officials from my Department worked with DTI officials to prepare for a meeting of the OECD Committee on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises on 26 June. At that meeting, the Committee agreed to proceed with a review of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises. DFID is now working with the DTI to establish specific objectives for the review.

Billiton

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to Billiton plc regarding the social and environmental implications of their proposed Eastern Cape Zinc Refinery Project, South Africa. [49427]

Clare Short: None. I have asked my officials to make inquiries about the project and I will write to the hon. Lady.

Exchange Rates

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what mechanisms exist to alleviate the impact of fluctuating currency rates on overseas development aid. [48897]

Clare Short: For bilateral assistance, the Department for International Development's general policy is to provide agreed inputs, primarily goods and services, and make payment in sterling. Where payments are made in foreign currency, the Department, rather than developing countries, bears the exchange rate risk within our overall financial resources. We do not pay in advance of need, thereby minimising the exchange rate risk.

The Department also bears the exchange rate risk in making contributions to international organisations, including European Commission activities, where these are called in currencies other than sterling.

EU Banana Regime

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the Agriculture Council's recent decision on the EU banana regime. [48866]

Clare Short: The Government welcome the agreement reached in the Agriculture Council on the revised arrangements for the EU banana regime. The UK fought hard for the interests of Caribbean banana producers and the Government believe that it was the best deal available taking into account both Lomé and WTO obligations. It will provide the Caribbean banana industry with continuing access to the EU market.

The European Commission's proposals for additional aid to the Traditional ACP (African, Caribbean and Pacific) banana producers should help them to adjust to the new market conditions building on on-going efforts to improve their efficiency and quality. We hope that this can be agreed quickly.

Although the unallocated Traditional ACP quantity does not guarantee Caribbean suppliers a particular share of the market, at 857,700 tonnes, it is significantly larger than current levels of imports from Traditional ACP suppliers. Furthermore, the Traditional ACP suppliers are working together to ensure that competition among them does not undermine the ability of the more vulnerable producers such as the Windward islands, to market their produce.

SCOTLAND

Refuse Collection

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which councils in Scotland have adopted the use of wheeled bins for refuse collection. [48989]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not held centrally.

Eviction Actions

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many eviction actions have been taken by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in each of the last eight years for (i) anti-social behaviour and (ii) rent arrears. [48963]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not held centrally.

Housing Refusals

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households were refused housing by local authorities last year for (a) previous housing debt including rent arrears, (b) council tax arrears, (c) suspected anti-social behaviour and (d) previous eviction for anti-social behaviour. [48987]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not held centrally.

Home Insulation

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses he estimates will be insulated through the New Deal energy efficiency funds; and what will be the expected average change in energy rating. [48964]

Mr. Macdonald: Up to 30,000 homes may benefit in the current year. The exact number will depend on the number of New Deal trainees available for energy efficiency work and the type of improvements carried out. The most common package of measures is likely to include draughtproofing and loft, tank and pipe insulation. The improvement in energy ratings will vary between houses. A typical three-bedroom semi-detached house should see an increase in its Standard Assessment Procedure rating of 5 and in its National Home Energy Rating of 0.5 as a result of this package.

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the annual accounts for each of the last five years of the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland). [49220]

Mr. McLeish: The accounts of the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland are contained in the Association's annual report. I have arranged for copies of the annual reports for 1993–94 to 1997–98 to be placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish guidance to councils on the rules governing the use of council finance to pay for public relations consultants or staff to publicise issues which do not relate clearly to the council's provision of services. [49318]

Mr. Macdonald: Councils are obliged by section 4 of the Local Government Act 1986 (as amended) to have regard to the Code of Recommended Practice on Local Authority Publicity which was published on 15 August 1988 as Scottish Development Department Circular 16/88. I have ensured that a copy is available in the Library of the House.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent to deal with problems of rough sleepers in each of the past five years; and what estimate he has made of the total numbers sleeping rough for each of those years. [49182]

Mr. Macdonald: In 1997–98, £2 million was spent on dealing with the problems of rough sleepers through the Rough Sleepers Initiative in Scotland and a further £14 million will be spent in 1998–99 and 1999–00. There was no specific allocation of funds to help rough sleepers before 1997–98. There is no overall estimate of the numbers of rough sleepers in Scotland. One-night counts of rough sleepers, carried out by 17 local authorities between 1996 and 1998 identified 150 rough sleepers but this is unlikely to be a reliable guide to the overall size of the problem.

National Museum of Scotland

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the membership of the Board of Trustees of the National Museum of Scotland, indicating who appoints them and to whom they are responsible. [49270]

Mr. Galbraith: Trustees are appointed by the Secretary of State. They are responsible for the care and exhibition of the collections, subject to the provisions of the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985. Reports on the exercise of their functions are submitted to the Secretary of State and laid before Parliament. The current membership o the Board of Trustees is:

Mr. Robert H. Smith, Chairman

The Countess of Dalkeith

Professor Thomas M. Devine

Dr. Lesley Glasser

Sir Alistair Grant

Mr. Sandy Grant Gordon CBE

Professor Veronica van Heyningen

Professor Peter Jones

Professor Aubrey Manning

Professor James Murray

Dr. Anna Ritchie OBE

The Countess of Rosebery

Sir John Thomson GCMG.

Scottish Museums Council

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on levels of Government funding to the Scottish Museums Council since 1993; and what assessment he has made of its performance. [49271]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Museums Council is an independent company with charitable status. It is subject to appraisal and assessment through Scottish Office scrutiny and discussion of annual corporate plans, examination of statements of accounts and reports and through regular attendance of officials at general and extraordinary meetings. Government funding since 1993 is shown in the table:

|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 811,000 |
| 1994–95 | 847,000 |
| 1995–96 | 782,000 |
| 1996–97 | 911,000 |
| 1997–98 | 807,000 |
| 1998–99 | 840,850 |

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Formation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance is currently made available to young people with regard to start up costs for new businesses. [48528]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Business Link partnerships have a range of advisory services to suit the needs of all businesses. Start-up and micro-firms can benefit from access to high quality information and advice, guidance, counselling, and related services. An important feature of Business Link is the informed referral to other services provided locally by partners or other business support organisations. Young people starting a business will usually be referred to the local Enterprise Agency partner or the Prince's Youth Business Trust (PYBT). The PYBT helps young people set up in business by providing grants and loans and other help, including counselling and mentoring. Business Link partners will be aware of, or directly involved in, any local projects or schemes for start-up businesses. These will include New Deal, Single Regeneration Budget Challenge, and European structural funds. The New Deal for young unemployed people provides extensive help and guidance for those wishing to enter self-employment.

Innovation Strategies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what encouragement she is giving for the creation of innovation strategies in each English region. [47622]

Mr. Battle: Innovation is vital to competitiveness and my Department has taken a keen interest in the development of these strategies, which are bringing together the key public and private sector partners involved in developing and enhancing the innovative capacity of a region. Amongst other regional visits I recently spoke at the Innovation Forum in Wakefield in support of an example of successful partnership in Yorkshire and the Humber.

Government Offices are involved, with partners, in formulating and implementing the strategies and my Department is supporting them in this role. For example, my officials seek to facilitate the spread of best practice between regions.

In the future, the Regional Development Agencies will have responsibility for co-ordinating the regional innovation strategies and my Department will, of course, continue to provide advice and support as required.

Industrial and Commercial Development

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are her Department's relative priorities in securing and facilitating industrial and commercial development as between (a) the regions of England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland. [48900]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government's policies to boost competitiveness and prosperity extend to all parts of the United Kingdom. I work closely with my right. hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland to implement these policies.

Price Maintenance (Medicines)

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade she last met the Director General of Fair Trading to discuss resale price maintenance on over-the-counter medicines. [48219]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 June 1998]: I and my ministerial colleagues from time to time discuss a range of issues with the Director General of Fair Trading.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures her Department is taking to raise awareness among businesses of the range of Government funding available to small and medium enterprises for training purposes. [48534]

Mrs. Roche: Government funding to SMEs for training purposes is the responsibility of the Department for Education and Employment. However, the Department publicises funding available to SMEs for training purposes through its publications, such as the recently published Small Business Action Update, where companies are signposted to sources of funding such as TECs and other organisations.

Coal Mining

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's forecast of the change in the number of coal mining jobs in the United Kingdom over the next year. [48591]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: Levels of employment in the coal-mining industry will depend upon commercial decisions taken by the private sector coal companies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement about the results of the benefit review of child benefit. [49558]

Mr. Field: The review of Child Benefit is part of the Benefits Agency Security Strategy. All major benefits will be reviewed to establish the amount and extent of fraud and incorrectness within the system.

False claims for children allegedly in full-time further education and unreported living together make up the majority of Child Benefit fraud—53 per cent. and 23 per cent. respectively. Fraud was found in 1.7 per cent. of the caseload with an estimated annual loss of £51.6 million; 3.7 per cent. of the caseload had a high suspicion of fraud with an estimated annual loss of £132.5 million.

The Government take fraud against the Social Security system very seriously. If it goes unchecked, it undermines the integrity and purpose of the system. The system should encourage openness and honesty and the gateways to benefit should be clear and enforceable.

The Green Paper on Welfare Reform outlined proposals for improved detection, more effective deterrence and better prevention. The Child Benefit Centre is at present looking at ways to improve 16–19 year old benefit claims and Automated Credit Transfer checking methods.

The results of the benefit review of Child Benefit were aggregated from a random sample of 4,493 customers who had their benefit entitlement reviewed. The study showed 92.4 per cent. Child Benefit claims, like the majority of all Social Security claims, are claimed legitimately and administered accurately.

Contributions Agency Computer System

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures her Department is taking to ensure that widows, newly-retired pensioners and people entitled to incapacity benefit are not disadvantaged by the change to the Contributions Agency computer system and the consequent delay in processing applications until 3 August. [47242]

Mr. Denham: The Department is committed to minimising the impact on customers. There are contingency arrangements in place to ensure benefit continues to be paid.

The Department has made arrangements to ensure that Retirement Pension claim packs continue to be issued to those people approaching pension age. This will ensure that pension can continue to be awarded and put into payment.

During the change-over to the new computer system there will be limited access to National Insurance records. Therefore, widows will receive at least the full basic rate benefit including any increases for children.

The Departmental Central Index will be used to ensure that the vast majority of new claims to Incapacity Benefit can be dealt with and payment made in the normal way. New claimants may be asked to provide additional information to enable a speedy decision to be made on their claim.

Benefits (Minimum Wage)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will lose (a) zero, (b) more than zero but less than 10 per cent., (c) more than 10 per cent. but less than 20 per cent., (d) more than 20 per cent. but less than 30 per cent., (e) more than 30 per cent. but less than 40 per cent., (f) more than 40 per cent. but less than 50 per cent., (g) more than 50 per cent. but less than 60 per cent., (h) more than 60 per cent. but less than 70 per cent., (i) more than 70 per cent. but less than 80 per cent., (j) more than 80 per cent. but less than 90 per cent. and (k) more than 90 per cent. of the rise in family income resulting from a minimum wage set at £3.60 for adults and £3 for those aged 21 or under, as a result of offsetting reduction in means-tested and other benefits. [47524]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The measures announced in the budget reduce substantially the number of people facing high marginal deduction rates. The Working Families Tax Credit will reduce the rate of withdrawal from 70p in the pound in Family Credit, to 55p in the pound. As a result, over half a million families will see their marginal tax rates reduced and the number of families with rates over 70 per cent. will fall by two thirds. All families facing higher marginal tax rates will be better off, and they will see improved returns from working compared with being on benefit.

Not all beneficiaries of the minimum wage or all benefit recipients will experience a reduction in benefit as a consequence of the introduction of a minimum wage.

The information requested is set out in the table. Recipients of more than one benefit are counted against each benefit they receive, therefore figures for each benefit cannot be added together.

The number of beneficiaries in receipt of each benefit who experience an off-set of that benefit following the introduction of a minimum wage

| | Number of benefit units with reduction | | | |

| Greater than 100% | * | 0 | 0 | * |
| Total | 40,000 | 255,000 | 195,000 | 145,000 |

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, uprated to 1998–99 levels of caseloads, but with the October 1999–2000 tax and benefit structure imposed.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000, * denotes a figure less than 2,500. Figures may not sum due to rounding. Figures for Working Families Tax Credit are full year averages.
3. These estimates exclude a small number of recipients with a reduction in benefit due to an increase in non-dependant deductions, as a result of an increase in earnings of another household member in another benefit or non-benefit unit.
4. Estimates are based on the first-round effects of the minimum wage, no other factors are taken into account.
5. The information is not directly comparable with published data on marginal deduction rates within the tax/benefit system for a number of reasons, including (a) it measures the full effect of the minimum wage, not the marginal effect—it therefore includes floaters off benefit (b) it gives estimates for each benefit separately, rather than the overall impact on benefit units who may be in receipt of more than one benefit; and (c) it includes benefits paid to people working under 16 hours a week.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 7 May to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, copied to her Department, regarding savings and council tax benefit, (Ref. 3/3644/31). [49295]

Mr. Field: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 3 July.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans her Department has to record the ethnic origin of those applicants refused income support on the habitual residence test. [48321]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are currently reviewing all aspects of the habitual residence test, including the arrangements for monitoring details of those passing and failing the test. We hope to bring forward our recommendations later in the year.

Acquired Brain Injury

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account is taken of psychological and cognitive impairments arising from acquired brain injury in application of the all work test and the grant of incapacity benefit. [48319]

Mr. Denham: The all work test determines whether, as a result of disability arising solely from their medical condition, a person should be regarded as incapable of doing work of any kind for purposes of entitlement to incapacity benefits. The test assesses the effects of physical, sensory and mental disabilities in specified areas of activity.

The test is not applied to people with severe mental disabilities, who are identified early in the process from medical evidence, and exempted. People with less severe mental disabilities are assessed, by a specially trained doctor, in a wide range of activities relating to completion of tasks, daily living, coping with pressure and interaction with other people.

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the procedure by which people are appointed by her Department to social security tribunals. [48323]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department of Social Security does not have responsibility for appointing members of appeal tribunals (including Social Security Appeal Tribunals, Disability Appeal Tribunals and Medical Appeal Tribunals).

Power to appoint lay members to tribunal jurisdictions is vested in the President of the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS). Responsibility for appointing tribunal chairmen lies with the Lord Chancellor in England and Wales or the Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland. The constitution of particular appeal tribunals is specified in legislation (Social Security Administration Act 1992 and Schedule 6 to the Social Security Act 1998).

Housing Benefit

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amount of housing benefit expenditure in Scotland for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98, broken down into (a) the private rented sector, (b) housing association sector and (c) the public sector. [47976]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information available is set out in the table.

Scottish housing benefit expenditure

| | 1995–96 | 1996–97 |
|---|---|---|
| Private rented Sector | 197 | 199 |
| Housing Association Sector | 78 | 101 |
| Public Sector (Council and New Town Tenants) | 275 | 300 |
| All Housing Benefit | 550 | 600 |

Note:
Expenditure rounded to the nearest million
Source:
1. 1998–99 Social Security Departmental Record
2. Housing Benefit Management Information Sysiem (HBMIS) 1 per cent. samples

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will extend the Housing Benefit (General) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1997 (S.I. 1974) until the interdepartmental funding review has completed its report. [48008]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are considering an extension to the duration of these Regulations and we expect to make an announcement shortly.

Residential Care Allowance

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make the residential care allowance available to people in local authority homes as it is to those in private homes; and if she will give the reasons which underlie her decision. [48069]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer my hon. Friend to my Written Answer to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 448.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many benefit recipients are currently being required to co-operate with the CSA; and how many of these are resident in Derbyshire; [48455]

(2) what is the current average time taken (a) nationally and (b) in Derbyshire for the CSA to make assessments; [48454]

(3) how many deductions from earnings orders issued by the CSA are currently in force; and how many of these are for orders issued in Derbyshire; [48457]

(4) how many people resident in Derbyshire are being pursued for payment by the Child Support Agency; and what is the figure per 1,000 residents in the United Kingdom. [48456]

Mr. Keith Bradley: One of our key aims for the Child Support Agency is to ensure that more non resident parents pay the maintenance they owe. The regular payment of maintenance is central to our strategy as recognition of fathers' continuing responsibilities to their children; to help lone mothers move off income support into work; and to get more money to children in low income working families. We have been looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made. I refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security on 6 July 1998, Official Report, columns 739–54.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 6 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

I cannot provide precisely all the information that you have requested, but have provided as much as possible from the most recent information available.

The Agency is organised into 7 Business Units; figures are available at Business Unit level but not at county level. Derbyshire is dealt with by our Midlands Business Unit, for which information has been given.

All parents with care in receipt of a prescribed benefit (Income Support, Family Credit, Income-based Job Seekers Allowance and Disabled Working Allowance) have a requirement to co-operate with the Agency. The large majority of the Agency's live and assessed caseload relate to parents with care in receipt of these benefits.

The Department of Social Security Analytical Division publish quarterly a summary of statistics relating to child support. The last report was published on 14 May and showed at 28 February 1998 the Agency had a total of 662,000 parents with care with a full maintenance assessment; of which 564,000 (85%) were in receipt of one of these benefits and therefore required to co-operate with the Agency. The Midlands Business Unit had 108,000 parents with care with a full maintenance assessment, of which 94,000 (87%) were in receipt of a benefit.

Child Support Legislation has provisions known as 'Good Cause', which allows parents with care not to co-operate if the Agency finds that they have a good cause not to do so. This may be because we believe that there is a risk of harm or undue distress to the parent with care of any children living with them if we contact the non-resident parent.

From the launch of the Agency up until 28 February 1998 the Agency has investigated 669,953 cases were the parent with care had claimed Good Cause; 177,462 cases were accepted as having Good Cause for not co-operating with the Agency. This represents 26% of the cases investigated. Of the remaining cases, the Good Cause application is either withdrawn and the parent with care agrees to co-operate or a Reduced Benefit Direction is referred to Benefits Agency.

The imposition of a deduction from earnings order is considered when the non resident parent defaults on an agreement or refuses to come to an agreement. This step is taken as a last resort and every effort is made to secure the compliance of the non-resident parent before a deduction from earnings order is issued. Information on the number of deduction from orders "in force" is not collected, however information is available on the number of deduction from earnings orders issued from April 1993 to November 1997, details are shown below:

|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 2,600 |
| 1994–95 | 32,027 |
| 1995–96 | 52,931 |
| 1996–97 | 57,898 |
| | (9,146 from Midlands Business Unit) |
| 1997–98 (to 30.11.97) | 45,273 |
| | (8,320 from Midland Business Unit) |

We are increasingly becoming more effective in issuing deduction from earnings orders where the non-resident parent fails to make a maintenance payment or reach an agreement for repayment. This is demonstrated by the increase in the average monthly number of orders issued; from 4,825 in 1996/97 to 5,659 in 1997/98.

The Agency does not collect information on average processing times for the clearance of maintenance assessments. The Agency measures the clearance of maintenance assessments against a target set by the Secretary of State. For 1998/99 the target is that 65% of new maintenance applications be cleared within 22 weeks. At 31 May 1998 the Agency had cleared 67% of maintenance applications within 22 weeks and the Midlands Business Unit had cleared 59% of maintenance applications within 22 weeks.

In 1997/98 the Agency cleared 595,000 maintenance applications—an increase of two-thirds on the 357,000 cleared in 1996/97. At the end of May 1998 our live and assessed caseload stood at 784,160, compared with 609,800 in May 1997 (an increase of 29%) and is expected to rise to around 1.2m by 2003/04.

At 30 April 1998, the Midlands Business Unit had 128,160 live and assessed cases. At the same time, that Business Unit's work-on-hand stood at 37,907; approximately 15,000 of which were backlog cases.

Any maintenance application which is over 52 weeks old is considered to form part of the Agency's backlog.

The Agency has developed and is now implementing a strategy for meeting its undertaking to clear the backlog. All Business Units have put in place operational plans which will guide them towards the achievement of our stated objective of clearing the backlog by 31 March 1999.

The total caseload for the Midlands Business Unit of 166,067 equates to around 3 cases per 1,000 people, based on a GB population of around 57.2 million.

I hope this is helpful.

DEFENCE

Anthrax

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of (a) Navy, (b) Army; (c) Air Force and (d) other Ministry of Defence personnel (i) are fully vaccinated and (ii) have commenced a vaccination programme against anthrax bacteria; and if he will make a statement. [31473]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 26 February 1998]: A small number of Service personnel and MOD civilians will have received anthrax vaccinations either in connection with research into protection against biological weapons being undertaken at CBD Porton Down and its predecessors, or in connection with arms control activities. Details of vaccinations received by Service and other MOD personnel are normally held only on individual medical records and not recorded centrally.

Many Service personnel and MOD civilians who took part in the Gulf conflict are likely to have commenced a programme of immunisation against anthrax in early 1991. Records relating to this vaccination programme are incomplete. So far as MOD is aware, none of these personnel would have completed a full course of immunisation, because operations concluded before the fourth dose of vaccine would have been scheduled.

On 3 March this year, the Ministry of Defence announced that UK Service personnel and MOD civilians posted to the Gulf region were being offered immunisation against anthrax. Arrangements have been made for the uptake of anthrax vaccine under this programme to be reported centrally. So far an estimated 3,879 UK Service and MOD personnel have been offered immunisation and 1,428 are recorded as having commenced a course of anthrax vaccinations. This figure comprises 384 Royal Navy personnel, 46 Royal Fleet Auxiliary, 144 Army personnel, 847 RAF personnel and 7 MOD civilians. This amounts to 0.85 per cent. of all Royal Navy personnel, 0.13 per cent. of all Army personnel, 1.49 per cent. of all RAF personnel and 0.05 per cent. of all MOD civilians, including those in the Royal Fleet Auxiliary. Individuals who have chosen to be immunised will not receive the fourth dose of vaccine, and thereby complete the current programme, until November this year at the earliest.

Ship Hulls

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the differences between (a) military and (b) civilian specifications of ship hulls. [48985]

Mr. Spellar: Warships are required to operate in very different ways and conditions compared with commercial vessels and also need to be able to withstand damage sustained in action. Naval engineering standards adopted for the construction of warships reflect this and incorporate some indispensable military features such as shock precautions, magazine safety, fire safety and watertight subdivision. Commercial standards are however applicable to some areas of warship design and construction, where their use offers cost savings and is compatible with the vessel's operational role.

RAF Pilots

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of annual flying hours undertaken by RAF pilots in each of the last 10 years. [44129]

Mr. Field: The information requested is given in the table and has been broken down by aircraft type. Figures are available only from 1991. Information prior to this date can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48878]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is given in the following table.

Full time equivalent

Territorial Army

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of each Territorial Army battalion in 1997–98. [43643]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 9 June 1998, c. 489–90]: I regret to inform my hon. Friend that there were errors in my original response. The correct answer to this question is given.

There are 33 Territorial Army infantry battalions and these are listed in the table together with their identifiable costs for the year 1997–98. The figures given are for manpower only, and include the costs of TA personnel, (including bounty payments), Regular Army, civilian and Non Regular Personnel Staff employed by the units. Other costs are not separated from wider Army financial provision and cannot therefore be directly attributed to particular TA units.

HEALTH

Occupational Health

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the National Health Service trusts in each region with access to an occupational health service, indicating which are led by a consultant in occupational health. [43739]

Mr. Milburn: These figures are not held centrally. All National Health Service trusts should provide their staff with access to a competent and confidential occupational health service. A number of trusts buy in their occupational health provision from other trusts.

Drugs (Parallel Trading)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the revenue impact of parallel trading in drugs. [47801]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not collected on which such an estimate could be made.

NHS Staff

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) cost of extra doctors and nurses required to staff the extra 2,000 beds to be opened this year. [48059]

Mr. Milburn: This is a matter for local employers to determine in the light of local needs and priorities.

Continence Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the sums announced for the reduction of NHS waiting lists health authorities are permitted to use to reduce waiting lists for the provision of continence supplies. [48307]

Mr. Milburn: All health authorities should ensure provision of continence services from their general allocation. The extra £500 million that we announced on 18 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1290–92, will be used to tackle waiting lists for hospital treatment. It will fund record increases in the number of surgical and medical sessions, targeted investment in primary care, community, mental health and social services and steps to modernise the waiting list system.

Student Bursaries

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average bursary given to (a) nursing students, (b) medical students and (c) dental students in the most recent year for which figures are available; what calculation is made for additional earned income within the formulae for calculating such grants; and if he will make a statement. [48444]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service currently provides bursaries for nursing students undertaking a pre-registration diploma programme (Project 2000). Information on the average bursary for nursing students is not held centrally. However, the current rates are:

| | London | Elsewhere |
|---|---|---|
| Age under 26 at start of course | 5,230 | 4,450 |
| Age 26 and over at start of course | 5,785 | 5,010 |

The bursary is non-means tested and therefore there is no calculation for additional earned income.

Medical and dental students do not currently receive NHS bursaries. However, for those who enter training from 1 September 1998, the NHS will meet tuition costs and fund means tested bursaries in years 5 and beyond.

Leigh Infirmary

Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Leigh infirmary. [48446]

Mr. Milburn: Decisions concerning Leigh Infirmary are the responsibility of Wigan and Leigh Health Services NHS Trust, in consultation with Wigan and Bolton Health Authority. We understand that, with the support of the health authority, the trust has invested considerably in the Infirmary in recent years and that its plans for the future include the provision of elective surgery, mental health services and a nurse-led minor injuries unit.

Dental Health

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population over (a) 30, (b) 40, (c) 50 and (d) 60 years in each health authority area in England have no natural teeth. [48601]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. Data which were collected in the Adult Dental Health Survey conducted in 1988 are available for southern England (SE), the Midlands (M) and northern England (NE) and show that the following percentages of people had no natural teeth.

Percentage

| Age | SE | M | NE |
|---|---|---|---|
| 25–34 | — | 1 | 2 |
| 35–44 | 1 | 6 | 4 |
| 45–54 | 8 | 23 | 22 |
| 55–64 | 22 | 40 | 53 |
| 65 and over | 57 | 69 | 80 |

Residential Care

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the guidance issued to local authorities on the funding arrangements for residential care as regards (a) individuals whose ordinary residence is established and (b) individuals placed by another authority; and if he will make a statement. [48907]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans at present to review the existing guidance to local authorities on ordinary residence. However, we intend to issue guidance shortly that will clarify the responsibilities of local authorities for people requiring residential care who have, or who are likely to receive, capital in excess of the upper capital limit of £16,000 and who may be placed, or move to, a different local authority area. This new guidance will assist authorities in determining responsibility for individuals who enter residential/nursing home care outside their usual area of residence.

Dementia

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) of 16 June 1997, Official Report, column 20, concerning dementia research, how much in each of the last five years his Department has spent on dementia research; and how much is allocated in the current financial year. [49329]

Mr. Boateng: Spending on research into dementia in the last five years and an estimate for the current year are:

£000

| Year | Policy research programme | National Health Service research and development programme |
|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 181 | 23 |
| 1994–95 | 196 | 75 |
| 1995–96 | 167 | 187 |
| 1996–97 | 91 | 421 |
| 1997–98 | 198 | 554 |
| 1998–99 | 292 | 373 |

The figures for 1998–99 are estimates. The figures for the NHS research and development programme are approximate.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 162, concerning dementia, what conclusions he has reached concerning national guidance on new medicines for Alzheimer's disease. [49331]

Mr. Boateng: Guidance on anti-dementia drugs has been prepared by the Standing Medical Advisory Committee and was issued on 30 April 1998 to health authority directors of public health and National Health Service trust medical directors in England.

Medicines Control Agency (Freedom of Information)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Medicines Control Agency review of the impact of the Freedom of Information White Paper will be published. [49307]

Ms Jowell: The Select Committee on Public Administration wrote to the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) in December 1997 asking various questions about the impact of the Freedom of Information White Paper on the MCA. A copy of the Agency's reply of 9 February 1998 has been published by the Select Committee. Since then the MCA has continued to review its policies to identify what further action can be taken to make more information available in advance of the freedom of information legislation.

Carers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 June 1997, Official Report, columns 529–30, (1) concerning the health problems of carers, when the study of carer burdens and associated costs in dementia care over time will be published; [49330]

(2) concerning the health problems facing carers, when the results of his Department's research into outcomes of social care for adults will be published; and if he will make a statement about interim findings from the research. [49332]

Mr. Boateng: The Department has commissioned a major new research initiative on outcomes of social care for adults, consisting of a linked series of studies which began earlier this year. The individual projects are due to last for between two and three years. Copies of the first issue of the programme newsletter will be placed in the Library.

Drugs Licences

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to encourage co-operation between pharmaceutical companies applying to license new drugs. [49306]

Ms Jowell: We encourage collaboration between companies where it is appropriate and likely to be in the interests of public health. However, decisions about co-operation must be for the companies themselves.

Medicines Act

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968. [49308]

Ms Jowell: We are aware that Section 118 of the Medicines Act, which currently governs disclosure of official information about medicines in the United Kingdom, is often criticised for encouraging excessive secrecy. Indeed, it is one of over 200 pieces of legislation which we are currently reviewing to see whether it is appropriate to repeal them, once new freedom of information legislation is in place.

Heroin

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1998, Official Report, columns 464–65, what assessment he has made of the information supplied in the conference in the United States in June on the Swiss programme for using injectable heroin to reduce drug use and drug-related crime. [49185]

Ms Jowell: The Swiss programme showed that it is feasible to use diamorphine (pharmaceutical heroin) under strictly controlled conditions as part of a comprehensive social and psychological intervention. We were already aware of these basic findings and no new information appears to have emerged at the conference.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by his Department on research into ME in 1997–98; and what spending is planned for 1998–99. [49460]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on 27 April 1998, Official Report, columns 53–54.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assume responsibility from the social services budget for the funding of individuals who need nursing home care. [48958]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to remove the duty placed on local authorities by the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to arrange nursing home placements for people whom they have assessed as needing such care.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter dated 8 June regarding primary care groups. [49364]

Mr. Milburn: I replied to my hon. Friend on 6 July 1998.

Family Planning

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into differences in the prescription of contraceptive methods between GP-based and other family planning clinics. [48968]

Ms Jowell: The Department's policy research programme and the central National Health Service research and development programmes are not currently supporting any research into differences in the prescription of contraceptive methods between general practitioner-based and other family planning clinics. Records are not, however, held centrally of all research carried out in the NHS. While related research is evaluated when received by the Department, we are unaware of recent research specifically covering differences of prescription/supply of contraceptives from various sources.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

7. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received on Government targets on the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions by 2010. [47626]

Mr. Meacher: I have discussed the Government's targets for tackling the threat of climate change with a great many people. This summer, we will publish a consultation paper on policy options for meeting those targets.

Regeneration

8. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what organisations are being set up in Dorset to replace local economic regeneration organisations, with particular reference to work formerly carried out by the south Dorset economic partnership; and what funds are being made available by the Government for these initiatives. [47627]

Angela Eagle: Bournemouth, Dorset and Poole Economic Partnership has been established as a coherent group for Dorset and is developing an economic strategy for the whole of Dorset. The financial implications of the strategy are as yet unknown.

Local Government Finance

9. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the local government finance review. [47628]

Mr. Raynsford: On 30 March, the Government published three consultation papers:

Improving local financial accountability;

Business rates; and Capital finance.

The consultation period closed on 1 June. We are currently considering the responses and will take account of these in preparing our planned White Paper on modernising local government.

Business Rates

10. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to return control of business rates to local authorities. [47630]

Ms Armstrong: Our recent consultation paper "Modernising local government: Business rates" contained a proposal for a local supplement on the business rate. The consultation period finished on 1 June. We are now considering the many responses we have received. We shall announce our conclusions in a White Paper to be published this summer.

11. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he intends to take in order to protect small businesses from disproportionate increases in non-domestic rates; and if he will make a statement. [47631]

Mr. Raynsford: Our consultation paper, "Modernising Local Government: Business Rates" looked at options for giving local authorities a measure of local discretion over the business rates, but made it clear that any local arrangements would contain safeguards against authorities increasing rates disproportionately. It also invited views on whether we should change the rating system to limit the rates bills of small businesses. We are currently considering responses to the consultation paper and will announce our conclusions in a White Paper to be published later this year.

16. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy on local business rates. [47636]

Mr. Raynsford: Our recent consultation paper "Modernising Local Government: Business Rates" contained a proposal for a local supplement on the business rate. The consultation period finished on 1 June. We are now considering the many responses we have received. We shall announce our conclusions in a White Paper to be published this summer.

Regional Development Agencies

12. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to promote sustainable development with respect to regional development agencies. [47632]

Angela Eagle: Subject to the passage of the Regional Development Agencies Bill, currently in another place, regional development agencies will have a statutory purpose to contribute to the achievement of sustainable development in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will revise the boundaries of his proposed regional development agencies to create an agency based exclusively on the counties of Worcestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire and Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement. [47629]

Angela Eagle: Regional development agencies will serve the same areas as the Government Offices for the Regions. They will need to co-operate with other agencies in addressing issues which extend beyond regional boundaries.

Homelessness

13. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to tackle youth homelessness. [47633]

Ms Armstrong: Too many young people, starting on the road to independence, have their lives and development blighted by the lack of a suitable home. To tackle this problem, I have invited the voluntary sector and Local Government to join Central Government in a Youth Homelessness Action Partnership. I will be chairing the inaugural meeting on Tuesday 14 July.

Workplace Car Parks

14. Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers the Greater London authority will have to levy parking charges on workplace car parks. [47634]

Mr. Raynsford: Our White Paper "A Mayor and Assembly for London" (Cm 3897) said that, if new powers to enable road user charging or a parking levy were made available, the Mayor, working through the new body Transport for London, would be well placed to plan or implement the use of such powers. The Government's conclusions on whether to introduce the necessary enabling legislation will be set out in the forthcoming transport White Paper.

Coalfields Task Force

17. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the recently published coalfields task force report. [47637]

Ms Angela Eagle: The Deputy Prime Minister will give the Government's initial response to the Coalfields Task Force Report's recommendations at the Coalfields Conference to be held at Ollerton Miners' Welfare on Monday 13 July. In the autumn, the Government will launch a detailed programme of action for the coalfields.

39. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the coalfields task force regarding road links to the former coalfields in the Bolsover/Mansfield area. [47661]

Dr. Strang: The Coalfield Task Force's Report was published on 18 June. The Report listed seven "regeneration road" schemes which the Task Force believe would be of major significance in opening up employment sites in the old coalfields. Two of these roads are in the Bolsover/Mansfield area—they are the Mansfield Ashfield Regeneration Route, Nottinghamshire, and the new M1 Junction 29A at Markham Colliery, Derbyshire.

Worcestershire

18. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the Worcestershire county council document "Shaping the New Worcestershire"; and if he will make a statement. [47638]

Mr. Raynsford: "Shaping the New Worcestershire" is a document seeking views of local people on a number of housing and job-related development options to inform preparation of the Structure Plan for the new County. This is very much in line with the Secretary of State's statement in the House on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25, when he said that he wanted local people to be consulted as early as possible in the process so that they fully understand the consequences of decisions on releasing land for housing and can have a say in the choice of locations. My Department has chosen not to comment on the options at this stage but we expect to examine the Council's definitive proposal's at the next stage of the Structure Plan process.

Leaseholders

19. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received from associations of leaseholders representing former council tenants. [47639]

Mr. Raynsford: Since May 1997, my Department has received 13 letters from associations of leaseholders representing former council tenants, either sent directly or via their Member of Parliament. We have had a similar number of telephone calls.

Endocrine-disrupting Chemicals

20. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he plans to take to control endocrine-disrupting chemicals. [47640]

Angela Eagle: Use of a number of the endocrine-disrupting chemicals under debate are already banned or restricted (for example, tributyltin, DDT). The risks from others are being assessed through the European Community Existing Substances Regulations (for example, nonylphenol, bisphenol A, several phthalates) which may result in the need for restrictions on their marketing and use.

International efforts are underway to agree guidelines by which endocrine-disrupting chemicals can be identified. When these are in place, the risks from chemicals identified as endocrine disrupters can be assessed and appropriate measures taken to reduce these risks if necessary on a precautionary basis.

My Department's forthcoming strategic review of the sustainable use of chemicals will examine policy on all chemicals in the environment, including endocrine disrupters. Earlier this year, the Environment Agency issued a consultation document proposing an Agency Strategy on endocrine-disrupting chemicals. This examined possible approaches within its duties and powers which could be taken by the Agency given the current uncertainties in our understanding of the issue. The consultation period ended on 30 April and the Agency will finalise its strategy by the end of the year.

Newcastle Green Belt

21. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that the extra 2,500 houses proposed for Newcastle's green belt do not undermine regeneration prospects in the central and western areas of the inner city. [47642]

Mr. Raynsford: Until a master plan for development of land deleted from the Green Belt in the adopted Newcastle UDP has been widely consulted upon, it is inappropriate for development to commence. Both plans will ensure a phased release of development land which will ensure that regeneration of Newcastle's inner areas is not adversely affected.

Landfill

22. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the reduction of household waste going to landfill as a result of the increase in landfill levy in the Budget. [47643]

Angela Eagle: The recent review of the landfill tax indicated that it is already having some impact on behaviour but that the rate needs to be higher to ensure a significant increase in waste recycling, recovery, and minimisation. I therefore welcome the Chancellor's decision to increase the standard rate of the tax from £7 to £10 from 1 April 1999. I expect that the immediate impact on household waste will not be substantial, simply because some Local Authorities are tied into long-term disposal contracts, but that the longer-term impact will be significant.

Water Meters

23. Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding Thames Water making a charge for the installation of water meters only to certain types of properties; and if he will make a statement. [47644]

Angela Eagle: My Department has received numerous representations regarding Thames Water's metering policy. The cost of meter installation is one of the issues considered in our review of water charging in England and Wales. We recognise that, for some customers, meters can be an attractive option and in our consultation paper 'Water Charging in England and Wales—A New Approach' we propose that in future domestic customers should have the choice of a meter, free of charge, if it suits their needs.

Emissions

24. Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to ensure his Department plays its part in reducing carbon dioxide and greenhouse gas emissions to the Government's target levels. [47645]

Mr. Meacher: We have placed the environment at the heart of Government. Later this summer, we will publish our climate change consultation paper which will build on the outcome of initiatives such as the integrated transport policy energy review and measures in the Budget and consider further options to deliver emission reductions.

Wind Turbines

25. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to revise his policy on the erection of wind turbines. [47646]

Mr. Raynsford: Our policy towards the development of wind turbines remains as set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 22, 'Renewable Energy'. That provides guidance to decision makers on a range of land use planning considerations relevant to the siting of wind turbines. It is necessary to consider both the immediate impact of renewable energy projects on the local environment and their wider contribution to secure sustainable energy supplies and to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases.

Council Tax

26. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on council tax charges on second homes. [47647]

Mr. Raynsford: Since the election, we have received 84 representations about the council tax discount for second homes, and in response to the consultation exercise we received a further 40 representations. Of these, 105 are in favour of the abolition of the 50 per cent. discount.

Thames Gateway

27. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the prospects for regeneration in the Thames gateway area. [47648]

Angela Eagle: The Thames Gateway area provides some of the main opportunities for development and regeneration in the South East. A number of substantial developments have already taken place, others are in progress and more in prospect, which will produce significant regeneration benefits for the area.

A key factor in realising the full potential of the area is the completion of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. The link underpins the strategy for the Thames Gateway with international stations at Stratford and at Ebbsfleet, both within the Gateway area, and at King's Cross/St Pancras.

An assessment carried out in 1992 put a value of £500 million on the regeneration benefits of the link. A recent re-assessment by my Department suggests that the link would produce regeneration benefits of about £650 million in the areas around the three stations. This is broadly in line with the earlier estimate, after allowing for inflation. If we were to try and deliver the same level of benefits through regeneration programmes, it could cost around £1 billion at today's prices.

Fishing (Safety)

34. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many lives have been lost at sea in the fishing industry in each of the last three years; and what measures he proposes to improve the safety record of the industry. [47656]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Nineteen fishermen were lost at sea in 1995; 20 in 1996, and 29 in 1997.

A number of measures are in hand to improve the safety record of the fishing industry. A joint initiative with the fishing industry organisations is under way to reduce accidents and encourage positive attitude to safety amongst fishermen. Regulations implementing EC Directives on occupational health and safety on board fishing vessels came into force earlier this year. Work is continuing with industry on the development of a Code of Safe Practice for smaller fishing vessels.

43. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to modify the rules and regulations governing the occupational safety of the crews of United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels. [47665]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The occupational safety of crews in the United Kingdom fishing vessels is being pursued through regulations which implement EC health and safety directives. Some regulations, including the Merchant Shipping and Fishing Vessel (Health and Safety at Work) Regulations 1997, are already in force. Further regulations will be introduced later this year.

Airports

35. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the financial arrangements for local authority-owned airports. [47657]

Dr. Strang: Our proposal to free financially sound local authority airport companies from the controls over their borrowing has been warmly welcomed.

Rail Network

36. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of the rail network. [47658]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our proposals for improving the regulation of the railways will be set out in our forthcoming White Paper on integrated transport. We will establish a new strategic rail authority to provide clear, coherent and accountable regulation of the network, and ensure that the railways are run firmly in the public interest.

40. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the reliability of train services between England and Wales. [47662]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We recognise that delays and cancellation have been disrupting many services into Wales, particularly those provided by Great Western. The Franchising Director has recently imposed a performance penalty system on Great Western to incentivise better performance.

Eurostar

37. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he is making on securing fast regional Eurostar rail services. [47659]

Dr. Strang: The consortium chosen by LCR to operate Eurostar have been asked to review urgently the feasibility of regional Eurostar services, and to put proposals to the Government before the end of the year.

Speed Limits

38. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the advantages of reducing the speed limits in and around built-up areas, with particular reference to areas close to schools. [47660]

Dr. Strang: I receive a considerable number of letters from people seeking a reduction in the 30 mph urban speed limit particularly near schools. We have announced proposals for local authorities to decide 20 mph limits for themselves. Consultation on the details ended on 30 June.

Rail Operators (Penalties)

41. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is planning to introduce which would penalise train operators who consistently fail to meet the core elements of the bid on which they won their franchise. [47663]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Successful bidders are now bound by the contractual obligation in their franchise agreements. The Franchising Director has contractual and statutory powers to enforce the performance of these obligations. These can include financial penalties and, as a last resort, termination of the franchise.

The Government are reviewing the regulation of the railway as part of our overall review of transport policy, and our proposals for the long-term reform of the railways will be published in our forthcoming White Paper. In the interim, we have issued the Franchising Director with revised objectives, instructions and guidance which require him to secure a progressive improvement in the quality of passenger and station services and to manage existing franchise agreements in a manner which promotes passengers' interest.

Light Rapid Transit Scheme (Nottingham)

42. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the proposed light rapid transit scheme in the Nottingham conurbation. [47664]

Dr. Strang: Since 1 May 1997, the promoters of Nottingham Express Transit have met with DETR Ministers or officials on 13 occasions. We have also received 35 written representations on the subject.

West Coast Main Line

44. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the future of services on the west coast main line. [47666]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 276–77.

London Underground

45. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much private sector investment he expects to attract to London Underground in the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [47667]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The timing and level of investment under a private finance deal is the responsibility of the private sector partner—the contract will specify the demanding performance targets to be achieved, not the investment needed to achieve them. However, London Underground estimate that, for the next five years, the level of private investment in the underground which should result from deals already signed, or close to signature, is as shown in the table.

| Year | Investment |
|---|---|
| 1998–99 | 115 |
| 1999–2000 | 57 |
| 2000–01 | 56 |
| 2001–02 | 58 |
| 2002–03 | 41 |

In addition, the innovative Public/Private Partnership we have announced should bring in a further £7 billion of private investment over 15 years.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the names of companies who bid for consultancy, legal and financial work on the new financial arrangements for London Underground, indicating the value of each bid. [48647]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A notice was posted in the Official Journal of the European Community on 6 April seeking firms to provide advice, jointly to the London Transport and the Government, on implementation of a Public/Private partnership for London Underground.

Twenty expressions of interest were received in respect of legal advice. Tenders were invited from, and submitted by, the following six firms:

Ashurst Morris Crisp
Denton Hall
Freshfields
Herbert Smith
Slaughter and May Wilde Sapte.

Nineteen expressions of interest were received in respect of financial advice. Tenders were invited from nine firms, and were submitted by the following:

Coopers and Lybrand
KPMG
Lazard Brothers
Price Waterhouse
Societe Generale.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not possible to state the value of each bid.

Freshfields and Price Waterhouse (now PricewaterhouseCoopers) were selected as, respectively, legal and financial advisers. Competitions for other advisers are currently in progress.

National Air Traffic Services

46. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what mechanisms will be established to ensure the safety of air passengers following the privatisation of National Air Traffic Services. [47668]

Dr. Strang: The UK's safety record is second to none. It will be our concern, and that of NATS to ensure that this remains the case. Under our proposal for a Public Private Partnership, Air Traffic Control safety regulation will be made independent of Air Traffic Control service provision. The safety regulation will ensure that safety remains the overriding priority.

East-west Rail Link

47. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions the Minister for Transport in London has had concerning the east-west rail link. [47669]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I met representatives of the East-West Rail Consortium and Railtrack in February, who briefed me on the project. I requested a detailed business case from them, and subsequently officials from my Department and OPRAF have sought sufficient details to carry out a proper assessment of the project against the interim Planning Criteria published by OPRAF last November. This assessment is still in progress.

Aircraft Noise

48. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps have been taken to reduce noise caused by older aircraft. [47670]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The UK has consistently pressed for higher noise standards internationally. In the 1980s, we implemented the removal of non-noise certificated aircraft at the earliest date allowed by international agreements. Subsequently, we argued for phasing out jet aircraft meeting the Chapter 2 standard. This is now implemented in an EC directive, ensuring that, from 1 April 2002, such aircraft will not normally be used in Europe. At the Transport Council in June, we secured political agreement on bringing forward measures against aircraft which have been recertificated to meet by only a bare margin the current noise standard (Chapter 3). The UK was also in the lead in proposing stricter standards for single-engined, light, propeller-driven aircraft. We anticipate that this will be shortly agreed internationally.

Rural Bus Services

49. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) conditions have been imposed on and (b) guidance has been given to local authorities on the extra money for rural bus services. [47671]

Dr. Strang: The proposed conditions which will apply to use of this money by English local authorities are set out in a Special Grant Report under Section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. This Report was laid before the House on 17 June. A copy of the associated guidance issued to local authorities has been placed in the Library.

Central Railway

50. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment has he made of the new proposals of Central Railway plc. [47672]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No proposals have been received from Central Railway plc during the term of this Government.

A419-A417

51. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding noise on the new A419-A417. [47673]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received over 130 representations, a number from the same people. The Highways Agency have been asked to look at the situation regarding noise from the A419-A417 and have reported to Ministers. Discussions are now taking place and we will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Vehicle Emissions Testing

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what have been the results to date of roadside vehicle emissions testing in the seven local authority trial areas. [47635]

Mr. Meacher: Statistics provided to date by the seven local authorities trialling the new powers to carry out roadside vehicle emissions enforcement show that, of almost 8,000 vehicles tested, 1,300 (16%) were found to be exceeding the prescribed emissions standards. The authorities have issued 450 fixed penalty notices to the drivers of the most seriously polluting vehicles (over 5% of the total vehicles checked).

Housing (London)

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many affordable rented homes (a) have been provided and (b) are planned under the rules applying from PPG Note 3 and Circular 13/96 in Lambeth, Southwark and Wandsworth boroughs; [48574]

(2) what assessment he has made of the amount of on-site affordable housing units provided under Circular 13/96 and PPG 3 in the boroughs of Southwark, Lambeth and Wandsworth; and if he will make a statement; [48577]

(3) if he will list (a) the number of units of accommodation given planning permission on the riverside stretches of Southwark, Lambeth and Wandsworth boroughs, (b) the cash in lieu payments for the same and (c) the number of on-site units of affordable housing provided for the same since 1996. [48578]

Mr. Caborn: This information is not held centrally.

River Thames

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will amend the guidance to local authorities on designation of the River Thames from its present status as an area of special character to full conservation area status; [48580]

(2) what measures he proposes to ensure that the special character of the Thames is protected; [48571]

(3) if he will review the (a) nature and (b) scale of development currently underway on the banks of the Thames; [48579]

(4) if he will make a statement on development along the banks of the River Thames. [48573]

Mr. Caborn: Strategic Planning Guidance for the River Thames, published in February 1997, designates the stretch of river from Hampton to Crayford Ness as a Thames Policy Area. This recognises the special character of the Thames as it flows through London and carries with it more detailed guidance for local planning authorities to follow in framing their Unitary Development Plans and reaching decisions on planning applications. The Guidance recognises the strategic importance of the river within London's urban environment and the many conflicting pressures placed upon it. It sets out a series of policies and objectives for Thames-side development, and aims to achieve a greater degree of consistency between riparian authorities in their implementation of policy.

Renewed interest in the river has led to an upturn in development proposals. These have the potential to bring new viability to the riverside and make a significant contribution to the renaissance of the Thames and London, especially where the local environment is degraded and in need of improvement. Developments incorporating a mix of uses can bring employment opportunities and a range of new activities. But they must be judged in terms of sustainability and how they relate to the local context. Thames Guidance places a great emphasis on the need to protect local amenity and the successful co-existence of the broad range of functions which the river serves. Over-exploitation of the current commercial interest in development would not satisfy these objectives.

Thames Guidance includes measures to secure a high quality of design for riverside development. It places responsibility both on the local planning authority and developer for the preparation of design briefs which assess the impact of a proposed development in relation to a wide range of factors, including its all-important relationship with the local context. In addition, the Government have indicated that we will review the possibility of additional Guidance on high buildings and strategic views in London following the receipt of advice on these issues from the London Planning Advisory Committee.

The designation of the Thames Policy Area for the entire stretch of river and its immediate hinterland as it flows through London confers a special status which did not exist prior to Thames Guidance. The Thames Policy Area recognises the strategic significance of the river and the need for a consistent approach to policy formulation and decision-making. Through the Unitary Development Plan review process, riparian authorities are strengthening and refining their policies relating to the river to reflect the additional requirements placed on them by Thames Guidance, and to incorporate the Thames Policy Area within their plans. We believe this special planning designation is the most appropriate way of dealing with the varied character and uses of the riverside environment. Although some stretches of the riverside also have conservation area status, we do not believe this would be appropriate along the entire length of the river in London.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria he uses in deciding to call in development applications in the Thames-side area. [48570]

Mr. Caborn: The policy on call-in is as set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 1: General Policy and Principles, Paragraph 7 of Annex D.

This explains that the policy on calling in planning applications is to be very selective and such action is generally taken only where issues of more than local importance are involved. Examples are applications which raise significant architectural and urban design issues, which could have wide effects beyond their immediate locality, which give rise to substantial national or regional controversy, which may conflict with national policy on important matters, or where the interests of foreign governments may be involved.

Pensioners (Tenancies)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how many pensioners live in (a) pre-1989 regulated tenancies in the private sector and (b) pre-1989 housing association secure tenancies. [48554]

Ms Armstrong: The Survey of English Housing gives the following estimates:

Pensioner households with regulated and secure tenancies in England: annual averages, year ending March 1997

|---|---|
| Pre-1989 private sector regulated tenancies | 166,000 |
| Pre-1989 housing association secure tenancies | 137,000 |

Notes:

1. Pensioner householders are defined as those where the householder, and their partner if they have one, are both over the State pension age, that is 65 for men and 60 for women
2. Like all estimates from samples surveys, these figures are subject to sampling variability

Floodlights

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make the floodlighting of buildings the subject of planning consent; and if he will make a statement. [48572]

Mr. Caborn: Local authorities may attach conditions to planning permissions for new developments and these may extend to the design and operation of lighting systems. For existing buildings, however, the courts have ruled that floodlighting cannot be a planning matter, because light itself is not "development" and there would be no feasible means of assessing it for enforcement purposes. We give advice on floodlighting in Planning Policy Guidance Note 17 'Sport and Recreation'. The guide issued last year jointly by my Department and the Countryside Commission, 'Lighting in the Countryside: Towards good practice', also gives guidance on what can be done to lessen the intrusive effects of lighting schemes associated with development.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48848]

Angela Eagle: The Department has a business continuity/disaster recovery plan which is managed by the Departmental Security Officer. The plan is reviewed annually. It is intended that the plan will take account of Year 2000 issues in its iteration for 1999/2000.

The Department's Agencies are in a similar position to the Centre; contingency plans are in place, or are being developed as appropriate, in good time to address Year 2000 issues.

The DETR Programme Manager is monitoring the position across the whole department, including its associated bodies, as part of his responsibility for assuring business continuity through the Year 2000 date change and beyond.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that railway signalling and other electrical equipment involved in rail safety is millennium compliant; and by what date that compliance will be achieved. [48641]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is the responsibility of the railway operators to ensure that all equipment is safe up to and beyond the millennium. The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE's) Railway Inspectorate (HMRI) is closely monitoring the state of preparedness of the industry.

All the railway operators are assessing their systems for millennium compliance and, where necessary, developing programmes of remedial action. Railtrack in particular is devoting considerable resources both to ensuring compliance in its own systems and to co-ordinating the activities of the train operators on its network.

In practice, the signalling and other safety critical systems which have been assessed to date have been found to be largely millennium compliant, and it is anticipated that all safety critical systems will have been assessed and any deficiencies remedied well before the millennium.

The Government already have in place a number of mechanisms to ensure that both public and private sector service suppliers are taking appropriate action to prevent damage from the failure of electronic systems. A ministerial sub-committee is also actively reviewing the state of preparedness in all sectors of the national infrastructure including London Transport and the Rail industry.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposals for new financial arrangements for London Underground on its work to ensure millennium compliance within the organisation. [48634]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend has made no proposals for partial privatisation of London Underground. For the past two years, London Underground and London Transport have been progressing a comprehensive project to ensure their business is year 2000 compliant. Whilst the project is ongoing, they assure me that they are meeting their objectives and will be taking account of any implications for millennium compliance of the work to take forward the Public Private Partnership for the Underground.

This Government already have in place a number of mechanisms to ensure that both public and private sector service suppliers are taking appropriate action to prevent damage from the failure of electronic systems. A ministerial sub-committee is also actively reviewing the state of preparedness in all sectors of the national infrastructure including London Transport and the Rail industry.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has undertaken concerning the millennium compliance of the computer systems used in the operation of the Channel Tunnel, Le Shuttle and Eurostar; and if he will make a statement. [49448]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for the operators of the Channel Tunnel. However, in accordance with its obligation to advise and assist the Intergovernmental Commission with all matters relating to safety in the Tunnel, the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority has been discussing the issue in its regular meetings with Eurotunnel.

This Government already have in place a number of mechanisms to ensure that both public and private sector service suppliers are taking appropriate action to prevent damage from the failure of electronic systems. A ministerial sub-committee is also actively reviewing the state of preparedness in all sectors of the national infrastructure including London Transport and the Rail industry.

As regards Eurostar's operations on the domestic network, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway).

Number Plates

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has consulted the number plate industry on his new number plate format proposals; and if he will make a statement. [48769]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number plate industry were, along with the motor industry generally, and other interested parties, including the police and public, included in last year's consultation on proposals for a new vehicle registration format. Their views were taken fully into account. More recently, in response to representations from the number plate industry, DETR officials met number plate industry representatives in May. Their views were considered fully before the Government's public announcement on the new format was made on 10 June. That announcement included a commitment to undertake further research on the memorability of the new format, in particular on whether the random letters should be placed on the left or right of the plate. As a result of the number plate industry's continuing concerns about the spacing of numbers and letters, the Department will be considering these detailed points as a part of this further research.

Wheelchairs (Trains)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance has been issued to train operating companies with regard to the number of wheelchair spaces which should be provided on trains. [48745]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Railways Act 1993 imposes an obligation on the Rail Regulator to publish a Code of Practice which offers practical advice and guidance on the special needs of disabled people to those engaged in the delivery of railway passenger services. The Code of Practice "Meeting the Needs of Disabled Passengers" was published in July 1994. The specifications, which suggest a minimum of two wheelchair spaces per train, contained in the Code are not mandatory but provide a reference point for train operators, who are required to take into account the Code when producing their Disabled People's Protection Policies for approval by the Regulator, in accordance with the requirement of their operator's licence.

In addition, we will be using powers under Part V of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to require all new trains first brought in to use after 31 December 1998 to be accessible to disabled people. We have recently completed a consultation exercise on draft Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations. This included a proposal for a minimum of two wheelchair spaces for trains consisting of between two and eleven vehicles and four wheelchair spaces for longer trains. We are currently reviewing this and other proposed requirements in the light of the responses received from the rail industry and from disability organisations. The final regulations will be published later this year when they have been approved by Parliament.

Ofwat (Customers)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how Ofwat customer service committees seek the views of water customers. [48892]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services. He has agreed to write to the hon. Gentleman. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many members of the Ofwat customer service committees have been appointed. [48889]

Angela Eagle: Ten customer service committees have been established and are maintained by the Director General of Water Services under section 28 of the Water Industry Act 1991. Section 28(4) of the Act provides that a customer service committee shall consist of a chairman and such number (not less than ten nor more than twenty) of other members appointed by the Director as he may determine. Details of the membership of each of the committees are contained in 'The annual report of the OFWAT National Customer Council and the ten regional Customer Service Committees', copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings of the Ofwat customer service committees have been held in the last two years; when these took place; and who attended. [48891]

Angela Eagle: The dates and venues of meetings held by each of the Ofwat customer service committees, but not lists of attendance, are given in each year's copy of 'the Annual report of the OFWAT National Customer Council and the ten regional Customer Service Committees', copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48875]

Angela Eagle: My Department does not hold data for the dates specified and could not obtain them without disproportionate cost. However, the number of staff in the Department reduced by 596 (3.8%) between 1 April 1997 and 1 April 1998.

| | 1 April 1997 | 1 April 1998 |
|---|---|---|
| DETR (Central)[1] | 3,809 | 3,589 |

[2] On 1 april 1997 the Maritime and Coastguard Agencies were separate. This shows a combined figure

Numbers of staff are shown as full-time equivalents, i.e. they are counted as a proportion of full-time hours worked

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken to enable the East Coast Main Line to connect to the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [48910]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The track layout designed for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link at St. Pancras includes a connection between St. Pancras station and the East Coast Main Line.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contractual penalty LCR will incur if the company fails to complete the CTRL by the year 2007. [48681]

Ms Glenda Jackson: LCR and Railtrack have stated their intention to complete the CTRL by 2007.

The revised Development Agreement will contain an obligation to complete the whole link. Failure to comply with the relevant provision will provide grounds for termination.

Portsmouth Harbour Order

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what factors underlay the deferral of the laying of the proposed Portsmouth Harbour (Gunwharf Quays) Order; [48764]

(2) under what powers he intends to lay the proposed Portsmouth Harbour (Gunwharf Quays) Order. [48763]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The application by the Berkeley Festival Waterfront Company Ltd. for this Order under section 3 of the Transport and Works Act 1992 is being considered, and will be determined, by the Secretary of State. It is not subject to any Parliamentary procedure.

Rail Modernisation

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the amount Railtrack has invested on route modernisation since 1995 by route. [48639]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Published information about investment on individual routes is not available in the format requested.

Rail Journeys

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, as a percentage, by how much rail passenger journeys have changed in each year since privatisation; and by how much growth is predicted to rise in each of the next three years. [48679]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For the past two years, passenger journeys have grown as shown in the table, and I understand that the Association of Train Operating Companies is expecting passenger journeys to rise up to 10 per cent. each year for the next three years.

| Year | Passenger journeys |
|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 610 |
| 1996–97 | 649 (+6.3%) |
| 1997–98 | 695 (+7.0%) |

London Transport (Appointments)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in which publications he advertised the recently filled post of Chief Executive of London Transport; on how many occasions these adverts appeared; and what is his policy on advertising future London Transport board appointments. [48636]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our policy on appointments to the London Regional Transport Board is to be guided by the Code of Practice on Public Appointments Procedures, and to choose individuals who through their abilities, experience and qualities match the needs of the organisation. We consider whether to advertise on a case-by-case basis, bearing in mind that, if Parliament approves legislation to establish the Greater London Authority, the Board will be wound up, its responsibilities passing to Transport for London. In restructuring the LT Board to face the challenges of the next two years, we are striking a balance between continuity and outside recruitment. We have appointed recruitment consultants to seek a new non-executive Chairman: the new post of Chief Executive of London Transport is being filled by an existing executive Board member; and the post of Managing Director, London Underground, is being advertised.

Rail Statistics

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total number of trains operating and the total number of miles covered by them in each year since privatisation. [48638]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Detailed information relating to the number of trains operating is not available. I understand that, in the present timetable, there are 18,000 scheduled services each day on the network. The total number of train miles operated in each year since privatisation is listed in the table:

| Year | Train miles |
|---|---|
| 1995–96[1] | 29,924 |
| 1996–97[1] | 31,998 |
| 1997–98[1] | 34,191 |

Greater London Authority

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce the location of the building to house the Greater London Authority. [48659]

Mr. Raynsford: A list of buildings and sites to be examined in detail will be announced shortly. The timing of the announcement on a final decision depends on the progress of negotiations on the chosen building and on the timing of legislation to implement the GLA.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48661]

Angela Eagle: During the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998, my Department and its Agencies received 672,980 pieces of correspondence from members of the public. 96 per cent. of these were responded to within the Department's target of 15 working days. A variety of methods for monitoring the response times to correspondence are used within the Department according to individual needs.

Road Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road schemes in each of the past five years have been built under section 106 agreements; and if he will list the schemes and their estimated total cost. [48916]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department does not maintain central records of road schemes built in accordance with agreements made under section 106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total budget of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee for 1998–99; and what was the total budget for 1997–98. [48657]

Angela Eagle: The total budget for the JNCC in 1998–99 is £3,871,000; in 1997–98 it was £4,317,000.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional resources (a) have been and (b) will be made available to the Joint Nature Conservation Committee in order to fulfil its responsibilities with respect to advising the Secretary of State on applications for exploration and production licences following the implementation of the Offshore Petroleum Production and Pipelines (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1998. [48656]

Angela Eagle: No additional resources have been made available to the JNCC to fulfil these responsibilities.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's budget is derived from voluntary contributions from the oil and gas industry; and what restrictions are associated with the use of such funds. [48658]

Angela Eagle: The oil and gas industry will voluntarily contribute 9.5 per cent. to the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's total budget in 1998–99. These funds are exclusively dedicated to research and survey offshore, including around the Falkland and Faroe Islands.

Donana Pollution Incident

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he had in Spain concerning the Donana pollution incident; and if he will make a statement. [48646]

Angela Eagle: The Deputy Prime Minister visited the Donana National Park on 5 June, accompanied by Juan Luis Muriel, Spanish junior environment minister, to view the damage caused by the spill of toxic mining waste. At the EU Environment Council later that month the Deputy Prime Minister proposed that there should be a review of current provisions for responding to such disasters and, if these proved unsatisfactory, that there should be a conference to discuss possible alternatives. The Commission responded positively to this proposal and will report on their findings in the Autumn.

Special Areas of Conservation

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the adequacy of consultation by English Nature over the inclusion of part of the River Wye and its tributaries in the list of candidate special areas of conservation being sent to the European Commission under Directive 92/43. [48771]

Angela Eagle: I am satisfied that the consultation process has provided all those with an interest in the proposals with an opportunity to comment. The statutory nature conservation agencies were asked to consult local landowners, statutory agencies and interested bodies on each specific site. My officials have consulted national interest groups and representative bodies on the list as a whole.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the list of candidate special areas of conservation under European Directive 92/43 has been forwarded to the European Commission in advance of the intended deadline of June 1998; and when he proposes to forward outstanding candidates. [48770]

Angela Eagle: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment indicated in his written reply of 15 June 1998, Official Report, columns 60–61, the UK has already submitted 315 candidate Special Areas of Conservation covering over 1,650,000 hectares. We hope that a few remaining proposals will be forwarded to the Commission soon.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he received, and what public consultation he undertook, in respect of the River Wye and its tributaries being included as a candidate for special areas of conservation under EU Directive 92/43; and if he will make a statement. [48951]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The consultation process provided all those with interest in the proposals for the River Wye possible Special Area of Conservation with an opportunity to comment. The statutory nature conservation agencies were asked to consult local landowners, local authorities, statutory agencies and interested bodies. At national level, my officials consulted national interest groups and representative bodies on the list as a whole. In the local consultations, views were sought from over 1,200 landowners and local bodies. 14 letters of support were received, including ones from the Environment Agency and the Forest of Dean District Council. 10 objections were received, including one from the former Hereford City Council. The main concern in those objections was that the designation might restrict future development of the river frontage. They were considered before the site was submitted to the European Commission on 12 June 1998.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations he has had with the Planning Inspectorate in respect of additional special areas of conservation being recognised; and if he will make a statement. [48953]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The Planning Inspectorate is routinely informed of the submission to the European Commission of all candidate Special Areas of Conservation so that its Inspectors can apply the relevant planning policies to any cases they deal with in or near those areas.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what areas he has submitted to the EU as candidates for special areas of conservation under European Directive 92/43; and if he will make a statement. [48952]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Candidate Special Areas of Conservation were sent to the Commission on 20 June 1995, 19 January 1996, 16 October 1996, 17 October 1997, 20 March 1998, 26 March 1998, and 15 June 1998. I will arrange for the lists of areas to be placed in the library of the House.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has given to local authorities to define the term "significant effects" that would require a local planning authority to refuse a development in a special area of conservation; and if he will make a statement. [48956]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The advice given to local planning authorities on dealing with applications which may have implications for sites which have been submitted to the European Commission as candidate Special Areas of Conservation is set out in Annexe C of Planning Policy Guidance: Nature Conservation (PPG9). PPG9 advises local planning authorities to take advice from English Nature in considering whether the effect of a proposed development is likely to be significant in terms of the ecological objectives for which the site was designated. English Nature will consider each case individually.

Dry Cleaning Industry (Chemicals)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what legislation exists to restrict the use of chemicals in the dry cleaning industry; and if he will introduce measures to increase regulation. [48627]

Angela Eagle: The relevant legislation is as follows: The Dry Cleaning Special Regulations 1949; The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1994; The Environmental Protection (Control of Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer) Regulations 1996 and EC Regulation 3093/94 of 15 December 1994 on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer. Compliance with these Regulations will ensure that exposure to chemicals in the dry cleaning industry is prevented or, where that is not reasonably practicable, adequately controlled and the environmental impact is minimised.

The European Commission has recently submitted proposals for a new regulation on ozone-depleting substances. The proposals extend the controls contained in EC Regulation 3093/94 and would prevent the use of substances such as trichlorotrifluoroethane (CFC 113) in dry cleaning equipment. The Government will shortly be consulting on these proposals.

Traffic Accidents (A64)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) injuries and (b) fatalities occurred as a result of traffic accidents on the A64 between Leeds and York in each of the last 10 years. [49081]

Casualties in accidents on the A64 between Leeds and York 1988–97

| Year | Fatal | Injured | All |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1988 | 4 | 61 | 65 |
| 1989 | 4 | 32 | 36 |
| 1990 | 2 | 63 | 65 |
| 1991 | 0 | 65 | 65 |
| 1992 | 3 | 48 | 51 |
| 1993 | 2 | 34 | 36 |
| 1994 | 1 | 36 | 37 |
| 1995 | 0 | 43 | 43 |
| 1996 | 1 | 47 | 48 |
| 1997 | 1 | 72 | 73 |

Welsh Highland Railway

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the outcome of the public inquiry into the reopening of the Welsh Highland Railway by the Ffestiniog Railway Company; and if he will make a statement. [49010]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Inspector's report following the public local inquiry is being considered by the Secretary of State. A decision will be made as soon as possible.

Action with Communities in Rural England

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he made to the Minister for Agriculture about the title of the latter's recent speech to Action with Communities in Rural England. [49016]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: None.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the total amounts (a) collected throughout Greater London in non-domestic rates and (b) received by the London boroughs from the national non-domestic rates pool in the most recent year for which figures are available. [49422]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Local Government gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Goole (Mr. Cawsey), on 18 May 1998, Official Report, column 220.

Otterburn

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to receive the report of the inspector at the public inquiry into the Ministry of Defence notice of proposed development at Otterburn army field training centre; and when he expects to announce his decision. [48677]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The public inquiry into the proposed development at Otterburn took place in April 1997. Because this has been a large and complex inquiry, the Inspector's report has taken some time to produce but should be available later this Summer. The Secretary of State will consider the report and announce his decision as quickly as possible thereafter.

Water Surges

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make water companies responsible for damage caused by water surges. [48862]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Water Companies are liable under the Water Industry Act 1991, section 209, for damage caused by surges on pipes which are vested in the water company itself. Water companies are not responsible under this Act for damage caused on private property resulting from water surges, although a customer may have recourse through common law, if negligence or a fault on the part of the water company can be proved to have caused the damage. At the present time, we have no plans to increase water companies' responsibility in this area.

Rent Reviews

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to speed up the process of rent reviews. [48806]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 6 July 1998]: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to commercial rents. Landlords and tenants agree procedures for rent reviews when negotiating leases. The efficiency of these arrangements is a matter for the parties concerned and their professional advisers. We have no plans to introduce statutory controls, but we are discussing with the professional bodies proposals for a new scheme that would make rent reviews for small business properties cheaper and simpler to determine.

HFCs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what recent research (a) his Department and (b) the European Commission has commissioned into HFCs; and if he will place copies of the completed reports in the Library; [49154]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the technical background advice on HFCs commissioned from March Consulting. [49155]

Angela Eagle: The report of a study carried out by March Consulting entitled, UK Use and Emissions of Selected Halocarbons, was placed in the Library in August 1996. The Government have recently commissioned further research from March Consulting into current and likely future emissions of HFCs from the UK. Copies of the completed report will be placed in the Library when it is published. The European Commission is also funding research into HFCs, and copies of any report will be placed in the Library when it is available.

Sewage Pipes

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 131, if pipes and fittings which comply with the draft water industry specification for plastic sewage pipes will also be deemed acceptable for use in drainage systems which need to comply with the requirements of Part H of the Building Regulations. [47759]

Mr. Raynsford: The requirements of the Building Regulations are cast in functional terms and do not prescribe specific solutions. The Approved Document to Part H of the Building Regulations provides guidance on how that requirement may be met. This guidance includes a list of materials which may be used for below-ground drainage pipes, and the relevant British Standards. However, products which conform to other standards may also be acceptable.

The pipes and fittings which are the subject of the draft water industry specification for plastic sewage pipes are innovative, and are not covered by the British Standards mentioned in the Approved Document to Part H of the Building Regulations. The draft water industry specification sets out the test criteria to enable the pipes to be judged fit for their intended purpose. These tests use similar performance criteria to those in the British Standards for more conventional pipes. Pipes and fittings which comply with the draft water industry specification for plastic sewage pipes should therefore be acceptable for use in drainage systems which need to comply with the requirements of Part H of the Building Regulations.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 131, if the draft water industry specification for plastic sewage pipes will be expected to comply with the requirements of Part H of the Building Regulations. [47760]

Mr. Raynsford: The draft water industry specification for plastic sewage pipes refers to pipes for use in sewers, and sets out the test criteria to enable pipes to be judged fit for their intended purpose. The requirements of Part H of the Building Regulations indicate the performance standards required for buildings with regard to foul water drainage, cesspools, septic tanks and settlement tanks, rainwater drainage and solid waste storage. The section relevant to sewers is H1, which states any system which conveys foul water shall be adequate.

However, the criteria which are used to demonstrate that a foul water drain is adequate and meets Requirement H1 are similar to those of the sewerage undertakers who specify the requirements for sewers. As a result, plastic sewage pipes which meet the draft water industry specification can normally be expected to comply with the requirements of Part H of the Building Regulations.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 131, what are his reasons for accepting different specifications and requirements for pipes used in the construction of gravity sewers from pipes used in household drainage, with particular reference to water jetting resistance ranging from 1,900 to 5,000 pounds per square inch. [47761]

Mr. Raynsford: The Code of Practice for Sewer Jetting provides guidance on good practice when using high pressure water jetting equipment for unblocking and cleaning drains and sewers. It says that house drains should not be jetted at pressures exceeding 1,900 pounds per square inch. 5,000 pounds per square inch is the maximum pressure at which this guidance indicates sewers may be jetted, and this pressure applies to pipes in good structural condition laid in materials such as clay or concrete.

This document was prepared by the water industry, and the specifications within it are thus not formally endorsed by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 131, what plans he has to ensure that all plastic drainage and sewage pipes withstand cleaning by high pressure water jetting. [47762]

Mr. Raynsford: A Code of Practice for Sewer Jetting has been produced by the water industry. In addition, the draft Water Industry Standard for plastic sewer pipes includes a test for resistance to jetting. Given that the industry is already regulating itself in this way, it is not considered that there is any need for the Government to intervene.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 131, for what reasons pipes which comply with the draft water industry specification for plastic sewers may have a water jetting resistance of 1,900 pounds per square inch; what account he took of (a) the maximum recommended pressures set out in the Code of Practice in determining this level and (b) the requirement of Part H of the Building Regulations to minimise the risk of blockage and leakage. [47763]

Mr. Raynsford: The draft Water Industry Specification for plastic sewer pipes gives 1,900 pounds per square inch as the maximum pressure for jetting sewers or drains where the composition or condition is unknown. However, this Specification was not prepared by my Department but was drawn up under the direction of the UK Water Industry Engineering and Operations Committee.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been spent to deal with problems of rough sleepers in each of the past five years in (a) England, (b) London and (c) Bristol; and what estimate he has made of the total numbers of rough sleepers in each location for each of those years. [49183]

Mr. Raynsford: The first two phases of the Rough Sleepers Initiative (1990–93 and 1993–96) were focused entirely on central London where the problem of rough sleeping was at its most acute. During that time, the Government provided £182 million to help rough sleepers in the capital to start a new life away from the streets. Under the third phase of the RSI (1996–99) a further £73 million has been provided and help has been extended to cover new areas in London as well as 27 other areas including Bristol. Of the total resources available up to the end of March 1999, around £8 million will have been spent under the RSI on dealing with rough sleeping in Bristol.

No figures are available for the total numbers of rough sleepers in (a) England, (b) London and (c) Bristol for each of the last five years. This is because rough sleeping is a fluid rather than a static problem and the number of individuals sleeping rough will be different each night. In four main areas of central London, outreach work by voluntary organisations in 1996–97, identified 2,381 individuals who slept rough at some time during the course of that year. No such detailed information exists for other areas, although Shelter have estimated that around 2,000 people may be sleeping rough on any one night throughout England. The most recent single night survey of people sleeping in areas of central London surveyed since 1992 found 282 people sleeping rough, down from estimates of more than 1,000 before the Initiative began. In Bristol, the most recent single night count for which figures have been published found 32 people sleeping rough.

The Social Exclusion Unit have today published their report to the Prime Minister on Rough Sleeping which sets the tough target of reducing the level of rough sleeping by two thirds by 2002.

Billiton

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has made to Billiton plc. regarding the social and environmental implications of their proposed Eastern Cape Zinc Refinery Project, South Africa. [49486]

Angela Eagle: None.

Multinationals (OECD Guidelines)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations his Department has had with the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the current review of the OECD guidelines on multinational enterprises. [49160]

Angela Eagle: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Department of Trade and Industry have been liaising at official level on the review (in the form of meetings and internal communications) in preparation for the recent meeting on the guidelines at OECD in Paris. Departments will continue to liaise.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Grid for Learning

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that funds allocated to schools via the National Grid for Learning are sufficient to cover the costs of necessary infrastructure, with particular reference to electric points and security systems. [48087]

Mr. Byers: The National Grid for Learning Standards Fund supports expenditure of over £100 million in 1998–99. It has been allocated to support schools' investment in local network infrastructure, including costs associated with their installation, maintenance and use. Related improvements to buildings and services are the responsibility of the LEA or school governors.

Schools would be expected to take full account of the security implications of such investments at an early stage in the planning cycle and guidance is freely available from the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency to help them in this process. Grants are available from the Standards Fund to support improvements in the security of school premises, including of IT equipment.

Businesses (Training)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures his Department is taking to increase the availability of good quality training facilities in Coventry. [48535]

Dr. Howells: The Government fund a range of national programmes, through the Coventry and Warwickshire Chamber of Commerce, Training and Enterprise. This organisation is charged with ensuring—in partnership with all key players—that the availability of training facilities, the mix of different programmes and the location of their delivery are appropriate to the needs of the area. These needs are developed in partnership, with the Chamber in the strategic lead, and are reviewed on a regular basis in consultation with the Government Office through an in-year and annual business planning process.

With regard to the quality of training and facilities, all Chambers and Training and Enterprise Councils are required to have in place a system of quality assurance which meets quality standards defined by my Department. The Chamber goes through a licensing and 3 year re-licensing process and, more recently, within the context of re-licensing we have introduced the Business Excellence Model as an additional measure designed to drive up standards.

The National Training Standards Council has been set up and it will inspect and report on all Government funded training; it is anticipated that the Council will, over a 4 year timescale, inspect all training providers. The focus of the inspections will be on what the trainees receive and the benefits which accrue to them as customers of this training.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the role of training in encouraging the growth of small firms. [48532]

Dr. Howells: The Department does not have statistical proof of the effect of training on the growth of small firms, because it is too difficult to isolate the impact of training from other factors including the wider economy. However, some small firms have reported growth in terms of employment, productivity, turnover and profitability as a result of training. Research on the issue was reviewed in a DfEE Research Report by David Storey and Paul Westhead in 1997 which is available in the Library.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was allocated through his Department to small and medium enterprises for training purposes in each of the five years up to 1997. [48533]

Dr. Howells: The Department contracts with, and funds, Training and Enterprise Councils to arrange work based training for young people and unemployed adults, and to support organisations to be recognised as Investors in People. Many small and medium enterprises are involved with, and benefit from these initiatives locally. However, we do not have information about the split of funding between different sized enterprises.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statistics his Department has collated on the effect of training on staff turnover rates in small and medium firms in the United Kingdom. [48536]

Dr. Howells: Studies investigating the relationship between training and labour turnover typically use data from surveys of individuals, so statistics are not available on the effect of training on turnover by firm size. A recent study by the Institute for Fiscal Studies used data from the Labour Force Survey and National Child Development Study to examine this relationship, and found that labour mobility was lower for individuals who had previously received work-related training, particularly if this training was employer-funded.

Class Sizes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if Government funding will be provided to non-denominational schools for new classrooms in order to meet the target of class sizes of 30 or under for five to seven year olds. [49292]

Mr. Byers: Yes. Denominational and non-denominational schools alike will benefit from the £40 million allocated to reduce infant class sizes, announced on 3 July.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Church primary schools in Chorley will benefit from Government funding for new classrooms in order to reduce class sizes to 30 or under. [49291]

Mr. Byers: St. Laurence Church of England Primary School, Chorley, the only Church primary school in Chorley put forward, has been allocated £66,329 in 1998–99 to fund an additional classroom to reduce infant class sizes to 30 or below. More funding will be made available in future years where additional classrooms are needed to reduce infant class sizes.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average class size in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in (i) Barnsley and (ii) Doncaster. [45823]

Mr. Byers: The latest available information for Barnsley and Doncaster Local Education Authority areas is shown in the table.

Average size of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools—January 1998 (provisional)

| | Primary | Secondary |
|---|---|---|
| Barnsley LEA area | 29.1 | 23.4 |
| Doncaster LEA area | 28.2 | 21.5 |

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the costs of reducing class sizes to under 30 for all pupils in the first three years of school in the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48361]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Our pledge is to reduce infant class sizes to 30 or below by the end of the Parliament using the savings made from phasing out the Assisted Places Scheme. For 1998–99, we have allocated £62 million for extra teachers and classrooms to help LEAs and schools to begin to achieve the pledge.

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he has taken to involve the over-60s in lifelong learning. [49428]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment published his proposals for lifelong learning for all in the Green Paper, The Learning Age: A Renaissance for a New Britain (Cm 3790), on 25 February. We would welcome comments on these proposals from people of all ages, including the over-60s. Access to learning will also play a part in the Better Government for Older People programme launched by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 5 June.

Seasonal Work (Horticulture)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to facilitate the recruitment of United Kingdom nationals for seasonal work in horticulture. [49190]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are looking at disincentives to work, including the position of seasonal workers, as part of the welfare state review. We are aware that administrative procedures associated with making a repeat claim for Jobseeker's Allowance, following short periods of casual work, can act as a disincentive for unemployed people to take up such opportunities. DfEE, along with those in the Department of Social Security, are considering ways in which the process can be made simpler, in order to address the disincentives which exist. Jobseekers can already use a shortened repeat claim form where they return to Jobseeker's Allowance within two weeks of leaving.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the terms of the education action zone to be implemented in Wigan. [48447]

Mr. Byers: Wigan Education Action Zone, which covers the West Leigh area of Wigan, will start in January 1999. It will receive some £3,000,000 in additional funding over a 3 year period.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the names of each school covered by each of the education action zones announced on 23 June, indicating for each the latest available GCSE results or Key Stage 2 results as appropriate. [47815]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is shown in a table, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

New Deal (Costs)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been spent on the New Deal programme to get 18 to 25 year olds back to work in the year 1997–98; and what are the estimated costs for (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48509]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The provisional amount spent on the New Deal for Young People (18 to 24 year olds) for 1997–98 is £36 million. The majority of this amount represents expenditure incurred centrally in supporting the early implementation of the New Deal. A final figure will be available by the end of August. The New Deal is financed from the receipts of the Windfall Tax on the privatised utilities. Expenditure is planned over the Parliament as a whole and unspent resources in any single year are available for spending on the New Deal in future years.

The estimated cost for 1998–99 is £594 million and for 1999–2000 £675 million. The New Deal is demand led and actual provision for any particular year will be decided in the light of the level of unemployment and experience gained in running the New Deal.

The above figures are for Great Britain and reflect the cost of the New Deal for Young People to the Department for Education and Employment.

Further Education Colleges (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the current financial state of further education colleges in Hampshire. [48569]

Dr. Howells: The Further Education Funding Council keeps under review the financial status of further education colleges in England.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the number of further education colleges in Hampshire incapable of fulfilling their duty to provide adequate and sufficient facilities to their students. [48568]

Dr. Howells: The Further Education Funding Council has a statutory duty to ensure that there are adequate and sufficient facilities for further education in England.

Higher Education

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the percentage of 16 year olds in (a) Kent schools and (b) schools in other shire counties in the year 1996–97 who entered higher education. [48820]

Dr. Howells: Available information on higher education participation rates of 16 to 19 year olds from Kent, other Shire counties and the whole of England is given in the following table.

Entrants to higher education courses at UK higher education institutions in 1997–98 by age and region of domicile and as a proportion of the regional population

| Domicile | Age[1] | Entrants | Population[2] | Proportion (per cent.) |

[2] Populations at 1 January 1998, by age at 31 August 1997. Based on projections from the Government Actuary's Department and the Office for National Statistics

[3] Includes the following regions as they existed prior to local government reorganisation in 1997: Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cleveland, Cornwall, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Devon, Dorset, Durham, East Sussex, Essex, Gloucestershire, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Hertfordshire, Humberside, Isle of Wight, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, North Yorkshire, Northamptonshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Somerset, Staffordshire, Suffolk, Surrey, Warwickshire, West Sussex, Wiltshire

Schools (North Tyneside)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) first and (b) primary schools in North Tyneside which currently have a budget (i) surplus and (ii) deficit. [48539]

Mr. Byers: Information on the position at the end of the financial year 1997–98 is not yet available centrally. It will be available when local education authorities publish their outturn statements in the Autumn. I will write to my hon. Friend in due course, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Secondary Schools (Performance Targets)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his latest estimate of cost for the recently announced programme of national performance targeting for secondary schools; and if he will make a statement. [48179]

Mr. Byers: Target-setting is good practice and many schools already set targets for pupil attainment. The requirement for secondary schools to set targets for pupils' achievement at the end of Key Stage 4 will not require additional resources.

Teachers (Restraint Procedures)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers have undergone training in approved restraint procedures. [47885]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not available.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines his Department has issued to schools on the training of teachers in approved restraint procedures. [47886]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has not issued any specific guidance about this. We intend to issue guidance to schools in July about the provisions of Section 550A of the Education Act 1996 which comes into force on 1 September. That clarifies the powers teachers have to use reasonable force to control or restrain pupils. Amongst other things, the guidance will discuss the circumstances in which physical intervention might be appropriate, and the factors teachers should bear in mind when deciding whether to intervene. We are also considering guidance to assist staff in choosing strategies for restraining pupils who present challenging behaviour and may have special educational needs.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines his Department has issued to pupil referral units on the enrolment or non-enrolment of children on their registers. [47888]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has provided guidance on this matter to pupil referral units in Circular 11/94 'The Education by LEAs of Children Otherwise than at School'. We will be consulting on revised guidance on the education of children out of school, including in pupil referral units, later this year.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the primary and (b) the secondary independent schools with the facility of emotional and behavioural difficulties specialty by local authority in England. [47993]

Ms Estelle Morris: The requested information is given in tables which have been placed in the Library. List A shows independent schools approved under s.347(1) of the Education Act 1996 for the admission of pupils with statements of special educational need specifying emotional and behavioural difficulties, by authority in which the school is situated and by age range specified in its terms of approval. List B shows schools with provisional or final registration under s.465 of the Act which have indicated that they can cater for this group of pupils: in most cases this has been verified by OFSTED but such verification may still be awaited for a few recently registered schools. Before a local education authority places a child with a statement in one of the schools on List B, it requires the consent of the Secretary of State under s.347(5)(b) of the Act.

Jobcentres

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many jobcentres were (a) open and (b) closed in each region in each of the last 10 years; and how many closures are currently planned; [48297]

(2) if he will list the name and location of each jobcentre which has been designated for closure. [48294]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning the opening and closure of Employment Service Jobcentres. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It may be helpful if I explain that the Employment Service's Agency Framework Document includes provision for the Chief Executive of the Agency to make changes to the Jobcentre network. This provision reflects the need to make adjustments from time to time in response to changing circumstances and needs.

With regard to your question on the numbers of Jobcentres which have been opened and closed over the last ten years, I regret that I am not able to provide the full information you have requested. Between 1989 and 1995 the Employment Service rationalised its estate through a programme of 'integration' which brought together the previously separate networks of Jobcentres and Unemployment Benefit Offices. During this period the Employment Service estate was reduced by over 900 offices to a total of approximately 1,030 locations. Since December 1995, 10 Jobcentres have been closed and details of these are shown in the attached annex.

As far as planned closures are concerned, we are currently proposing closure of Dronfield and Eckington Jobcentres in Derbyshire, following public consultation, and considering closure of Liphook Jobcentre in Hampshire and Padiham Jobcentre in Lancashire on which public consultation is currently taking place.

I hope this is helpful.

Mathematics

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to implement the recommendations concerning better contact between schools, examining bodies, the inspectorate and professional mathematicians contained in the 1995 report, "Tackling the Mathematics Problem". [48837]

Ms Estelle Morris: I understand that the 1995 Report's recommendations were considered by the Government of the day and their response was made publicly available.

The Department for Education and Employment has given top priority to raising standards in mathematics. The Numeracy Task Force established by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, which includes as a member one of the authors of the Report, has been considering the available evidence relating to mathematics. The Task Force's main objective has been to establish a national strategy to raise standards in mathematics in order to reach the national numeracy target by 2002. Its preliminary report, Numeracy Matters, was the subject of wide consultation earlier this year. Its final report, which will be published shortly, will contain firm recommendations and a practical agenda for implementing the National Numeracy Strategy.

The National Curriculum review for 2000, on which work has begun, will reflect the priority being given to raising standards in mathematics.

Welfare-to-work Programme

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many firms have made offers of permanent employment as part of their commitment to the welfare-to-work programme. [47039]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Over 15,000 employers have so far signed formal Employer Agreements committing them to considering New Deal candidates for vacancies.

Education (Hereford and Worcester)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the education standard spending assessment adjusted for local government reorganisation and nursery vouchers for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97, (f) 1997–98 and (g) 1998–99 for Hereford and Worcester local education authorities (i) in cash terms and (ii) at 1998–99 prices. [47316]

Mr. Byers: The table sets out the education SSA for Hereford and Worcester local education authority for each year since 1992–93 in cash terms and in 1998–99 prices. The table also sets out in cash and real terms the year-on-year changes after allowing for local authority changes of function, including nursery vouchers.

| Year | Education SSA | Year-on-year cash change | Education SSA at 98–99 prices | Year-on-year real terms change |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 241.9 | — | 282.5 | — |
| 1993–94 | 211.6 | 2.6 | 240.1 | -3.5 |
| 1994–95 | 216.5 | 4.9 | 242.1 | 1.8 |
| 1995–96 | 219.8 | 4.8 | 239.1 | -1.2 |
| 1996–97 | 229.0 | 9.2 | 242.0 | 2.8 |
| 1997–98 | 230.8 | 5.8 | 237.5 | -0.3 |
| 1998–99 | 245.0 | 10.3 | 245.0 | 3.5 |

Notes:

1. The year-on-year cash and real terms changes take account of local authority changes of function such as nursery vouchers and the transfer in 1993–94 of responsibility for most further education to the Further Education Funding Council

2. The figures for 1998–99 represent the aggregate totals for Herefordshire and Worcestershire

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48882]

Dr. Howells: Information on staff numbers in the Department and the Employment Service can be found in Annex F of the Department's Annual Report (Cm 3910) and in the Civil Service Staff in Post Summaries for 1 April 1997 and 1 January 1998. Copies of these publications are available in the Library. Information on the numbers employed at 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998 is not readily available. The next Civil Service Staff in Post Summary—for 1 April 1998—will be published by the Cabinet Office.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48847]

Dr. Howells: The Department fully recognises the importance of doing all it can to minimise the effect of the Year 2000 problem. Remedial action to adapt and test all our computer systems is underway. Within my department, we have identified the systems on which we depend for the conduct of normal business. As we test the effectiveness of remedial action (during the course of this year), we will assess the impact of system failure and develop appropriate contingency arrangements for each one. We are also in the process of identifying key technical personnel who will need to be available over the Millennium period.

The Employment Service, who provide vital services to the public, are developing and improving existing contingency plans to ensure they address Year 2000 issues. These will cover all services as appropriate.

We are also working closely with other organisations in the education, training, and employment sectors to encourage them to develop contingency measures where appropriate, especially where services to the citizen could be affected.

Chemistry Students

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effectiveness of the A-level chemistry curriculum and exam in preparing students for degree courses in chemistry and biochemistry. [48744]

Dr. Howells: The 1996 joint report by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority (SCAA) and the Office for Standards in Education (OFSTED) on examination standards over time concluded that there was some evidence of a marginal reduction in the knowledge and understanding demonstrated by A level Chemistry candidates between 1975 and 1995, but that it did not appear that any change in attainment of those entering undergraduate courses in chemistry had adversely affected the distribution of final degree classes over recent years. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is currently drawing up new criteria for all A level syllabuses which will reflect the recommendations in the SCAA/OFSTED report for ensuring that A level standards are maintained.

Science Students

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the achievement grades at (a) A-level and (b) GCSE in each of the science subjects in Norfolk schools in each of the years 1992 to 1997. [41160]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 May 1998]: The information requested for GCE A levels and GCSEs is shown in the following table.

GCSE/GNVQ Scores

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the average GCSE point scores in 1997 of each equal twentieth group of (a) male, (b) female and (c) all 15 year old pupils when all such pupils are ranked by their total GCSE point scores, the number of pupils and the average number of GCSEs entered per pupil in each group; what proportions of pupils in each group also took (i) an intermediate GNVQ, and (ii) a foundation GNVQ, indicating the numbers gaining each grade. [44955]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 9 June 1998]: The information requested in respect of average GCSE point scores for 1997 is shown in the following table. However, information on the proportion of pupils in each group who took GNVQs is not available.

Average GCSE point scores for 1997

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48845]

Mr. Morley: In recognition of the importance of the Year 2000 issue, the Department has established a major programme of work and intends that all business critical systems will be millennium compliant by April 1999. However, in case of possible failure of some systems to recognise the Year 2000, we are following central (CCTA) advice on contingency planning and related risk management.

Contingency plans are being prepared for all key systems/areas and will be in place by mid-1999. Key elements of the plans will be tested in the same timescale.

Dairy Farm Inspections

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the circumstances which necessitate the carrying out of unaccompanied inspections of dairy farms by inspectors from the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency when the farmer is absent at the time of the inspector's unannounced visit. [48754]

Mr. Rooker: Normally inspections are not made where no one is available on the farm. However, if conditions appear very bad, a list of faults is left on the farm. The producer is contacted as soon as possible after the visit by the Dairy Hygiene Inspector to discuss the situation. Such a visit is chargeable.

Dairy Products

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the Dairy Products (Hygiene) Regulations to improve their compatibility with Welfare of Animals Regulations. [48755]

Mr. Rooker: The Dairy Products (Hygiene) Regulations 1995 (as amended) already lay down animal health standards, and conditions for housing of animals, as well as general conditions of hygiene for production holdings which require that all animals should be clean and well kept. I am not aware of any incompatibility with welfare legislation.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries which have an import ban on UK dairy products; and if he will make a statement. [48644]

Mr. Rooker: The countries which have an import ban on UK dairy products are Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Uzbekistan, Guatemala, Tanzania, Tunisia, Argentina, Guinea Bissau and Syria. Action taken by the Government to encourage these bans to be lifted includes the provision of evidence from independent bodies including the World Health Organisation, the International Epizootics Organisation, the European Union's Scientific and Standing Veterinary Committees and the UK Spongiform Encephalophy Advisory Committee (SEAC), confirming the safety of UK dairy products in relation to BSE. Similar bans in a number of other countries have now been lifted.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48877]

Mr. Morley: Figures from 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998 are not readily available. The latest comparable information published in the quarterly Civil Service Statistics covers the period 1 April 1997 to 1 January 1998 and is detailed in the table. This shows how the numbers of staff in my Department and its Agencies have varied between the two dates. Quarterly Civil Service Statistics are available in the Library of the House and on the Internet.

Note:

Ruminants (Foodstuffs)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Department was informed of the Swedish Government's ban on the use of animal remains for foodstuffs to ruminants; what action was taken in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [49309]

Mr. Rooker: The Swedish Government banned the incorporation of meat and bone products in ruminant feed in December 1990. This ban was extended, in December 1993, to include all products from ruminants except fats, milk and milk products, and amended in February 1995 to prohibit protein derived from mammalian tissues.

An EU-wide ban on the feeding of mammalian protein to ruminants was introduced on 27 June 1994. It therefore falls to the EC Commission to ensure that Member States comply.

Quarantine

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultation the Advisory Group on Quarantine has had with disability organisations about prioritising quarantine reform in respect of guide dogs and hearing dogs. [49290]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Group on Quarantine has sought the views of Hearing Dogs for the Deaf, the Guide Dogs for the Blind Association and the Royal National Institute for the Blind on specific points relating to its review of rabies control policy. The Advisory Group has also received advice from the Joint Committee on Mobility of Blind and Partially Sighted People.

Fishing Limits

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under which procedure the derogation permitting six and 12-mile fishing limits will be renewable, and if unanimity will apply. [49328]

Mr. Morley: Renewal of the restrictions on access by foreign fishing vessels within Member States' 6 and 12 mile limits after 2002 will require the agreement of a qualified majority of the Council to a proposal from the European Commission. Although only a qualified majority vote is required, there was unanimous support when the restrictions were last renewed in 1992.

Surplus Beef

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Union Agriculture Ministers about the rule prohibiting the distribution of surplus beef to pensioners who are not on income support; what steps he is taking to change the law to allow such distribution; and if he will make a statement. [48957]

Mr. Rooker: The EU legislation governing this Scheme requires Member States to ensure that the produce is distributed only to the most deprived citizens in the community. To comply with this requirement in the UK, the criteria for eligibility were set in consultation with the Department of Social Security. Persons on Income Support, Family Credit, Disability Working Allowance and Jobseeker's Allowance (income-based only) are all eligible to receive produce, as are the homeless and destitute and those living in welfare hostels. Pensioners as a group are not included since receipt of a State pension is not considered to be a sufficient indicator of need in itself, although those pensioners who meet one or other of the criteria are eligible. The Government have no plans to seek a change in EU law which would materially alter this position.

Action with Communities in Rural England

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he received from the Deputy Prime Minister on the subject of his recent talk to Action with Communities in Rural England, with particular reference to its title. [49017]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 July 1998]: None.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the (a) original and (b) final titles of his recent address to Action with Communities in Rural England. [49015]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The title of this address, delivered by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, was 'An Integrated Strategy for Rural Affairs'.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the retail price of milk has gone to dairy farmers in each of the last five years. [48783]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The proportion of the retail price of milk that has gone to dairy farmers in each of the last five years is approximately as follows:

| Year | Percentage |
|---|---|
| 1993 | 46 |
| 1994 | 48 |
| 1995 | 53 |
| 1996 | 51 |
| 1997 | 46 |

Organic Farming

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the additional costs associated with organic farming. [48786]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 1998]: Estimates of the comparative costs of organic and conventional systems were prepared in summer 1997 by the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency. These estimates are based on average yields for both systems and reflect a conservative view of organic premia (i.e. that the premiums for organic produce will be lower than at present). The results for eight farm types considered were as follows.

(£/ha)

| Farm type | Conventional net margin | Final organic system net margin | Additional profit (loss) from organic system |
|---|---|---|---|
| Specialist dairy[1] | 1,489 | 1,654 | 165 |
| Mainly dairy[1] | 1,077 | 1,178 | 101 |
| Mainly arable[2] (major change to enterprise mix) | 642 | 544 | (98) |
| Mainly arable[2] (minimum change) | 517 | 583 | 66 |
| Stockless arable[3] | 745 | 767 | 22 |
| Lowland livestock[2] | 621 | 556 | (65) |
| Upland livestock[2] | 450 | 482 | 32 |
| Hill livestock[4] (i.e. mainly rough grazing) | 338 | 318 | (20) |

[1] Assumes premium of 3.5p/l for organic milk
[2] Assumes premia £40/tonnes feed wheat, £70/tonne milling wheat (arable scenararios only, 50% of wheat assumed to be of milling quality), 10% livestock. Organic profitability would be significantly higher if potatoes could be included in the rotation
[3] Assumes premia £40/tonne feed wheat, £70/tonne milling wheat, £70/tonne potatoes, 10% livestock
[4] Assumes premium of 10% for livestock

Further details are contained in the Review of the Organic Aid Scheme, a copy of which has been placed in the House.

These figures are based on models of average farms and the economics for individual businesses will vary. Farmers considering conversion to organic farming should assess the implications for their own businesses. Free advice, including a telephone help line and on-farm advisory visits, is available from the Organic Conversion Information Service (01179 227707), funded by the Ministry.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has evaluated into the feasibility of organic hill farming. [48787]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 1998]: Since 1991, the Department has funded a large-scale system study at ADAS Redesdale in Northumberland to explore the practical and financial implications of organic hill farming. The project has also involved comparisons with the performance of a range of commercial organic hill farms. This research has been guided by a steering group involving organic farmers and the results have been widely disseminated. The project will cost £220,000 in 1998/99 and has recently been extended to March 2001.

Rural White Paper

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the proposed Rural White Paper. [48794]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 1998]: We are considering the best way of taking forward and presenting rural policy, on which we have received a number of representations.

Ministry of Rural Affairs

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the proposed Ministry of Rural Affairs. [48793]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The Agriculture Committee in its report of 11 December 1997 on the MAFF/Intervention Board Departmental Report 1997 recommended, among other things, that the Department be re-incarnated as a Ministry of Agriculture, Rural Affairs and Fisheries. This recommendation was made in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR). Some external organisations have expressed views similar to those of the Committee while others have argued against the creation of a Ministry of Rural Affairs.

The Government's response to the report explained that the Committee's recommendations would be taken into account in the review group's deliberations. The outcome of the CSR has not yet been decided. Decisions about changes in the machinery of Government would ultimately be a matter for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with Labour Rural Revival on the subject of the proposed Ministry of Rural Affairs. [48795]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 1998]: None.

Pig Exports

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 20 April 1998, Official Report, columns 488–89, how many of the pigs exported for breeding purposes in 1997 were exported in consignments of (a) 200 to 299, (b) 300 to 399, (c) 400 to 499 and (d) over 500 pigs per lorry; and from which ports these consignments departed. [48027]

Mr. Rooker: The figures given in my answer of 20 April were corrected in my pursuant answer of 5 May 1998, Official Report, columns 303–04. Information on the numbers of animals per lorry and the ports through which they were exported could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information is, however, available on the numbers of animals per certified consignment as follows:

| Consignment size (pigs for breeding) | Number of certificates issued |
|---|---|
| (a) 200–299 | 88 |
| (b) 300–399 | 56 |
| (c) 400–499 | 31 |
| (d) over 500 | 15 |

This information was obtained from Departmental computer records. They remain provisional and subject to amendment.

WALES

Health Service Management

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to improve management skills in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [47915]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Responsibility for management training lies with the NHS in Wales and Health Authorities fund the running of management training schemes through the NHS Staff College Wales. However, over the next few months, in line with our proposals set out in the White Paper "Putting Patients First", steps will be taken to develop a Human Resource Management Strategy sensitive to the needs of NHS Wales. I will be taking a close interest in ensuring that people with appropriate opportunities to develop their skills are in place to improve the management of a complex service.

Tourism

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many tourists visited Wales during the most recent 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [48328]

Mr. Hain: In 1996, the latest year for which data are available, there were an estimated 11.8 million tourist trips to Wales according to figures published by the Office for National Statistics.

Dyfed Powys Health Authority

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to approve the revised strategy, April 1998, of the Dyfed Powys Health Authority. [48652]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I met the Chair and other members of the Health Authority Board last month to discuss the strategic plan "Effective Care and Healthy People" and it is to be considered further at a meeting later this month between the Department, the Health Authority and NHS trusts in Dyfed Powys. In the light of these discussions, we will want to consider whether the plan represents a sound basis for NHS provision in Dyfed Powys.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a breakdown of the potential savings of £350,000 per annum cited in paragraph 4.2.5 of his recently published consultation document on his proposal to dissolve the existing NHS trusts in the Dyfed Powys Health Area. [48653]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Paragraph 4.2.5 relates to the proposals to dissolve the Carmarthen and District and the Llanelli Dinefwr NHS Trusts. The reconfiguration project team for these proposals have identified by the year 2000–01 total savings as:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Direct board savings | 240,000 |
| Management costs | 75,000 |
| Admin and technical support | 175,000 |
| Non staff | 145,000 |
| | 635,000 |

When off-set by recurring additional costs of £285,000, a recurring net saving of £350,000 will be realised.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the assumption contained in paragraph 4.4.2 of his consultation document on proposals to dissolve the existing NHS trusts in the Dyfed Powys Health Authority Area that Dyfed Powys Health Authority will receive financial support of £36 million between 1999–2000 and 2001–2002. [48650]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The paragraph in question gives Dyfed Powys Health Authority's estimate (at the time of preparation of the consultation document) of the amount of financial support needed to maintain services at their current level if trust reconfiguration were not to proceed. The Welsh Office is working with the health authority and trusts to refine their strategic plans and reduce this amount. The actual amount of financial support provided to the health authority over the three years will be decided on the basis of need and the availability of resources.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the previous examples of the mergers of small to medium NHS trusts cited at paragraph 1.4 of his recently published consultation document on his proposals to dissolve existing NHS trusts in the Dyfed Powys Health Authority Area. [48654]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In Wales, the merger of the Pembrokeshire and Derwen NHS Trusts realised savings of £750,000 per annum, and, in England, the merger of the Isle of Wight Community Healthcare and St. Mary's Hospital NHS Trusts realised savings of £660,000 per annum.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the total cost in a full year of increasing the pay of the 33 per cent. of the staff of the Llanelli/Dinefwr NHS Trust, referred to at paragraph 4.1.6 of his recently published consultative document on his proposals to dissolve the existing NHS trusts in the Dyfed Powys Health Authority Area, to the comparable pay of the majority of the staff of the Carmarthen NHS Trust. [48655]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Costs of harmonising pay and terms and conditions would depend on the precise outcome of negotiations with staff representatives, and no estimate is currently available to the Department. A new national pay system for NHS staff, with an emphasis on individual job evaluation, is under consideration by the Government and this should help ease the process of harmonisation in respect of staff employed by the Llanelli/Dinefwr and Carmarthen NHS Trusts if the proposals are approved.

Carmarthen and Llanelli NHS Trusts

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the discretionary capital allocation available to the (a) Carmarthen and (b) Llanelli NHS Trusts for 1998–99. [48648]

Mr. Win Griffiths: (a) Carmarthen £1,129,000 and (b) Llanelli £868,000.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost to the proposed Carmarthenshire NHS Trust (a) to put in place common systems and (b) to standardise processes across the Trust. [48649]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The latest estimate for standardisation provided by the reconfiguration project team for the proposed Carmarthenshire NHS Trust is:

£150,000 in 1999–2000

£75,000 in 2000–01

£75,000 in 2002–02.

The figures provided do not differentiate between costs of implementing common systems and standardising processes.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost of establishing the slimline headquarters for his proposed Carmarthenshire NHS Trust. [48651]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is not currently available. Ultimately, it would be a matter for the new Trust, if established, to determine the location of its headquarters and the detailed arrangements for putting it in place, subject to policy guidelines for such developments.

Rhuddlan Borough Council

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the extent of (a) audit and (b) other inspection activity carried out by his Department on the capital grants received by Rhuddlan Borough Council. [48751]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Capital grants paid to local authorities are subject to conditions and criteria specified by my Department. Local authorities are required to confirm compliance with these when submitting applications for grant support. The Appointed Auditor certifies the accuracy of the final claim submitted in respect of each scheme.

Progress reports are received on major schemes, meetings are held when problems arise, and site visits or inspections are made when necessary. On occasions, as in the case of Rhuddlan's accounts, it is open to interested parties to request a Quality Control Review of the audit process.

NUTS 2

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the precise specifications of the new NUTS 2 areas in Wales; if Eurostat has accepted these areas for the purposes of evaluating structural fund allocations for the period 2000 to 2006; and if he will estimate the value of European structural funds which have been paid to projects within each of the new NUTS 2 areas in Wales during the last five years, or during such similar period for which figures are conveniently available. [48825]

Mr. Hain: A list of the precise specifications of the new UK NUTS areas can be found in the Government Statistical Service Press Notice of 29 June, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The European Commission has proposed that NUTS 2 and 3 areas be used to draw up the new EU Structural Funds map for the period 2000 to 2006. The Government expect that the new UK NUTS boundaries will be used. The information on Structural Funds expenditure over the past five years, within the new NUTS 2 areas, would be available only at a disproportionate cost.

Lamb Exports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on proposals to re-establish the export of whole lamb carcases to France; and if he will make a statement. [48772]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government have recently issued proposals for statutory consultation to amend the Specified Risk Material Regulations 1997 to allow the export of sheep carcases from animals over 12 months of age (or which have at least one permanent incisor tooth) with the spinal cord intact to premises designated by the French authorities. The period for consultation ended on 3 July. The Government are considering the comments made during the consultation and it is likely that legislation will be forthcoming in the near future.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which councils in Wales have adopted the use of wheeled bins for refuse collection. [48990]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Returns to the 1996–97 municipal waste management survey show that the following county and county borough councils use wheeled bins for refuse collection to varying degrees:

Caerphilly
Cardiff
Conwy,
Denbighshire
Gwynedd
Merthyr
Tydfil
Neath
Port Talbot
Newport
Rhondda Cynon Taff
Torfaen
Vale of Glamorgan
Wrexham and Ynys Môn.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent on dealing with problems of rough sleepers in each of the past five years; and what is his estimate of the total numbers sleeping rough for each of those years. [49205]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Grant is paid under section 180 of the Housing Act 1996 (and previously under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985) to support specific projects run by voluntary organisations to prevent and alleviate homelessness and rooflessness, and also as core funding for the relevant voluntary organisations. Figures are given in the table.

| Year | Projects | Core funding |
|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 184 | 361 |
| 1994–95 | 195 | 336 |
| 1995–96 | 181 | 378 |
| 1996–97 | 241 | 320 |
| 1997–98 | 312 | 306 |

From 1997–98, the section 180 programme for projects has been targeted exclusively at initiatives to alleviate the problems of rough sleepers.

Provision under section 180 in the current year totals £650,000, of which £336,000 has been allocated to schemes to help rough sleepers.

The number of rough sleepers can vary from one night to the next and may not be a reflection of the total incidence of rough sleeping. In 1996, a snapshot survey of the number of rough sleepers was conducted in 13 diverse areas of Wales. This found 86 people sleeping rough, but these results cannot be extrapolated to provide an estimate for the whole of Wales.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the defects liability period on Crickhowell House is still extant. [49445]

Mr. Ron Davies: The defects liability period has not been formally extended beyond 31 March 1998. The Welsh Health Common Services Authority has served the Landlord with a defects Notice which has been acknowledged and is the subject of on-going discussions.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 July 1998, Official Report, columns 255–56 what guidelines have been issued to non-departmental bodies which he sponsors in relation to the time taken to respond to requests for assistance from the Parliamentary Commissioner under the Code of Practice on Requests for Government Information; what action he plans to take in respect of the length of time taken by bodies to supply information to the Parliamentary Commissioner; and if he will make a statement. [49463]

Mr. Ron Davies: The following general guidance has been issued to Chief Executive Officers of non-departmental public bodies:

CEO 8/94 A copy of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information together with the Welsh Office Citizen's Charter leaflet on Open Government.

CEO 29/94 The bilingual version of the Code of Practice.

CEO 39/94 Summaries of recent Ombudsman cases relating to the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

CEO 30/96 Office of Public Service Guidance on Redress Under the Citizen's Charter.

CEO 4/97 Revised Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Second Edition).

CEO 16/97 Complaints Review Arrangements in Public Services.

The Code of Practice states that responses to requests for information should be provided as soon as is practicable. The target for responses to simple requests is 20 working days from the date of receipt. I have no plans to issue further guidance at this time.

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much European Social Fund money was paid to Whitbread Brewers in 1996 for the World Class Manufacturing Project by Gwent Tertiary College. [49430]

Mr. Hain: The handling of European grants by GTC is currently being investigated by the Department of Employment Fraud Investigation and Audit Unit and by Gwent Constabulary. It would not be appropriate to comment on individual ESF cases while these investigations are underway.

Economic Strategy

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what responses he has received to the Economic Strategy consultation document issued in October 1997; and if he will make a statement. [49486]

Mr. Ron Davies: The consultation document produced over 140 written responses. On the basis of those responses, and of further work by my Department and others, I am publishing today "Pathway to Prosperity—A New Economic Agenda for Wales". Copies are available from the Vote Office and in the Libraries.

"Pathway to Prosperity—A New Economic Agenda for Wales" will be the subject of a debate in the Welsh Grand Committee on 13 July.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions in the last three months when the Royal Navy took action to stop reported illegal fishing in Gibraltarian waters by Spanish fishing vessels. [45495]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: The Royal Navy has not had to take action to stop illegal fishing in British waters around Gibraltar by Spanish fishing vessels in the last three months. The Royal Gibraltar Police (RGP) has been able to enforce Gibraltar fisheries legislation in these waters. The Governor has assured the RGP of his full support, and that of HMG.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the rights of residents in Gibraltar to vote in elections to the European Parliament. [49293]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 499.

Tanzania

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK-Tanzanian relations. [48329]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We enjoy excellent relations with Tanzania, illustrated by a number of recent high level bilateral visits. President Mkapa had an audience with the Queen at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in October 1997. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary also met Foreign Minister Kikwete. In March 1998 I made a working visit to Tanzania and met President Mkapa, Prime Minister Sumaye and Foreign Minister Kikwete. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development intends to visit Tanzania in August.

Our historic ties contribute to mutual understanding and we are able to engage in serious dialogue on a range of international issues, including our concerns about political and human rights issues with Tanzania. Tanzania is a significant and growing trading partner. Tanzania is also a major recipient of UK bilateral development assistance. DFID are currently working with the Government of Tanzania to develop a new country strategy paper.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's role in the OSCE Dayton Arms Control Verification Organisation in former Yugoslavia. [48290]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom has provided technical arms control assistance to all the parties to the Dayton agreement. Two arms control experts from the UK's Joint Arms Control Implementation Group work in the OSCE arms control verification offices in Vienna and Sarajevo. They help to co-ordinate inspection activity and report to the Personal Representative of the OSCE Chairman in Office on the implementation of the arms control provisions of the Dayton agreement.

Disarmament Conference

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he intends to table for the Agenda of the next meeting of the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva. [48301]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Conference adopted its Agenda on 20 January and a work plan on 26 March. We continue to press for the establishment of Ad Hoc Committees to work on widening the ban on anti-personnel landmines and on a Fissile Material Cut-Off Treaty.

Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to approve the comprehensive proposals on adapting the CFE Treaty's Flank position, tabled on 31 March. [48286]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The proposal to which the hon. Member refers was tabled on behalf of all NATO states in the course of the negotiations under way in Vienna to adapt the CFE Treaty. All NATO member states had approved the text before it was tabled.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to amend the Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty to reflect the changing European security environment. [48288]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The CFE Treaty was negotiated at the end of the Cold War, and limited the number of heavy weapons held by the countries of NATO and the Warsaw Pact in the area from the Atlantic to the Urals. The adapted Treaty will replace a bloc-to-bloc balance between two military alliances with limits on individual nations' weapons holdings, and territorial limits for equipment. This fundamental change will be accompanied by a series of enhancements to the detailed provisions of the Treaty, with the aim of further reducing tension between the States Parties, preventing the destabilising build-up of forces in the Treaty area, and improving military transparency.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what limits on manpower levels have been imposed upon the United Kingdom as a result of the concluding act of the negotiation on personnel strength of conventional armed forces in Europe. [48287]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The limits on manpower levels for all participating States are set out in the Concluding Act, a copy of which was placed in the Libraries of the House (Command Paper 2164, presented in April 1993). The UK's limit for military personnel is 260,000.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reductions the United Kingdom has announced in its Treaty Limited Equipment entitlements. [48289]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Between 1991 and 1993, the United Kingdom reduced its holdings of equipment limited by the Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty by 183 main battle tanks, 30 armoured combat vehicles, and 5 attack helicopters, to bring the holdings into line with the limits agreed under the Treaty. Further reductions in entitlements may result from the adaptation of the Treaty, negotiations on which are continuing in Vienna.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will promote the proposition of an international treaty against missile proliferation. [48303]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Members of the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR), of which the UK is a founder member, discussed the merits of an international treaty against missile proliferation in September 1995. They concluded that there were insuperable difficulties in achieving such a treaty. These included the gaining of a widespread international agreement, reaching consensus to determine which missile systems should be controlled by the treaty, and achieving a credible multilateral verification process.

The UK remains committed to tackling missile non-proliferation through the MTCR as outlined in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 196–97.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government are doing to encourage (a) Brazil, (b) Cuba, (c) Israel, (d) India and (e) Pakistan to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty; and when he expects them to do so. [48302]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are delighted that, on 1 July, the Brazilian Congress approved Brazil's accession to the Non-Proliferation Treaty. It now remains for the relevant instrument of ratification to be drawn up and deposited.

We continue, both bilaterally and in all relevant international forums to urge the remaining four non-NPT signatories to accede to the Treaty at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy that the Non-Proliferation Treaty should continue in force indefinitely. [48333]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Non-Proliferation Treaty decided that, as the majority of States party supported its indefinite extension, the Treaty should continue in force indefinitely. The UK fully supports this decision.

Vienna Document 1994

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the range of Confidence and Security Building Measures provided for in the Vienna Document 1994. [48292]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Vienna Document 1994, a copy of which was placed in the Libraries of the House (Cmnd 2791 of March 1995), lists a wide range of confidence and security building measures, including an annual information exchange; constraints on, notification and observation of certain military activities; military contacts provisions; and a verification regime.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what options he is considering for revising VD94 to reflect the change in the European security environment; and if he will make a statement on discussions held with the OSCE on this matter. [48291]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Vienna Document 1994 on Confidence and Security Building Measures is currently being reviewed in Vienna by all participating States. Participating States, including the UK, have made many proposals to revise the Vienna Document to reflect the changed security environment in Europe. These are being discussed against the criteria of military significance, additional transparency benefits, possibility of verification and cost effectiveness. We hope that the negotiations will be completed by the end of 1998.

Plutonium

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty on exports of plutonium by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. [48330]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We do not expect the Fissile Material Cut-Off Treaty to have any impact on the export of plutonium by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

The Fissile Material Cut-Off Treaty will ban the production of fissile materials for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices. The UK has already ceased the production of fissile material for these purposes.

All exports of civil plutonium from the UK are subject to strict controls to ensure that the material is not diverted for use in nuclear weapons. Further information on these controls was given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Small Firms, Trade and Industry on 1 June 1998, Official Report, columns 119–20.

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the signatories to the Missile Technology Control Regime. [48305]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The following countries are Members of the Missile Technology Control Regime:

Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Russian Federation, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States of America.

Strategic Arms Reduction Talks

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to accept an invitation to the United Kingdom to join the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks process and participate in START III. [48293]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The US and Russia have made it clear that START III will be a bilateral process.

Our manifesto made it clear that we will include British nuclear weapons in multilateral negotiations once we are satisfied with verified progress towards our goal of the global elimination of nuclear weapons.

Wassenaar Agreement

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British defence export orders have been blocked under the Wassenaar Arrangement. [48304]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Initial Elements of the Wassenaar Arrangement state that the decision to transfer or deny transfer of any item will be the sole responsibility of each Participating State. Participation in the Wassenaar Arrangement does not therefore entail automatic refusal of any export. However, in line with our responsibilities as a Participating State, we seek to ensure that our transfers of conventional arms and dual-use goods and technologies do not undermine the Arrangement's goals of contributing to regional and international security and stability. The arms export licensing criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, column 26–29, state that an export licence should be refused if approval would be inconsistent with the UK's commitments to the Wassenaar arrangement.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he took during the British EU Presidency to promote the implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention. [48295]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are committed to the universal implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention. To this end during our EU Presidency, we undertook a series of demarches with Partners to encourage accession by non-States Parties to this important multilateral treaty.

In addition, we have continued to play an active part in the work of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in The Hague to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Convention.

UK Nationals (Defence Lawyers)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance his Department has provided towards the cost of providing defence lawyers to UK nationals held in prison pending trial in each of the last three years. [48327]

Mr. Fatchett: None. Our consular staff overseas help British nationals to find local lawyers for their defence, but we cannot help with the costs involved.

Embassy, Berlin

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what competitive tendering procedures were applied in relation to the construction work for the new British Embassy in Berlin; and if he will list those companies which tendered. [49135]

Mr. Fatchett: The competition for the PFI contract for the new British Embassy was conducted in accordance with EC rules and advertised in OJEC, the Official Journal of the European Communities. The advertisement prompted interest from 27 companies.

In accordance with PFI guidelines, a shortlist of 3 was produced from whom formal tenders were invited. They were: Norwest Holst; Embassy Partnerships; and Bebcon, the winners of the tender process, subsequently renamed Arteos.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the legal status of the site of the new British Embassy in Berlin; and to whom the freehold belongs. [49136]

Mr. Fatchett: Under the terms of the PFI contract, signed on 23 June, the FCO granted a 62 year lease to Arteos, the PFI Operator, to enable it to provide an Embassy building, structure, Equipment and Services for an initial term of 30 years. Thereafter, the contract will be retendered for a second 30 year term. The lease will be assumed by the winner of that tender process. The FCO will retain the freehold.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the arrangements to protect the security of the new British Embassy in Berlin during and after its construction. [49137]

Mr. Fatchett: The PFI Contract between the FCO and Arteos, the PFI Operator, requires Arteos to comply with all FCO security requirements at all times, that is, during both the construction and the operating phases. Appropriate security safeguards will also be provided by the FCO during both phases. It is HMG's policy not to release detailed information on security arrangements at overseas posts.

Regional and Minority Languages

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter), of 4 June 1998, Official Report, column 350, what assessment he has made of the benefits of including Cornish within the Council of Europe Charter for Regional and Minority Languages. [49011]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government have not yet reached any conclusions on the position of Cornish under the Charter.

Immigration Cases

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reasons for delay in processing the application of Fazal Ur Rehman, at Islamabad, under ref GV100/42016, whose wife lives at 6 Edgecote Court, Leicester; when this case was referred to the Home Office; and when an outcome is expected. [48937]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our High Commission in Islamabad for the latest position on this case and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to my hon. Friend within one week of receiving their response.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the case of Sukvinder Kaur, reference-IMM/ECR/0195/98/8 the wife of Rajinder Singh of 13 Woodland Road, Leicester. [48939]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our High Commission in New Delhi for a detailed account of the case as soon as possible. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to my hon. Friend after this has been received.

Piracy

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to combat the problem of piracy and armed robbery at sea; and if he will make a statement. [49639]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have improved our published advice to UK shipowners and seafarers in order to ensure that they are fully aware of the risks and take all possible precautions against attacks. Where attacks on UK nationals have occurred, we have asked the Governments concerned, most recently in Indonesia and Brazil, to investigate the incidents and take steps to avoid repetitions. We are also encouraging wider international action to combat what is a global threat to safety at sea and international trade. This year we have helped finance counter-piracy missions organised by the International Maritime Organisation. In the autumn we will draw the attention of the UN General Assembly to the problem. All these measures have been in consultation with the UK shipping industry and trade unions, including through recent discussions hosted by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

East Timor

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cause of the early departure from East Timor of the European Union Troika envoys. [49300]

Mr. Fatchett: The EU Troika Heads of Mission were able to complete their business earlier than originally scheduled.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the recent visit to East Timor by the EU Troika Heads of Mission from Jakarta. [49640]

Mr. Fatchett: The EU/Troika Ambassadors from Jakarta visited East Timor from 27 June to 30 June 1998. They were accompanied by the representative of the EU Commission based in Jakarta and a representative of the EU Council Secretariat. This was the first visit to the territory undertaken by EU Ambassadors. It was undertaken at the initiative of the British Presidency of the European Union.

The purpose of the visit was to mark the EU's continuing concern about the situation in East Timor, to improve our knowledge of the situation there and to support the UN process of searching for a fair, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the problem.

We very much regret the death of Orlando Marcelino da Costa who was shot in Baucau during the Troika visit on 29 June and have asked the authorities to carry out a full investigation into the incident.

Although marred by this tragic incident, the visit achieved its objectives. The Ambassadors met a broad cross-section of interlocutors, including key local political figures, members of the security forces, community leaders, the churches and NGOs. They made clear the EU's engagement in the search for a solution, a message which was widely appreciated.

The outcome of the visit will be considered with EU partners under the Austrian Presidency of the EU.

European Union

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of proposals for establishing a court of political auditors to scrutinise EU initiatives. [49298]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Heads of State or Government of EU Member States will meet during the Austrian Presidency to continue their discussion at the Cardiff European Council of the future development of the EU, including ways to enhance democratic legitimacy. Like other Member States, the Government will be considering a wide range of ideas in this context.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to launch a fundamental review of policy towards the European Union. [49299]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are considering future developments in the European Union and how Britain should approach them. That was one of our top priorities when we came to office last year: we want to use the opportunities that our membership of the European Union provides in order to get the best possible deal for the British people.

It is timely that we should return to this issue now the Presidency is behind us, and in the context of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's decision to begin at the Cardiff European Council a debate on the future of Europe.

Iraq

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Iraq, following the recent incident over the Southern Iraq no-fly zone. [49297]

Mr. Fatchett: None.

Single Currency

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent statement by Chancellor Kohl on the implications for political union of the single currency. [49303]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Single Currency clearly involves a major pooling of economic sovereignty by participating Member States. Its launch, along with enlargement, economic reform, and cooperation in the fight against organised crime, is an important part of the background to the discussion about the future development of the European Union launched by the Prime Minister at Cardiff. That discussion will be taken up by Heads of Government in October.

Hong Kong

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of democratisation in Hong Kong under the guidelines set out in the Basic Law. [49294]

Mr. Fatchett: Elections to the first Legislative Council of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region were held on 24 May, in accordance with the provisions of the Basic Law. We hope that the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region Government will build on these elections and work towards early realisation of the goal of a legislature elected entirely through universal suffrage.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Todd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list (a) the number of damage notices served under the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991 and (b) the number of damage notices rejected in each of the last three years. [49262]

Mr. Battle: Figures for 1997/98 are not yet available. The number of new claims received by the Coal Authority and the coal companies in the period 1994/95–1996/97 was:

1995–96: 9,259

1994–95: 10,582.

The number of claims rejected was:

1996–97: 2,872

1995–96: 3,797

1994–95: 3,915

Source:

The Coal Authority's Annual Reports to the President of the Board of Trade on the administration of coal-mining subsidence damage claims, 1994/95–1996/97.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many claimants have pursued cases of coal mining subsidence damage through the general arbitration scheme in each year since its inception; and what was the amount of awards made to successful claimants in each year. [49102]

Mr. Battle: The Annual Report of the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators lists the number of cases registered under the Householders' Arbitration Scheme and the General Arbitration Scheme as 71 in 1993, 97 in 1994, 130 in 1995, 156 in 1996, and 122 in 1997.

The Chartered Institute does not separately publish references registered under the two Schemes. However, it advises that, from March 1997 to 3 July 1998, ten cases were registered under the General Scheme, and 155 under the Householders' Scheme.

The arbitration procedure is private between the parties, and the content of any Award is known only to the Arbitrator and the two parties concerned.

ABI Group

Mr. Cran: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1), pursuant to her letter of 11 May 1998, when her Department's Redundancy Payments Service will complete its scrutiny of claims for payments under the Employment Rights Act 1996 from former employees of the ABI Group; [48808]

(2) what are the reasons for delays in processing claims by her Department's Redundancy Payments Service from former employees of the ABI Group who are seeking payments under the Employment Rights Act 1996. [48807]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Information came to light after 11 May suggesting a possible transfer of the business, or part of it, to a new employer within the meaning of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. Those Regulations provide that, where such a transfer takes place, employees automatically transfer to the new employer under existing terms and conditions of employment. Further inquiries were therefore made as a matter of urgency.

Sufficient information has now been received to establish entitlement on some claims and they are being processed. Information remains outstanding in other cases and is being sought as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Cran: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department's Redundancy Payments Service received from the Receiver the redundancy payment forms relating to former employees of the ABI Group who are seeking payments under the Employment Rights Act 1996. [48809]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Department's Redundancy Payments Service received the first tranche of these employees' claim forms from the Receiver on 19 May 1998.

Solar Products

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to encourage the building of new production capacity for solar products in the United Kingdom. [48893]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources. In June 1997 I initiated a review of new and renewable energy policy, including what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of UK's electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010. The Review is considering what further Government support might be given to encourage the development of all forms of renewable energy, including solar power.

I have also visited the photovoltaic (PV) roof at Ford's plant in Bridgend (which has panels supplied by BP Solar) and the Intersolar factory in South Wales.

The UK is competitive with any other country in Europe as a location for new production plants. Amongst the attractions are low corporation tax, low costs of production, an established enterprise culture, a skilled adaptable workforce, and an established industrial infrastructure. My Department would be pleased to talk to any companies which are thinking of setting up a solar manufacturing plant in this country, and to advise them on the range of incentives available, such as Regional Selective Assistance and other Enterprise grants.

Multinational Enterprises

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current review of the OECD guidelines for multinational enterprises. [49159]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Government fully support the review of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises which was formally launched last month. The first phase of the review, a stocktaking and examination of experience of the guidelines, will provide a basis for determining which areas of the guidelines require revision or updating. This Department will continue to consult widely with other Government Departments and with business, trade unions, and interested NGOs in preparing detailed positions on the issues addressed by the guidelines.

Toys (Phthalates)

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent advice her Department has issued to toy retailers in respect of toys containing phthalates. [49203]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 7 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) on 1 July 1998, Official Report, columns 214–15, on the use of phthalates in toys. Since that reply, the European Commission has issued a statement recommending that Member States take steps to ensure that the migration of phthalates from PVC child-care articles and toys on their markets do not exceed the limits proposed by the Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity, and Environment. I welcome the Commission's statement—it vindicates the approach the UK has taken in discussions with the Commission and other Member States. Manufacturers' and retailers' representatives are aware of the Commission's statement.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Insurance

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the meetings (a) he and (b) the Lord Chancellor has had with Mr. Brian Raincock of Litigation Protection to discuss legal insurance. [48614]

Mr. Hoon: Both the Lord Chancellor and I have had a number of meetings with various representatives of the insurance industry, in the context of our proposals for the expansion of conditional fee arrangements. The Lord Chancellor met representatives of the Association of British Insurers and seven insurance companies, including Mr. Raincock, on 9 December 1997. I held a briefing session for legal journalists on 31 March 1998 along with others, including Mr. Raincock, interested in the Government's reforms in this area. I also spoke at a conference on 30 June 1998 organised by Neil Stewart Associates, which was chaired by Mr. Raincock.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he last met Mr. Brian Raincock of Litigation Protection to discuss the insurance of conditional fee arrangements. [48613]

Mr. Hoon: I have had no formal meetings with Mr. Raincock. I last met Mr. Raincock at a conference on 30 June 1998, organised by Neil Stewart Associates, which he chaired.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the (a) viability and (b) integrity of Litigation Protection as a provider of conditional fee arrangement insurance. [48612]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has a continuing dialogue with the insurance industry about developing the market in insurance products to underpin the use of conditional fees. That has not involved us in undertaking an assessment of particular products or individual providers.

Magistrates

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current average time that elapses between an application to become a magistrate and (a) the interview and (b) the outcome of the interview being made known to the candidate; and if he will make a statement. [48493]

Mr. Hoon: Advisory Committees on Justices of the Peace normally make recommendations to the Lord Chancellor only once a year. The length of time a candidate must wait, from making an application to being informed of its outcome, depends on when an application is made in relation to the point in the year when recommendations are made. The Lord Chancellor directs his Advisory Committees to keep candidates informed of the progress of their applications at all stages.

School Curriculum

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses were received by the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum on the place of Scottish culture in the curriculum; and when he expects the report to be published. [49274]

Mr. Wilson: This is a matter for the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum since the report of their Review Group on Scottish Culture and the Curriculum has not been submitted to the Secretary of State. A decision not to publish the report was taken by the Council at its meeting on 19 June.

DEFENCE

Army Tactical Reconnaissance Capability

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Army's future tactical reconnaissance capability. [50040]

Mr. Spellar: The Strategic Defence Review has emphasised the importance of investment in the area of fast, detailed and accurate intelligence, surveillance, target acquisition and reconnaissance, known as ISTAR. This is not only vital for combat operations, but also for many peace support operations.

We have, therefore, decided to undertake a programme of work aimed at enhancing the Army's tactical reconnaissance capability. This involves an integrated series of studies into future sensors, land reconnaissance vehicles and unmanned air vehicles. These studies will enable us to identify the most cost-effective mix of reconnaissance sensors and platforms to meet our future needs.

As part of this programme, we will conduct with the United States a collaborative Project Definition study which will examine sensors, sensor integration and the vehicles needed to meet our armies' future manned land-based reconnaissance requirements. This joint project is known as the Armoured Scout and Reconnaissance Vehicle, ASRV, and seeks to provide a highly mobile, stealthy battlefield reconnaissance capability. A Memorandum of Understanding with the United States has now been signed, and an Invitation to Tender will be released to industry in the near future. The United Kingdom element of ASRV is known as TRACER—Tactical Reconnaissance Armoured Combat Equipment Requirement. The United Kingdom will be an equal partner with the United States in this project, which will have major benefits for the United Kingdom armed forces and industry.

In parallel, we are conducting national studies into the use of Unmanned Air and Land Vehicles for meeting the Army's future reconnaissance requirements. The sensor and sensor integration work carried out under the ASRV project will inform this work. We are also examining the scope for collaboration with the United States on the Unmanned Air Vehicle element of the programme.

Multiple Launch Rocket System

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on a future rocket for the Multiple Launch Rocket System. [50046]

Mr. Spellar: The United Kingdom intends to join the collaborative programme to develop a guided rocket for the Multiple Launch Rocket System, MLRS. This guided rocket will replace the current MLRS rocket, which begins to reach the end of its service life early next century. The new rocket will have a greater range and accuracy than current rockets.

Guided MLRS is expected to be developed collaboratively with the US, France, Germany, and Italy, our partners in the original, highly successful MLRS programme.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47358]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 29 June 1998]: We have no requirement for a central record of such registers for which the Ministry of Defence is responsible.

Major Eric Joyce

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disciplinary action, under Queen's Regulations, is being taken against Major Eric Joyce, Adjutant-General's Corps in respect of his participation in the selection process as a parliamentary candidate for the Scottish Parliament. [48336]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 2 July 1998]: Administrative action in respect of Major Joyce's future in the Army has been in hand for some time. No disciplinary action is currently being taken against Major Joyce.

Royal Navy Establishment

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) current establishment and (b) actual current manning levels of (i) the Royal Navy as a whole, (ii) the Fleet Air Arm, (iii) the Royal Marines, (iv) the Royal Marine Reserve and (v) the Royal Naval Reserve. [47547]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 25 June 1998]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Microfinance

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations her Department has made to British banking institutions concerning their support for micro-credit financing in developing countries. [49315]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) has engaged with a number of UK based banks to involve them in support to particular bilateral microfinance projects in Bangladesh and Kenya. DFID is a very active member of the World Bank based Consultative Group to Assist the Poorest (CGAP) which is currently devoting considerable attention to developing methodologies to involve the formal banking sector in microfinance. For the past two years DFID has supported a series of round table discussions on microfinance at the London based Centre for the Study of Financial Innovation (CSFI). These meetings involved a variety of financial institutions from the City and resulted in a well received publication on mainstreaming microfinance. DFID has also recently established a Working Group on Financial Service, the first meeting of which was attended by a number of bankers and is likely to lead to the creation of a sub-committee specifically concerned with involving British financial institutions in microfinance in developing countries.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects in Indonesia supported by her Department which have been cancelled or reviewed by the Indonesian Government in the last 12 months (a) as a condition of IMF assistance to Indonesia, (b) as a result of links with the family of former President Suharto and (c) for other reasons, in each case specifying (i) the reason, (ii) the nature of the project and (iii) the expenditure incurred to date; and if she will make a statement. [49353]

Clare Short: We know of two projects, both concerned with power supply, that have been reviewed by the Government of Indonesia. They are:

(a) 150/500 KV sub-stations and

(b) Outer islands diesel generation.

Work on (a) has been suspended. Discussions continue on both projects. They are existing commitments supported from the Aid and Trade Provision. DFID expenditure to date on (a) has been £14.473 million while (b) has not yet commenced. The reviews are a direct response to the overall economic situation.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what level of aid commitment her Department plans to make at the forthcoming meeting of the Consultative Groups on Indonesia, specifying the amounts which will be provided as (a) budgetary support, (b) project aid and (c) humanitarian aid; and to what extent the commitment will be dependent on political reforms in Indonesia and East Timor. [49334]

Clare Short: Discussions are continuing in the run-up to the Consultative Group meeting on 28–30 July. To address the current crisis, urgent action is needed by the Government of Indonesia to implement economic and political reform, supported by a concerted international effort. We are already making a substantial contribution through our membership of the International Financial Institutions and in other ways. We are considering what more we might do. In particular, my Department is looking at options for providing rapid assistance through civil society organisations to particularly vulnerable groups affected by the crisis.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contingency plans her Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when she expects them to be in place, and tested; and if she will make a statement. [48840]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments are addressing contingency planning within their overall year 2000 programmes to ensure that systems will not fail before, during, or after the year 2000. The plans are due to be in place by December 1998 and will be tested by the Departments during 1999.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how staff numbers in her Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48885]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The number of industrial and non-industrial Northern Ireland Civil Servants and Home Civil Servants in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, including those seconded to the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, at 1 May 1997 and 1 April 1998 was as follows:

| | Permanent | Casual | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 May 1997 | 25,672 | 1,889 | 27,561 |
| 1 April 1998 | 25,270 | 1,861 | 27,131 |

Note:
Staff numbers are quoted as full-time equivalents where part-time staff are counted as a proportion of full-time hours worked

Fair Treatment Analyses

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what date the policy appraisal and fair treatment analyses undertaken in relation to the impact of the proposed Criminal Justice (Children)(NI) Order was completed; and if she will place it in the Library. [48356]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 July 1998]: A Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment analysis of the draft Criminal Justice (Children)(NI) Order was completed in July 1997. A copy has been placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits (Equality of Treatment)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to secure equality of treatment between widows and widowers in the benefits system. [49106]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Answer I gave the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Mr. Gorrie) on 23 June 1997, Official Report, column 413.

Benefits (Intensive Treatments)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what benefits are available to individuals and their carers during temporary periods of chemotherapy and other intensive treatments; [48932]

(2) what research she has evaluated into the success rate of claims for disability living allowance from people undergoing periods of chemotherapy and other intensive treatments; [48933]

(3) what assessment she has made of the effect of the rules for disability living allowance on those people undergoing periods of chemotherapy and other intensive treatments. [48934]

Mr. Denham: People who receive chemotherapy and their carers can qualify for Social Security benefits on the same basis as others who are sick or disabled or provide care, and discrete information about their claims is not collected.

The benefits designed specifically to help sick or disabled people or their carers are Attendance Allowance, Disability Living Allowance, Disability Working Allowance, Severe Disablement Allowance, Invalid Care Allowance, Statutory Sick Pay, Incapacity Benefit and Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit.

Disability Living Allowance provides help for disabled people who have had care or mobility needs for at least three months and are likely to need help with those needs for a further six months or more. People who are terminally ill and expected to live no longer than six months automatically qualify for the highest rate of Disability Living Allowance care component.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation she had with women's organisations; and if she will make a statement. [49092]

Ms Ruddock: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual Departments.

As Ministers for Women, we have worked to promote the need to identify any adverse differential impact on women as an integral part of the policy making process. On 18 May we launched the mainstreaming initiative across Whitehall.

Within this Department we are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women. As an example the recently published draft legislation on pension sharing on divorce has been the subject of consultation with key organisations representing divorcing women.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is preparing a report on the impact of Social Security policies upon women which will be published shortly.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her Department's re-organisation of the Child Support Agency; and when this re-organisation will be implemented. [48324]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security on 6 July 1998, Official Report, columns 739–54.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets have been established by her Department for the Child Support Agency. [49363]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 7 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency targets.

Every year the Secretary of State for Social Security sets targets for the Agency which are published in the Business Plans each March. For 1998/99 these targets generally follow a similar format to those for the previous 2 years, but with much increased levels, they are as follows:

Child maintenance collected and arranged

£750 million of child maintenance to be collected or arranged for direct payment from the non-resident parent to the parent with care

Maintenance assessments

65% of new maintenance applications to be cleared within 22 weeks and on 31 March 1999 there to be no applications outstanding over 52 weeks old

Reviews

Where a client is dissatisfied with a Child Support Officer's decision and requests a review; or where a change of circumstances requires a review; 80% to be cleared within 13 weeks

Payments

97% of payments made to the parent with care to be made within 10 working days of receipt from the non-resident parent

Accuracy

The cash value of all assessments checked in the year to be correct in at least 75% of cases

The following Milestone targets have also been set:

Review the first six months of closer working with the Benefits Agency, taking into account the views of stakeholders and produce a report by 31 December 1998

By 30 June 1998 formalise national and local consultation arrangements with stakeholders with a view to improving customer service.

However, Ministers have asked the Agency to carry out a review of the targets so they focus more on outputs rather than processes (for example, on the time taken to secure an actual payment rather than to complete a formal assessment or review). Ministers will be considering our proposals, in the light of their priorities set out in the Green Paper and we plan to test them out later this year. As part of the review of targets Ministers are also likely to include a Secretary of State target on customer service.

I hope this is helpful.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the (a) mean and (b) median income of (i) single pensioners, (ii) pensioner couples and (iii) all pensioners living in (1) pre-1989 regulated tenancies in the private sector and (2) housing association tenancies (A) before and (B) after housing costs. [48551]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the tables.

Incomes of pensioner units living in pre-1989 regulated tenancies in the private sector

£ per week July 1995 prices

| | Mean Income | Median Income |
|---|---|---|
| All Pensioner Units | | |

| Net income after housing costs | 77.80 | 66.30 |

2. Due to small sample size figures should be treated with a degree of caution
3. All figures are based on Pensioner Units. A Pensioner Unit is defined as a single (non-cohabiting) person over the State Pension Age (SPA) or a couple (married or cohabiting) where the man, defined as the head, is over SPA
4. The answer is comparable with Table 1a in the Family Resources Section of The Pensioners' Incomes Series 1995/96-Revised Edition

Fraud

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her latest estimate of how much money the ICL Pathway Project will save through a reduced incidence of claimants-fraud in 1998, 1999 and 2000. [49503]

Mr. Field: Current plans assume that the project to automate benefit payments at post offices will save £1 million in 1998–99, £64 million in 1999–2000 and £135 million in 2000–2001, in addition to savings of £70 million, £52 million and £52 million from existing anti-fraud measures at post offices over the same period.

Note:

All figures are in today's prices

Benefits Agency Caller Offices

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency public caller offices were closed during the period April 1992 to May 1997; how many have been closed since May 1997; and how many are under review. [46980]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Peter Mathison, its Chief Executive. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 7 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the number of Benefits Agency public caller offices closed during the period April 1992 to May 1997, the number closed since May 1997, and the number under review.

The numbers are as follows:

April 1992 to May 1997: 62

Since May 1997: 2

Under review: 11

Since May 1997, where a public caller office has been closed, measures have been taken to ensure that there was no reduction in the level of service to customers. The 2 public caller offices closed since May 1997 are Evesham and Bromsgrove. Although the closure of Bromsgrove has been approved, the closing date has not been finalised.

We are consulting the local community about the future of those offices under review.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

WALES

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48886]

Mr. Ron Davies: The number of full time equivalent staff employed by The Welsh Office between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998 is as follows:

| | Permanent staff | Casual staff |
|---|---|---|
| 1 May 1997 | 2105.3 | 199.4 |

Rhuddlan Borough Council

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many capital grants and for what purpose the former Rhuddlan Borough Council received from his Department and its agencies in the last 10 years of its existence; and which have final grant claims outstanding. [48741]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on grants paid by agencies of this Department is not held centrally. I will reply to my hon. Friend with information on the grants paid by the department as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48666]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department's target is that all correspondence should be answered within 15 working days of receipt and, for 1997–98, we achieved that target in 86 per cent. of cases. Replies from Ministers are recorded individually as are replies from officials to correspondence addressed to Ministers. Correspondence sent directly to officials is monitored on a sample basis.

National Assembly

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that no binding contract for the construction of a new building for the National Assembly of Wales is entered into until after the National Assembly has been elected. [48898]

Mr. Ron Davies: No. The process of procurement of the new building will have several stages, whose nature and timing will depend upon the contract strategy that I adopt. The design competition assessment panel will recommend an appropriate contract strategy together with an outline design in the late Autumn. It will then be necessary to develop the detailed design and seek the appropriate statutory consents. I cannot yet say when the construction contracts will be let.

Health Service (Sterile Services)

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the contract between the University Hospital Wales Trust and Sterile Services International Ltd. for the provision of sterile services provides for the trust to receive a financial benefit as a consequence of any new business acquired by Sterile Services International Ltd. for the provision of sterile services to other health trusts. [49186]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Trust will receive a payment equal to 10 per cent. of the charge (net of VAT) made by Sterile Services International for any third party work serviced from the University Hospital of Wales site. There are also revenue savings of £525,000 over 10 years in comparison with current costs.

Health Service (Complaints)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the findings in the 1997–98 Annual report of the Health Service Commissioner for England, Scotland and Wales relating to the level of increase in new complaints in Wales relative to England and Scotland in 1997–98. [49414]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The number of complaints referred to the Health Service Commissioner is low (149 in Wales, 196 in Scotland and 2,315 in England). Relatively small numerical changes, therefore, can produce larger percentage movements year on year than are justified by the trend.

Since 1994–95 the number of complaints received by the Health Service Commissioner increased by 52 per cent. in England, 36 per cent. in Scotland and 33 per cent. in Wales.

Horticulture

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future prospects of the horticulture industry in Wales. [49561]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We have a strong horticulture industry in Wales that produces premium products which are in demand across the UK.

As part of our review of the Food Strategy, we will be looking at ways of developing this valuable sector to consolidate its current market position and open up new opportunities.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Railway Stations

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentage of Britain's railway stations which have been upgraded by Railtrack; at what estimated cost; and by what date the full programme of works will be completed. [48640]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack's current Network Management Statement states that 24 per cent. of stations had been upgraded by 31 March 1998 and that the whole programme is expected to be complete by 2001 at a total cost of £1 billion (1996–97 prices).

Road Accidents

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of road deaths and injuries involve one or more vehicles driven by someone at work. [48747]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is not available. The Department does not collect data on whether drivers involved in injury accidents are at work. The information given is the number and percentage of injuries in accidents involving buses, coaches and heavy goods vehicles (HGVs). The majority of these drivers could be presumed to be 'at work'.

Climate Change

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the Government's consultation paper on climate change; and if he will make a statement. [48896]

Mr. Meacher: We intend to issue a consultation paper in the summer on policy options for delivering our climate change targets. This will focus on our 12.5 per cent. legally binding commitment from Kyoto as well as considering how we might move beyond that towards our domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in $CO_2$ emissions by 2010. We will be looking at the scope for savings from improved energy efficiency by business and in the home; lower transport emissions; and an increase in the electricity generated from renewables and combined heat and power.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which councils in England have adopted the use of wheeled bins for refuse collection. [48988]

Angela Eagle: Of the 337 waste collection authorities in England and Wales who responded on this issue in the Municipal Waste Management Survey 1995–96, 168, or almost exactly a half, were using wheeled bins for waste collection to some degree. The detailed breakdown below shows that on average 36.5 per cent. of households in any one district had wheeled bins. A list of the Councils concerned can be provided if the hon. and learned Member requires. He may also be interested to know that the results of the 1996–97 survey, which will include an analysis of the effects of the provision of wheeled bins, will be available shortly. I will make sure that he receives a copy.

Proportion of households provided with wheeled bins—1995–96

| Authority type | 0% to 24.99% | 25% to 49.99% | 50% to 74.99% | 75% to 99.99% | 100% | Mean % of households in the district |

Rural Public Transport

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department has given to local authorities regarding the spending of the extra funds allocated recently to rural public transport. [49075]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend for South Derbyshire (Mr. Todd) on 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 206.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to involve (a) hon. Members and (b) members of local authorities in the process of nomination and appointment to regional development agencies. [49189]

Angela Eagle: We wrote to hon. Members in February inviting them to put forward their nominations for RDA board membership. We also invited members of local authority regional associations to submit names to be considered for the four local authority places on each board.

Air France

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to ensure repayment of the £2 billion subsidy paid to Air France by the French Government. [49071]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We understand that the Commission is considering its response to the recent judgment of the Court of First Instance. We will consider any further steps in the light of action taken by the Commission.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the decision of the European Court of Justice that Air France received a £2 billion subsidy from the French Government contrary to the Treaty of Rome. [49072]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We welcome the recent judgment of the Court of First Instance, which confirms that public subsidies to airlines must be granted only in strict conformity to Treaty rules.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department's review of the safe storage of radioactive waste takes into account the full cost of (a) reprocessing and (b) dry storage options. [48977]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Executive are carrying out a review of storage facilities for intermediate-level waste and my Department have commissioned a study of the research requirements for the disposal of high-level waste. The Government intend to publish a consultation paper on radioactive waste management issues in the first half of next year. The issues to be covered in the paper will depend in part on the issues addressed in the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on nuclear waste, which may include reprocessing and dry storage of spent fuel.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call in the application for draft discharge authorisations in respect of nuclear waste from Sellafield; and if he will make a statement. [49321]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency are considering the responses received during the public consultation into the applications for variations to BNFL's discharge authorisations for the Sellafield site which ended in March. There have been requests for Ministers to 'call in' these applications and decide the matter for themselves and these requests are being considered. In deciding whether to exercise the statutory powers of 'call in', all representations on this issue will be carefully considered.

Endocrine-disrupting Chemicals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 30 June 1998, Official Report, column 90, what steps he takes to ensure the precautionary principle is applied to the chemicals identified as having, or suspected as having, endocrine disruptive qualities. [49204]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 7 July 1998]: A large number of chemicals are suspected of having endocrine disrupting properties. However as yet no agreed mechanism exists for identifying chemicals which actually cause endocrine disruption. International efforts are underway to agree guidelines by which endocrine disrupting chemicals can be identified. When these are in place and we are able to identify which chemicals are likely to cause endocrine disruption, appropriate action will be taken, including precautionary action where there are risks of serious harm to human health or the environment.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department takes to inform the Department of Trade and Industry of the dangers presented by endocrine-disrupting chemicals and their presence in consumer goods. [49156]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Department of Trade and Industry is advised on the health effects of chemicals used in consumer products, including those with endocrine disrupting properties, by the Department of Health.

The Department of Trade and Industry is informed by the results of the research on endocrine disrupting chemicals sponsored by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and other Government Departments and Agencies.

Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reporting mechanism exists to ensure his views and those of the Minister for the Environment are fully represented at meetings of IGGMOT. [49157]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology (IGGMOT) is organised by the Office of Science and Technology and comprises officials from interested Government Departments. The objectives of the group are to co-ordinate and develop Government policy on biotechnology including the line to be taken by the United Kingdom in negotiations in the European Union and other international forums. Officials from this Department are fully aware of Environment Ministers views and represent them at meetings. After discussion at IGGMOT the proposed Government line is agreed with all Ministers concerned.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the estimated cost of environmental protection works, including tunnelling provided for reasons of environmental protection, involved in phase two of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link between Ebbsfleet and King's Cross. [49466]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Few CTRL works in phase two are concerned exclusively with environmental protection and decisions on extensive tunnelling were taken for engineering reasons as much as for environmental reasons. It is not practicable, therefore, to separate environmental protection costs from the total.

Rural Bus Services

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authorities about increasing the scope of de minimis agreements as a means of securing early and substantial improvements to rural bus services; and if he will make a statement. [49496]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A number of representations have been received proposing an increase in the 'de minimis' exceptions from the tendering requirements for subsidised local bus services. We have been considering them against the background of the substantial new funding which we have made available for the improvement of rural bus services and expect to be bringing forward proposals shortly.

Housing

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many local authorities' development plans currently have policies identifying the appropriate proportion of houses with a specific number of bedrooms to be built in the area; [49497]

(2) how many local authorities' development plans which proposed policies identifying the appropriate number of houses with a specific number of bedrooms were (a) objected to and (b) not approved by the relevant regional Government office. [49498]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the average proportion of social and affordable housing required by each local planning authority in its development plan; [49499]

(2) what is the average proportion of social and affordable housing to be provided in each local authority area in relation to accommodation built for sale on the open market; [49500]

(3) what is the average proportion of social and affordable housing in relation to all housing which is to be provided in each local authority area as part of planning gain agreements. [49501]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held centrally and depends on the provisions made by individual local planning authorities in their local plans. Under current arrangements local planning authorities prepare assessments of need for affordable housing as a basis for preparing their local plan policies. Such policies should indicate how many affordable homes will be needed in the plan area over the lifetime of the plan, set indicative targets for the amount of affordable housing that would be sought on suitable sites, and indicate the authority's intention to seek the inclusion of an element of affordable housing on such sites. It is, therefore, not feasible at the moment, to assemble such information, except at disproportionate cost.

Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current level of full and part-time staff employed by valuation tribunals; and what will be the impact on their numbers when the number of administrative units serving them is reduced to 14. [49474]

Mr. Raynsford: Valuation Tribunals in England currently employ 204 full time and 27 part time staff, or 223 full time equivalent (FTE) staff. Of these FTE staff, 111 are Court Taking Officers (CTOs) and 112 are Clerical Officers (COs).

Numbers of staff are primarily determined by the appeal workload. Current staffing complements, based on planned workload in 1998–99 and the new administrative structure of 14 units, is 89 CTO and 89 CO staff (a total of 178 staff). We have indicated that reductions in staff should be phased in during a 3 to 5 year rationalisation period.

Local Government

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to ensure greater openness in the conduct of local government. [47943]

Mr. Raynsford: Making councils more open and accountable is at the heart of the Government's agenda to modernise local government which we set out in six consultation papers, and on which we now intend to publish a White Paper.

Fluorescent Tubes (Recycling)

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the contract to recycle spent fluorescent tubes across the Government estate has now been let. [49694]

Mr. Meacher: The call-off contract has just been awarded to Biffa Waste Services Limited by the Disposal Sales Agency who will manage it on behalf of participating Government departments. I have written to Green Ministers to promote its use across Whitehall. This initiative is in keeping with the Government's consultation paper on the waste strategy for England and Wales.

Tree Preservation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reform the tree preservation order system. [49976]

Angela Eagle: I have today issued a consultation paper, setting out the Government's proposals for reforming the tree preservation order legislation. Copies have been placed in the House library.

A review of the legislation was completed in July 1994. This revealed widespread support for tree preservation orders as an effective means of protecting selected trees and woodlands in the interests of amenity. But it also identified a number of reforms which would help streamline the system and address its main weaknesses.

The Government believe that the 1994 review struck a good balance between the need to ensure that local authorities are able to protect trees effectively and the need to provide an open, efficient and fair system in which the general public can have confidence. We therefore propose to reform the system in line with the 1994 review when a suitable opportunity to amend the primary legislation arises.

In the meantime, we also intend to update the tree preservation order regulations. Draft Regulations are included in the consultation paper. They would implement some of the reforms from the 1994 review and some new proposals which we believe would further improve the system. These include more streamlined procedures for keeping tree preservation orders up to date; new measures to speed up tree preservation order appeals to the Secretary of State; new provisions on the payment of compensation under the tree preservation order system, and clearer procedures for dealing with felling licence applications which involve protected trees.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Sixth Form Education

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average unit cost of educating 16 to 19-year-old students in (a) school sixth forms, (b) sixth form colleges and (c) tertiary colleges. [47860]

Dr. Howells: It is not possible to give unit funding costs for 16 to 19-year-old students in FE colleges or state school sixth forms. An estimate of the average unit cost in FE colleges for the 16–19 age group that takes account of the mixture of full and part-time students is not available; and because the post-16 Standard Spending Assessment is not hypothecated to school sixth forms, the funding they receive cannot be calculated.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the total number of secondary schools with sixth forms of (a) 0 to 50 pupils, (b) 51 to 100 pupils, (c) 101 to 150 pupils, (d) 151 to 200 pupils and (e) 201 to 250 pupils. [47861]

Numbers of maintained secondary schools by size of sixth form in England in January 1997

| Size of sixth form (number of pupils) | Number of schools |
|---|---|
| up to 50 | 114 |
| 51 to 100 | 338 |
| 101 to 150 | 439 |
| 151 to 200 | 402 |
| 201 to 250 | 258 |
| 251 or more | 256 |
| all schools with sixth form | 1,807 |

Education in World Citizenship

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes in funding for the Council for Education in World Citizenship he is proposing for the next three years. [48766]

Ms Estelle Morris: Funding of £10,000 has been approved so far for 1998–99. We will consider on their merits requests for further funding from the Council for Education in World Citizenship and from others in this field.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on funding for the Council for Education in World Citizenship. [48767]

Ms Estelle Morris: Representations about funding which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received include three letters and four parliamentary questions in addition to this one.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the work of the Council for Education in World Citizenship; and if he will make a statement. [48768]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department is aware of the nature and content of the work carried out by the Council for Education in World Citizenship, and has supported it for some time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Taiwan and China

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the state of relations between Taiwan and China. [47384]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 29 June 1998]: We welcome the resumption of cross-Straits talks between Taiwan and the People's Republic of China. This dialogue is important to the economic and political stability of the region.

Diplomats

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of Department of Trade and Industry officials operating from diplomatic posts on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) 24 June 1998. [48204]

Mr. Fatchett: The numbers of DTI officials operating from Diplomatic Posts on 1 May 1997 and 24 June 1998 were 31 and 37 respectively.

East Timor

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the death in Baucau, East Timor, of Orlando Da Costa during the visit of the European Union Troika; and what provisions have been made to investigate the death of Mr. Da Costa and to publish the findings of the investigation. [49337]

Mr. Fatchett: Mr. da Costa was shot during a demonstration in Baucau on 29 June as the EU Troika Heads of Mission to East Timor were going into a meeting with the Bishop of Baucau. As Presidency of the EU we called on the Indonesian authorities for a full investigation into the incident and to ensure those responsible were made accountable. We also asked that Bishop Nascimento and his staff should be closely involved in that investigation. We have also asked to receive the report of the investigation once it is complete.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions in the Council have taken place under the UK presidency of the European Union of the risk posed by nuclear installations which are not millennium compliant (a) within the European Union, (b) in former Warsaw Pact countries and (c) in the rest of the world. [49260]

Mr. Fatchett: During the UK Presidency, millennium compliance, including that of nuclear installations and utilities in general, was raised at the Telecoms, Internal Market and Industry Councils, at the European Conference on 12 March, and at the Cardiff European Council. The UK also hosted a seminar on 8 May seeking to increase awareness of the problem amongst our EU partners.

In respect of nuclear installations outside the EU we have been active in the International Atomic Energy Agency, as the responsible international body. We have also been active through our Embassies in raising global awareness of the Year 2000 problem more generally. We continue to encourage all countries to recognise the need to take immediate action to address the problem.

Kosovo

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on developments in EU policy towards Kosovo, following the recent mission by the US special presidential envoy. [49296]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Britain and our EU Partners remain deeply concerned by the increasing tensions in Kosovo. We fully support the policy of the Contact Group that urgent progress needs to be made towards a peaceful, negotiated settlement. We are working closely with the US special envoy, Richard Holbrooke to implement this policy.

We expect President Milosevic to implement fully and immediately the undertakings which he gave following his meeting with President Yeltsin on 16 June. In particular, we expect the FRY authorities to cooperate fully with the current deployment of additional international, and European, monitors to Kosovo, and attach importance to a comprehensive approach to the refugee issue. The EU intends to work with other international organisations to promote the early return of refugees and displaced persons.

EU Foreign Ministers on 29 June reiterated their condemnation of all violence and acts of terrorism in pursuit of political goals, and called upon all those in a leadership role in the Kosovar Albanian community to make clear their rejection of violence and commitment to dialogue and a peaceful resolution of the crisis.

Tibet

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, following the EU troika visit to Tibet, to demand independent verification of the health, whereabouts and situation of the Panchen Lama, Gedhun Choekyi Nyima; and if he will make a statement. [49502]

Mr. Fatchett: We are concerned about the health and safety of Gedhun Choekyi Nyima, the child recognised by the Dalai Lama as Panchen Lama, and have raised his case repeatedly with the Chinese authorities. We will continue to raise such cases, and our wider concerns about the situation in Tibet, with the Chinese authorities at every opportunity.

Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the means by which his Department will monitor adherence to the human rights provisions of the Amsterdam Treaty. [48318]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The adherence to the human rights provisions of the Amsterdam Treaty will be constantly monitored as part of the normal work of the Department in consultation with other Government Departments.

PRIME MINISTER

Community Hospitals

Q7. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government on community hospitals. [47955]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave to the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) today, 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 1070.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 8 July. [48961]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I will have further such meetings later today.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Broadcasting (Sporting Events)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many representations he has received on the subject of sporting events listed under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996, since May 1997. [49099]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received 1,949 representations, including 261 from hon. Members, on this subject since I announced my review of the list in May 1997.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many representations he has received supporting the Gordon Committee's representations to remove live coverage of cricket test matches played in England from the events listed under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996. [49098]

Mr. Chris Smith: I received 67 representations, including 12 from hon. Members, in support of the recommendations of Lord Gordon's advisory group on Test cricket.

Opera

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his Department's funding proposals for (a) ENO and (b) the Royal Opera; and if he will make a statement. [48978]

Mr. Fisher: Decisions on funding levels for individual arts organisations are a matter for the Arts Council of England.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to help tourist boards in promoting London as a tourist destination for the Millennium Experience. [48791]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 3 July 1998]: Our funding to the British Tourist Authority is enabling it to work with the New Millennium Experience Company to promote the Millennium Experience overseas. In addition, we are providing funds to the BTA to work with the London Tourism Board to market London abroad and as a gateway to Britain. The LTB is now developing plans in partnership with the BTA to promote London as the Millennium City.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what budget has been allocated for 2000 by the English Tourist Board for the promotion of the Dome at Greenwich for the millennium celebrations. [48475]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The English Tourist Board does not undertake marketing activities and has, therefore, not allocated a budget for the promotion of the Millennium Dome or the millennium celebrations. The ETB does, however, plan to provide information on the Millennium Dome and other millennium attractions to Regional Tourist Boards, Tourist Information Centres and the travel trade.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what budget has now been allocated for 2000 by the British Tourist Authority for the promotion overseas of the Dome at Greenwich for the millennium celebrations. [48476]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The British Tourist Authority has allocated £200,000 in 1998–99, as part of a three-year campaign, for specific new Millennium print and promotional work. This allocation is in addition to the more than £10 million the BTA will spend on other print and promotions directed at markets throughout the world, many of which will devote a proportion of their coverage to presenting the attractions of the Millennium Dome and other millennium celebrations.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the effect on ticket receipts for the Dome at Greenwich in 2000 arising from marketing by the English Tourist Board. [48474]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The English Tourist Board does not currently undertake any marketing activities.

Television Licences

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the yield from levying an additional 50 per cent. television licence (i) once per household on all households with (a) two and (b) three or more televisions and (ii) once per television on all households with (1) two or more and (2) three or more televisions. [49269]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The available statistics on television ownership show only the number of households without television, those with one set and those with more than one set, broken down into colour and black and white. Charging all households with more than one television set an additional 50 per cent. of the licence fee would raise an estimated £661 million in additional television licence fee revenue.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what would be the cost of introducing free television licences for all households containing a pensioner aged over (a) 70 and (b) 75 years of age. [48955]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The estimated cost of providing free television licences for all 'pensioner only' households where at least one member has reached the age of 70 is £288 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Handguns

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many outstanding payments there are under schemes A and B for pistol compensation; [49516]

(2) what is the expected date when everyone will have been paid their compensation for pistols under schemes A and B; [49514]

(3) what is the total amount of money which remains to be paid under schemes A and B for pistol compensation. [49515]

Mr. Michael: Payments under Options A and B of the large calibre handgun compensation scheme and the parallel ex gratia surrender scheme for small calibre pistols were completed at the end of May, apart from around 300 cases which could not be concluded because inquiries were outstanding. This number has since been reduced to around 130, and will continue to fall as the outstanding matters are dealt with.

Around 11,000 claims have been received under the statutory surrender scheme for small calibre pistols, some 8,300 of which have been registered on the Firearms Compensation Section computer system. Seven thousand two hundred and fifty of the registered claims have an Option A or B element. Substantive processing of these claims will begin when further progress has been made with the remaining Option C claims under the large calibre scheme. Until the claims have been examined in detail it is not possible to give their value or a firm date for their completion. I outlined progress on all the firearms compensation schemes in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 8 June 1998, Official Report, columns 438–39.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons it has not been possible to meet the claims in full of Mr. A. Haines of Little Thurrock ref ESS E 097444 of 19 September 1997 and ESS SB17944410 of 10 February 1998; what is the cause of the delay in processing these claims; and if he will make a statement. [49443]

Mr. Michael: The Option A and B elements of the claim of 19 September 1997 were paid on 26 March 1998, with an additional payment on 28 May 1998. The Option C element of the claim, which will require individual consideration of the evidence of value provided, will be dealt with as soon as possible. The claim of 10 February 1998 is under the separate statutory surrender scheme for small calibre pistols. These claims are currently being registered on the Firearms Compensation Section computer system, and substantive work on them will begin when the overall work position permits. I outlined the position on both schemes in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 8 June 1998, Official Report, columns 438–39. As he will recall, I wrote to him and to all hon. and right hon. Members on 30 January to outline progress on the payment of compensation claims under the Firearms Act. As I have said on many occasions, these claims inevitably take time to process because of the wide-ranging and generous nature of the firearms compensation schemes which Parliament approved.

Access to Information (Medical Records)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to secure freedom of access to medical records by the individual concerned whilst retaining the confidentiality of medical records of other people. [47947]

Mr. George Howarth: Individuals may gain access to their medical records under the Data Protection Act 1984 if the records are held on computer, or the Access to Health Records Act 1990 if they are held manually. There are exemptions enabling access to be denied if information relating to a third party (other than a health professional) who could thereby be identified would be disclosed, unless the other individual has consented to the disclosure; or if disclosure would be likely to cause serious harm to the physical or mental health of the patient or of any other individual.

The Data Protection Bill currently before Parliament brings together the subject access rights of the 1984 and 1990 Acts and implements the access requirements of the 1995 European Communities Data Protection Directive. There will continue to be exemptions where giving subject access would incidentally reveal the identity of a third party without his or her consent, but consistent with European Court of Human Rights requirements, decisions to refuse access on that basis will be able to be challenged by the Data Protection Commissioner or in the courts. The Bill also contains powers to provide exemptions for the avoidance of harm to the patient or other individuals.

Access to third parties' medical records in other circumstances will continue to be limited by the general law and by the non-disclosure provisions of the data protection regime.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been launched under section 25 of the Immigration Act 1971 and sections 4 and 5 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996, in respect of the offences of (a) facilitating the entry to the United Kingdom of an illegal entrant, (b) obtaining leave to enter the United Kingdom by deception and (c) assisting or facilitating a person in obtaining leave to enter the United Kingdom by deception since (i) the 1996 Act came into force and (ii) 1 May 1997. Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many asylum appeals the Refugee Legal Centre acted as legal representative in each year from 1993 to 1997; [49168]

(2) in how many (a) asylum and (b) immigration appeals the Immigration Advisory Service acted as legal representative in each year from 1995 to 1997. [49167]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information for the financial years 1993–94 to 1997–98 is given in the table. These figures reflect cases in which the Immigration Advisory Service and the Refugee Legal Centre acted as representative in appeals heard by the Immigration Appellate Authority. They exclude other activities, such as giving advice that did not lead to an appeal hearing and bail applications etc.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) of 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 438, what was the average time taken to reach a decision on an asylum application (a) immediately prior to the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 and (b), in the case of applications submitted post-July 1993, immediately prior to the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. [49198]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In my reply to the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler), the estimated average time to initial decision in applications for asylum lodged in the United Kingdom was given as 58 months in applications lodged prior to the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 and 14 months for those lodged after this Act.

In comparison, applications were estimated to be taking, on average, 20 months to reach an initial decision immediately prior to the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1993 on 26 July 1993. Applications lodged after the 1993 Act were estimated to be taking just under 11 months immediately prior to the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 on 24 July 1996.

The increases of 38 months in pre-1993 Act applications and four months in those lodged after this Act reflect the impact on the average figures of the resolution of old cases within the system as backlogs are cleared.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many rejected asylum seekers, having exhausted all appeal rights, are currently awaiting removal from the United Kingdom. [49166]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The backlog of failed asylum seekers liable for removal, at May 1998, was approximately 19,500 persons. That figure represents a snapshot, taken from Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) port and enforcement databases, of those failed asylum seekers (excluding dependants) who have exhausted their rights of appeal (including any who did not submit an appeal against the refusal of asylum) and who are liable for removal.

The above figure needs to be qualified. Firstly, it does not cover failed after-entry asylum seekers whose appeal rights have been exhausted, who have no right to remain, but against whom enforcement action has not yet been initiated.

Secondly, the figure of 19,500 includes a large proportion of cases (estimated at around 90 per cent.) where there are one or more barriers to immediate removal—such as absconding, judicial review, representations by hon. Members and difficulties with removal documentation. Typically, absconding represents a barrier to removal in half of asylum removals backlog cases.

Furthermore, the figure may include some persons who have actually left the United Kingdom voluntarily but whose departure is unknown to IND.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the six asylum seekers acquitted on 17 June of violent disorder at the Campsfield Detention Centre being placed at additional risk of persecution if returned to their own countries as a result of their trial. [49177]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: When the court directed that they be found not guilty, those who continued to be subject to detention under the Immigration Act 1971, were found places in our detention estate and were held pending consideration of arrangements for removal. However, I can confirm that the United Nations High Commission for Refugees have been afforded until 13 July to look further at the cases involved, and that we will consider any new information that may come to light in individual cases, together with any other issues, in the normal way, including any information on relevant risks of any kind.

Immigration Cases

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking in respect of the case of Nazire Javeed Abdul Gaffar Nazire (date of birth 22.09.76)-ref PO8509/98. [48936]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 29 June, setting out the action which I proposed the Immigration and Nationality Directorate should take.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48850]

Mr. Straw: All the main business areas in my Department have projects under way in response to the Year 2000 problem. Contingency planning is a key activity for all of them, but the timing of the development of contingency plans will vary depending on factors particular to each project and the computer systems concerned. Priority is being given to business critical systems.

I have asked that contingency plans for my Department should be assessed by the end of August 1998 and that plans for business critical systems should be in place and tested by the end of 1998. Some projects are well ahead of this timetable.

Appeals

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been referred by the Criminal Cases Review Commission to the Court of Appeal. [49078]

Mr. Michael: By the end of June, the Criminal Cases Review Commission had referred 17 cases to the Court of Appeal.

Elections

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to change the day for parliamentary, European or local government elections to Saturday or Sunday; and if he will make a statement. [49265]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no present plans to introduce polling at the weekend for parliamentary or European Parliamentary elections. We are, however, considering the possibility of pilot studies of this and other alternative electoral procedures at local elections.

Prisons (Halal Meat)

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to prisons on the purchase of halal meat. [46084]

Ms Quin: Prison Governors were advised in May 1997 that halal meat should only be purchased for consumption by Muslim prisoners. Centrally contracted meat suppliers were obliged only to supply halal meat on request. It has recently come to my attention that some Prison Service establishments were providing halal meat to all prisoners, regardless of their religious beliefs. I have asked the Director General to rectify this.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss the funding of the Food Standards Agency. [48496]

Dr. John Cunningham: Food Safety and Standards have been considered as part of the comprehensive spending review, on which I have had a number of meetings with the Chancellor of the Exchequer and other colleagues.

Organophosphates

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the observations in paragraph 10.29 of the Official Group on Organophosphates report to Ministers. [48869]

Dr. John Cunningham: Sheep scab mites and other sheep ectoparasites cause serious diseases and it is important to maintain a range of veterinary medicinal products effective against them. We will continue to authorise products that satisfy the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy.

Beef Labelling

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Beef Labelling Scheme from 1 July. [49110]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 July 1998]: There has been an excellent response to this initiative from all parts of the industry. Some 11,000 beef outlets in the UK have received approval for the detailed labelling information they supply. The Scheme is good news for consumers who will get better information about the beef they buy. They can now be confident that beef labelled as British will have come from animals born, raised and slaughtered in Britain.

HEALTH

Drug Users (Devon)

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions he has recently had about the South and West Devon fast track diversion and stabilisation scheme for drug users; [48148]

(2) what recent assessment he has made of the funding of the South and West Devon fast track diversion and stabilisation scheme for drug users. [48150]

Ms Jowell: Funding for the South and West Devon fast-track diversion and stabilisation scheme for drug users exists to enable the scheme to continue until March 1999 and locally based joint consultative committees are currently considering whether to provide continued funding for the scheme.

The anti-drug coordinators will be issuing a resource framework document later this year. The framework will set out the resources available for drug services across agencies and how they should be used most effectively.

Housebound Patients (Medicines)

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure delivery of medicines to those patients who are housebound. [48234]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 1 July 1998]: Many community pharmacies operate delivery services, and this is one of the ways in which housebound people are able to obtain the medicines they need. While demand for this service remains, we expect that it will continue to be provided.

Home delivery by pharmacies is not the only way in which housebound patients may obtain the medicines they need. Informal and formal carers may collect medicines on their behalf, as in some cases do community nurses.

Asthma

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of items prescribed for the treatment of asthma in each year since 1993–94. [48311]

Mr. Milburn: The number of prescription items dispensed in the community in England used in the treatment of asthma for each of the years from 1993 to 1997 is shown in the table. Information on the use of drugs in hospitals is not available.

The number of prescription items of drugs dispensed in the community used in the treatment of asthma, 1993 to 1997—England

| Year | Prescription items (million) |
|---|---|
| 1993 | 31.2 |
| 1994 | 32.7 |
| 1995 | 33.9 |
| 1996 | 34.5 |
| 1997 | 35.5 |

Note:
The data cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered in England. The information was obtained from the prescription cost analysis system for drugs used in the treatment of asthma contained in British National Formulary sections 3.1 (bronchodilators), 3.2 (corticosteroids) and 3.3 (cromoglycate and related therapy). Some of the drugs may be used for the treatment of other conditions

Ambulances

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the comparative costs and benefits of a standard Ford ambulance with (a) a Tri Star manufactured in Canada and (b) a Chevrolet manufactured in the US; and if he will make a statement. [48758]

Mr. Boateng: None. It is for each Ambulance Service National Health Service trust to specify the suitability of the vehicles it needs to achieve national and local standards based on best value for money.

Multiple Sclerosis (Dental Services)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to allow people with MS to have their amalgam fillings replaced free of charge with fillings made from other non-mercury based materials. [48921]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service dental treatments are provided on the basis of clinical need. This could include replacing fillings if that is the advice of the responsible medical practitioner. Full or partial exemptions from treatment charges are available for people on a low income.

Link Services Centres (Kent)

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the names of the organisations and their senior directors who have formally expressed an interest in running the Link Services Centres for Kent County Council. [48821]

Mr. Boateng: We do not regularly gather information on local authorities' tendering processes. My hon. Friend may, therefore, wish to write to the County Council.

Autism (MMR Vaccine)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the study presented to the American Association of Immunologists and Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology Conference in San Francisco in May by Dr. V. K. Singh on autism and the MMR Vaccine. [48835]

Ms Jowell: The Department is aware of an abstract by a Dr. V. K. Singh which was sent to the annual meeting of the American Association of Immunologists and the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology and others which was held in San Francisco in April 1998.

The United Kingdom health departments are advised on immunisation matters by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation, an independent expert group. Dr. Singh's abstract will be considered by the Committee along with other published work in this area when they next meet.

Family Planning

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners hold the Diploma of the Faculty of Family Planning. [48965]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Maternal Deaths

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the relative incidence of deaths in pregnancy according to whether women were users of the contraceptive pill before pregnancy. [48969]

Ms Jowell: The triennial Report on Confidential Inquiries into Maternal Deaths undertaken by the Department investigates the causes of all maternal deaths in the United Kingdom. As part of this work, the Report routinely collects and assesses information on use of the contraceptive pill by women who subsequently die during or after pregnancy. To date no association between use of oral contraception and maternal deaths has been noted. The authors of the current Confidential Inquiry into Maternal Deaths 1994–96 are looking at this again and will publish their report later this year.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what period following childbirth maternal deaths continue to be classified as due to pregnancy. [48970]

Ms Jowell: The tenth International Classification of Diseases, Injuries and Causes of Death which is now used by the Confidential Inquiry into Maternal Deaths in the United Kingdom defines maternal death as the death of a woman while pregnant or within 42 days of termination of pregnancy, from any cause related to or aggravated by the pregnancy or its management, but not from accidental or incidental causes. In addition, the United Kingdom collects information on late maternal deaths which occur between 42 days and one year after abortion, miscarriage or delivery that are due to direct or indirect obstetric causes.

Information on late maternal deaths is set out in Chapter 15 of the most recent report on Confidential Inquiries into Maternal Deaths in the United Kingdom 1991–93, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hospital Treatments

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospital treatments have been carried out since 1 May 1997 involving procedures which are at 30 June 1998 no longer available on the NHS. [49107]

Mr. Milburn: None. No clinically effective procedure should be ruled out in principle by the National Health Service.

Antibiotic Resistance

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has evaluated of the development of antibiotic resistance among those working in hospitals and other medical establishments. [49077]

Ms Jowell: We are not aware of any systematic study which would show whether healthcare personnel are more prone to harbour resistant bacteria than other groups.

The risk of healthcare personnel becoming colonised, via patient contact, with antibiotic resistant pathogens, and of the transfer from one patient to another, is one we take seriously. Keeping this risk to a minimum is one reason why effective infection control practices are imperative.

NHS Trusts (Enfield and Haringey)

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the payments were in cash terms to National Health Service trust chairs and non-executive directors in the years 1996–97 and 1997–98 in the area covered by Enfield and Haringey Health Authority. [49456]

Mr. Milburn: There are five National Health Service trusts in the area covered by Enfield and Haringey Health Authority, each with five non-executive directors and a chairman. In 1996–97 and 1997–98, each non-executive director was entitled to a remuneration of £5,000 a year. Four of the chairmen were entitled to a remuneration of £17,245 a year, and one was entitled to a remuneration of £19,285 a year. Chairmen and non-executive directors of NHS trusts are also entitled to claim travelling expenses but details of these expenses are not available centrally.

Volatile Substance Abuse

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent figures available on deaths associated with the practice of volatile substance abuse; and if he will make a statement. [49741]

Ms Jowell: Statistics collected by St. George's Hospital Medical School and published today show that there were 75 deaths in the United Kingdom in 1996 associated with volatile substance abuse (VSA). This is the second consecutive year in which there has been an increase over the 58 deaths in 1994 which had been the lowest level of mortality since 1981. We take any death associated with VSA very seriously and will consider whether further action is required which could help prevent such tragedies.

Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Tobacco Products

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to introduce legislation requiring tobacco companies to list all the ingredients on the packages of tobacco products offered for sale. [49451]

Ms Jowell: We have no such immediate plans.

Lariam

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many reports of suspected adverse reactions associated with Lariam (Mefloquine) were reported to the Medicines Control Agency, relative to the number of prescriptions written, in each year from 1989 to 1998; and if he will make a statement. [48699]

Ms Jowell: The number of suspected adverse reactions reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Medicines Control Agency from 1 July 1989 to 2 July 1998 for mefloquine (brand name, Lariam) as the suspect drug in the United Kingdom, and the number of prescription items dispensed in the community for mefloquine, from 1989 to 1997 in England are given in the table:

| Year | Total number of suspected adverse reactions | Number of reports | Number of prescriptions dispensed in the community in England (000) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1989 | 0 | 0 | |
| 1990 | 54 | 19 | 2.8 |
| 1991 | 58 | 27 | 7.0 |
| 1992 | 51 | 22 | 10.6 |
| 1993 | 182 | 72 | 40.3 |
| 1994 | 606 | 234 | 160.7 |
| 1995 | 1,251 | 458 | 56.6 |
| 1996 | 1,376 | 469 | 18.6 |
| 1997 | 641 | 2,229 | 16.9 |
| Up to 2 July 1998 | 179 | 65 | .. |

A report of a suspected adverse drug reaction (ADR) does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the drug. Each report relates to one patient. Patients may have more than one suspected reaction and the number of reactions given therefore exceeds the number of patients affected as seen in the table. The number of reports received for a medicine is influenced by a number of factors including the extent of its usage and publicity related to the medicine as well as its intrinsic toxicity.

Mefloquine was first dispensed in 1990. The prescription information was obtained from the prescription cost analysis system. Prescription cost analysis is based on information obtained from the Prescription Pricing Authority. The prescription data for 1990 are not consistent with data from 1991 to 1997. The figure for 1990 is based on prescription fees and on a sample of 1 in 200 prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists only. Figures for 1991 onwards are based on items and cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

The prescription data provided include prescriptions dispensed in England only, whereas the spontaneous ADR data include reactions occurring throughout the UK. Therefore, these data sets are not directly comparable.

Alcohol (Health Warnings)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to introduce health warnings on the dangers of alcohol on the containers of alcoholic drinks. [49450]

Ms Jowell: We believe that if alcohol is consumed in accordance with the guidance in Sensible Drinking it is not likely to be harmful to a person's health. We, therefore have no plans to require health warnings to be displayed on alcohol containers. However, we fully support the initiative of a number of manufacturers and retailers in introducing unit labelling on their packaged products on a voluntary basis to support our sensible drinking messages.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Agencies

3. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will review the organisation of executive agencies to reflect function rather than departmental origin. [47921]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Ministers establish agencies by function to discharge their departmental responsibilities, and they keep them under review to take account of changing needs and priorities. Closer working between agencies is an important part of our Better Government agenda.

Information Technology

6. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster pursuant to his oral answer of 10 June 1998, Official Report, column 1064, what assessment he has made of the benefits to United Kingdom citizens of Government use of information technology. [47924]

Dr. David Clark: Information technology is an important key in improving government services for everyone in our society. There is great potential for the Government to deliver information and services to our citizens at the time and place of their choosing and by the method that is most convenient to them.

My officials in the Central Information Technology Unit are currently conducting extensive national market research to test the public's attitude to using electronic services. The first two interim reports have been published on CITU's website. Initial findings suggest that the reaction of both the public and business to the prospect of using electronic mediums to access government services is positive: 74 per cent. of people said they would be quite likely or very likely to use new methods of service delivery.

26. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to use new technology to improve communication between Government Departments. [47945]

Dr. David Clark: The Government see new technologies as an important key to the successful delivery of user-friendly Government services to the citizen and business.

Central government departments now have the potential to access the newly established Government Secure Intranet (GSI), which enables secure interconnections across a range of departmental IT systems. The GSI will facilitate a more coherent, customer-focused and integrated electronic service delivery to citizens and businesses, by providing security for information that is entrusted to the Government and by allowing unrestricted access to the Internet where required.

The GSI enables departments to communicate securely by e-mail and to benefit from access to, and the ability to receive communications over, the Internet. It will also enable the public to access the service via the Internet by using home PCs and eventually through digital television. It provides a means of linking up and promoting the increasing volume of Government services that are available electronically.

Open Government

12. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on his proposals for open government. [47930]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) today, Official Report, column 1062.

Public Appointments

13. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received about employment in the public service of people from the Commonwealth and the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [47931]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In the past three months I have received five representations including one from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) written with the support of 32 other hon. Members.

21. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to change the system for public appointments. [47939]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Proposals for making the public appointments system more transparent and accessible were published on 29 June 1998 in a paper "Quangos: Opening the Doors". This paper, which takes account of the comments received during the Government's recent consultation exercise on quangos, makes further proposals on widening the field of candidates for appointment. A second paper "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointments" was published on the same day. This provides details of the Government's plans to make public appointments more representative of society as a whole.

Copies of both papers have been sent to all hon. and right hon. Members as well as being placed in the Library.

Parliamentary Accountability

14. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for the parallel development of parliamentary accountability and inter-departmental task forces. [47932]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Ministers are accountable to Parliament for the policies, decisions and actions of their Departments. This includes accountability for decisions taken on the basis of advice from task forces.

Deregulation

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what major deregulation proposals are planned to be introduced during the next 12 months. [47933]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I would like to thank my hon. Friend for the valuable work he is doing as Chair of the House of Commons Deregulation Committee, who do a very useful job in scrutinising proposals to get rid of outdated legislation. However, it would not be appropriate to announce specific deregulation order proposals at this time, as they are subject to detailed consultation with all interested parties and I would not want to pre-empt announcements by my colleagues with policy responsibility for specific deregulation orders.

We are also looking at the scope for reform of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

Internet

16. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to increase access to Government Departments by persons using the Internet. [47934]

Dr. David Clark: While it is a matter for individual Departments to decide whether to establish and publish web sites on the World Wide Web, I am pleased to say all the major Departments of State do indeed already have public web sites. They form part of the over 600 public sector organisations that are accessible on World Wide Web via the Government Information Service run by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency.

Millennium Compliance

17. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to make his next quarterly report on the millennium compliance of computer systems in central Government. [47935]

Dr. David Clark: The next quarterly report is due in September. As this will fall during the summer recess, I propose to write to all hon. Members during the recess to report the results. I will also arrange for all relevant information to be placed in the Library of the House and published on the Internet.

23. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in the co-ordination of a strategy to combat the threat of year 2000 computer bugs. [47941]

Dr. David Clark: A Ministerial Group, which is chaired by the President of the Board of Trade, has been set up to drive forward action across the private and public sectors to ensure that the national infrastructure is not damaged by the failure of electronic systems as a result of the Millennium date change. I chair a sub-group which is responsible for co-ordinating and driving action in tackling the Millennium bug problem across central government and the wider public sector.

27. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to address the millennium bug problem as it affects central Government. [47946]

Dr. David Clark: I chair the Ministerial sub-group which is responsible for co-ordinating and driving forward action to tackle the millennium bug problem within central government and across the wider public sector. I have initiated a system of quarterly reviews to monitor the progress that has been made in tackling the problem in central government departments and agencies. The latest review also included information on the wider public sector. My statement to the House on 8 June 1998, Official Report, columns 716–18, summarised the results. Future statements will cover key elements of the wider public sector in more detail. I am following up concerns highlighted by the latest review with the Departments concerned. Copies and summaries of the completed questionnaires from Departments, and their reports on wider public sector bodies, have been placed in the libraries of both Houses and published on the Internet.

"Better Government"

18. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the proposals contained in the "Better Government" White Paper. [47936]

Dr. David Clark: The "Better Government" White Paper will set out the Government's vision for modern, effective public services which match the way people live their lives today. New technology is one of the tools we will use to "join up" government and put the citizen first.

Secondments (Civil Service)

19. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to encourage secondments from industry, commerce, the professions and other occupations into the (a) home civil service and (b) diplomatic service. [47937]

Dr. David Clark: I have established an Interchange Steering Council to offer advice on the exchange of personnel and good practice between the civil service and other sectors. Officials are working with representatives from business, local government, academia and the voluntary sector to increase participation.

The FCO have specific programmes offering business people opportunities to take up posts or to work on projects overseas.

Special Advisers

20. Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what regulations govern the shareholdings of special advisers to prevent cases of conflict of interest arising. [47938]

Dr. David Clark: Special Advisers—like all civil servants—are required under the terms and conditions of their employment to declare to their department any business interests or shareholdings which they or members of their immediate family hold, which they would be able to further as a result of their official position. They must not be involved in taking any decision which could affect the value of their private investments, or the value of those on which they give advice to others; or use information acquired in the course of their work to advance their private financial interests or those of others.

Electronic Red Box

22. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department plans to introduce the mark 2 version of the prototype electronic red box. [47940]

Dr. David Clark: We are currently upgrading the prototype electronic Red Box, which I demonstrated in January, to take account of the latest developments in IT.

Testing trials on the new prototype will shortly be completed and I expect to be able to make more detailed announcement on the introduction of an upgraded prototype Red Box into my office before the end of the month.

28. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made with the virtual red box. [47948]

Dr. David Clark: I am pleased to report that we are making good progress with prototype electronic Red Box, which I demonstrated in January.

A new version is being developed using a small laptop computer, which will be activated by a Smart Card that will allow me to communicate securely with my office from any location in the UK.

Testing trials on the new prototype will shortly be completed and I expect to be able to make more detailed announcement on the introduction of an upgraded prototype Red Box into my office before the end of the month.

Government Information and Communication Service

24. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received regarding appointments to the Government information service. [47942]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 10 June 1998, Official Report, column 619, which covered appointments to the Government Information and Communication Service (GICS) as well as wider issues affecting the GICS.

Freedom of Information Bill

25. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to publish the Freedom of Information Bill. [47944]

Dr. David Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) today, Official Report, column 1055.

Written Answers to Questions

TREASURY

Royal Mint

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what options are under consideration for the Royal Mint; and if he will indicate in respect of each option whether consultants have been engaged. [49417]

Mrs. Liddell: The terms of reference for the review of public/private-partnership options for the Royal Mint are:

To advise Treasury Ministers on the options for a public/private partnership for the Royal Mint to enable it to take advantage of new commercial opportunities. In considering these options, the review will take into account the views of affected stakeholders and assess the implications for:

the security and competitiveness of supply of UK circulating coins;

the net cost to Government of UK circulating coins; possible UK entry into stage 3 of economic and monetary union; enhancing the Royal Mint's ability to take advantage of existing and new commercial opportunities;

the public-policy aspects of coinage, including design, choice of denominations and commemorative issues;

the staff of the Royal Mint, including their conditions and terms of service;

the need for, and requirements of, legislation; and the speed with which change can be implemented.

The review will also employ consultants to advise on (i) potential purchasers and partners, including institutional investors, for the Mint; (ii) the current market for coin supply, feeding into our consideration of how privatisation might be effected and competitiveness of supply ensured; and (iii) the impact of the euro.

The review will report to Treasury Ministers by the end of September.

All options, including full and partial sale and other forms of private-sector involvement, will be considered by the review.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 28, what assessment he has made of the percentage risk of default if the financial markets had issued a Channel Tunnel Rail Link guarantee. [49444]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 7 July 1998]: As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister made clear in his statement of 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–84, the Government consider the risk of a liability being incurred under the guarantees to be given over the bonds which will be issued by London and Continental Railways to be remote.

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when the Government will set up the review of the ICL Pathway Project; who is undertaking it; and who has been invited to give evidence to it; [49504]

(2) what are the terms of reference of the Government review of the ICL Pathway Project; and when it is due to report. [49505]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 8 July 1998]: My officials are working with officials from DSS and DTI to monitor the progress of this important PFI project, as is usual for projects of this scale and complexity. Ministers are being kept fully up to date with progress.

Default Interest

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the extra revenue arising from the increase in default interest for (a) late payment of VAT, (b) air passenger duty, (c) insurance premium tax and (d) landfill tax. [49669]

Dawn Primarolo: The increase in revenue resulting from the recent increase in the rate of default interest is estimated to be some £20 million in a full year. The majority of this will be in respect of late payment of VAT; the amounts relating to the other taxes are expected to be negligible.

Smuggling

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recorded instances of cross-border smuggling of (a) petrol, (b) alcohol, (c) smoking materials, (d) animals and (e) videos there have been in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [48360]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The table shows the number of detections by Customs and Excise of goods smuggled from the Irish Republic into Northern Ireland:

Instances of cross-border smuggling 1995–1998 (to date)

| | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 | 1998 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Hydrocarbon oils | 6 | 3 | 3 | 32 |
| Alcohol | 19 | 29 | 21 | 10 |
| Tobacco | 24 | 48 | 67 | 7 |
| Alcohol and Tobacco | 19 | 31 | 13 | 19 |
| Videos | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |

Figures include all hydrocarbon oils detections, not only petrol.
All detected at premises in Northern Ireland. Information is not available as to whether the smuggling route used was via mainland UK or the Republic of Ireland, however intelligence suggests that both routes are used.
Instances where both alcohol and tobacco goods were the subject of the smuggling-attempt.

I regret that no figures are available for years before 1995.

Falkland Islands

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers he has to levy taxes on the Falkland Islands. [48344]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 July 1998]: None.

The Falkland Island Councillors made a generous offer in 1994 to share revenues from oil production with HMG and we agreed that we should now discuss arrangements for this in a spirit of co-operation and partnership.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers paid capital gains tax for the last tax year for which figures are available; and what was the total amount of revenue raised. [48086]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 July 1998]: It is provisionally estimated that 110,000 taxpayers had capital gains tax liabilities of £1.4 billion for 1996–97, the latest tax year for which information is available.

Kyoto Protocol Targets

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages of introducing additional tax incentives to help the Government achieve their target under the Kyoto Protocol. [48975]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government plan to consult later this summer on policy options for delivering its legally-binding target under the Kyoto Protocol, and for moving beyond that towards its domestic aim of a 20 per cent. cut in carbon dioxide emissions on 1990 levels by 2010. Within industry, the Government believe that economic instruments may offer the potential to achieve greenhouse gas reductions cost-effectively. The Chancellor has asked Sir Colin Marshall, assisted by a Government Task Force, to consider whether and, if so, how best to use economic instruments—such as an industrial energy tax and/or other market mechanisms—to improve the business use of energy and to help reduce emissions of greenhouse gases from this sector.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue the Treasury received from the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry in the last financial year. [47802]

Dawn Primarolo: The corporation tax liability of businesses classified to the pharmaceutical industry in respect of accounting periods ending in the financial year 1996–97 is estimated at £400 million.

Pension Funds

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress in respect of measures to allow the streaming of income for pension funds invested in balanced authorised unit trusts. [49164]

Mrs. Liddell: This proposal has been put to the Government. It is under review.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Inland Revenue's fixed profit car scheme rates to take account of increases in the costs of motoring. [48983]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's authorised mileage rates (used in the fixed profit car scheme) are fixed each year. The rates for 1998–99 were announced last December. A similar timetable will apply to setting the rates for 1999–2000.

Duty Free

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if ferries en route to France via the Channel Islands will after 1999 be able to sell duty free goods. [48756]

Dawn Primarolo: Yes. The Channel Islands are excluded from the fiscal territory of the European Community so journeys to and from the Channel Islands and an EU Member State are not affected by the abolition of intra-EU duty free sales from 30 June 1999.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if ferries which sail out of EU waters and immediately return will be able to sell duty free goods after 1999. [48757]

Dawn Primarolo: The European Commission has set out in a working document its view on the arrangements which should apply to sales on board ships following the abolition of intra-EU duty-free sales after 30 June 1999. They express the view that duty-free sales of goods to be carried away will not be allowed on intra-EU voyages—even if part of a ship's voyage is in international waters. Duty-free sales of goods for consumption on board will continue to be governed by the national provisions of member states until the Council adopts Community provisions on stores for boats and aircraft. Commission chaired discussions at official level are underway to work out the detail of these arrangements.

Public Corporations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those public corporations that will be evaluated for possible changes in fiscal rules; and when such changes are likely to be announced. [48760]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The public corporations included in section 3.4 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (published 11 June) under the paragraph headed "Additional flexibility for large public corporations, which are not dependent on government grants, to put them on a more commercial footing" are the Post Office, British Nuclear Fuels Limited, National Air Traffic Services, the Commonwealth Development Corporation, the Royal Mint, the Tote, the Crown Estate Office and Channel 4 Television. Compared with the regime for public corporations in departmental expenditure limits, these largely self-funding public corporations will have more flexibilities to manage their spending between years, within agreed limits on external finance from 1999–2000.

The way of measuring the impact of these public corporations on the fiscal aggregates is unchanged.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax deduction has been made available for sponsorship of the Millennium Experience; and what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer in lost revenue. [48830]

Dawn Primarolo: When calculating business profits for tax purposes, the general rule is that a deduction is allowable for tax purposes where expenditure is revenue in nature and incurred wholly and exclusively for trade purposes. This rule applies to sponsorship payments, as it does to business expenditure generally. The availability of a tax deduction for business expenditure on sponsorship payments when calculating business profits will always depend on the particular factors of the donor business. No information is available about sponsorship payments to the Millennium Experience qualifying as a deduction for tax purposes, or of the cost of the tax relief.

Unemployment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer per unemployed person per year in terms of unemployment-related benefits and forgone taxes where the calculation assumes the person to have been on average earnings. [48247]

Dawn Primarolo: The average level of unemployment-related benefits per unemployed person per year, and the direct taxes paid by (or on behalf of) people with average earnings are provided as follows. These figures are not, however, a complete assessment of the exchequer costs of changes in unemployment. Such an assessment will depend upon the reasons for the change, and the extent to which it affects the sustainable level of employment. This in turn requires an analysis of the direct and indirect effects on the wider labour market and the economy as a whole—including the effect on inflationary pressure and the policy response to it. It also needs to reflect the fact that unemployed people do not, on average, move into jobs with average earnings.

The average cost of unemployment-related benefits per unemployed person per year, in 1998–99 benefit levels is around £3,850, with the entitlement of individuals around this average depending on their particular circumstances. For the purposes of calculating this figure, unemployment-related benefits are defined as Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA), and Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit payments to people in receipt of JSA.

In 1998–99, a single person in employment for a full year on median earnings (£337 per week) would pay £4,400 in income tax and employee National Insurance Contributions (NICs). In 1998–99, a married couple with one member of the couple in employment for a full year on median earnings (£337 per week) would pay £4,100 in income tax and employee NICs. These figures assume that the individual has no income other than earnings from employment, is not eligible for Mortgage Interest Relief, and that they pay contracted-in employee's NICs. The figures ignore indirect taxes. An employer would pay £1,800 in employer NICs in respect of an employee on median earnings.

Low Pay

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the net wage at 1998–99 prices for a single person, working 39 hours a week for (a) £3.60 an hour, (b) £3.70 an hour, (c) £4 an hour and (d) £4.26 an hour for (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000 and (iv) 2000–2001; [48186]

(2) what estimate he has made of the net wage at 1998–99 prices for a married person with (a) one child and (b) two children under 12, who is the main wage earner, working 39 hours a week for (i) £3.60 an hour, (ii) £3.70 an hour, (iii) £4 an hour and (iv) £4.26 an hour for (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99, (3) 1999–2000 and (4) 2000–2001. [48185]

Dawn Primarolo: The table gives the weekly net income (at 1998–99 prices) of a single person, a married couple with one child, and a married couple with two children, at different hourly wage rates.

As the final column of the table shows, the National Minimum Wage and Budget measures such as the Working Families Tax Credit will mean a significant boost for low income working families: every family with children will be guaranteed an income for full-time work of at least £180 a week.

| Family type | Hourly wage rate (at 1998–99 prices) | 1997–98 (at 1998–99 prices) | 1998–99 | 1998–99 (including Budget measures due to be introduced in 1999–2000) |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Single person | £3.60 | 119.36 | 119.53 | 120.81 |
| | £3.70 | 122.09 | 122.26 | 123.54 |
| | £4.00 | 130.28 | 130.45 | 131.73 |
| | £4.26 | 137.22 | 137.47 | 138.75 |
| Married person, one child | £3.60 | 176.46 | 176.20 | 193.91 |
| | £3.70 | 177.28 | 177.02 | 195.14 |
| | £4.00 | 179.74 | 179.48 | 198.82 |
| | £4.26 | 181.82 | 181.59 | 201.98 |
| Married person, 2 children | £3.60 | 198.09 | 197.85 | 218.06 |
| | £3.70 | 198.91 | 198.67 | 219.29 |
| | £4.00 | 201.37 | 201.13 | 222.97 |
| | £4.26 | 203.45 | 203.24 | 226.13 |

The income figures are net of Income Tax (including Working Families Tax Credit in the last column), National Insurance Contributions, Child Benefit and Family Credit (where appropriate). The figures do not include any Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit the households may be eligible for; this would depend upon rent and council tax bills. The net incomes shown would be higher if these benefits were applicable and included in the figures.

The figures assume that the earner is paying contracted-in employees' NICs', that they have no other, non-earned, income, and that they work 39 hours a week.

Figures for 1999–2000 and 2000–2001 are not available; they will depend upon any changes in tax and benefit rates and the rate of inflation.

The Bank of England has played a leading role in facilitating preparation for the euro in the financial sector. All indications are that the City is ready for the launch of the euro and expects to maintain its position as Europe's leading financial centre.

Ms Ryan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people in full-time employment in the Greater London area currently earn less than the proposed national minimum wage development rate for 18 to 21-year-olds; [49458]

(2) how many people in full-time employment in Enfield currently earn less than the proposed national minimum wage development rate for 18 to 21-year-olds; [49455]

(3) how many people in the constituency of Enfield, North earn less than the proposed national minimum wage, broken down by (a) gender, (b) age (c) ethnic origin and (d) full or part-time employment. [49457]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Joan Ryan, dated 9 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions (49455, 49457 and 49458) on earnings.

The national minimum wage (NMW) will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for employees aged over 21. A development rate of £3.00 per hour will apply for employees aged 18 to 21. The proposals also include a provision for a rate of £3.20 which will apply to those over 21 years receiving accredited training during the first six months of a new job with a new employer, but we are unable to provide data on this. Workers aged 16 and 17 and all those on apprenticeship with be exempt.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £3.40 and £2.80 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates and I have provided supplementary data for these levels.

The new Earnings Survey (NES) does not collect information on the ethnic origin of employees, therefore figures for this element of the question cannot be given.

The preferred method for assessing the coverage of the proposed NMW is to present adjusted NES and Labour Force Survey (LFS) data for the number of employees earning less than the proposed NMW rates. This method adjusts for the fact that the NES is based on a one per cent. sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff, earning below the tax-threshold, and in particular those who work part-time. It is not possible to use this method for the data requested for these areas and, where it is available, data, solely from the NES, have been provided in the attached tables. Regrettably, NES cannot provide statistically reliable estimates for much of the information requested for Enfield North constituency and Enfield borough.

The extent of the bias in the NES data may be estimated for Greater London by using the adjusted NES and LFS data for all employees. This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of full-time employees aged 18 to 21 years earning below £3.00 could understate the true position by as much as 12 percentage points. The equivalent figure for those aged over 21 years earning below £3.60 is 2 percentage points. However, because the bias has been estimated on the basis of all employees, it would be wise to treat these figures as broadly indicative rather than as precise estimates for full-time employees.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the working families tax credit is to be delivered through the PAYE system by adjusting PAYE code numbers; and if he will consult employers about the workings of the system. [50366]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) will be introduced in October 1999 and paid through the payroll from April 2000. Inland Revenue consultations, aimed at minimising any extra work for employers, are continuing. An initial conclusion is that it would not be practical to use the employee's PAYE code to pay the Working Families Tax Credit. Although much work remains to be done before the detailed shape of the new scheme is settled, the current working assumption is that employers will be notified by the Inland Revenue of the amount of WFTC due to an employee and that this will be added to the employee's pay and paid through the PAYE system.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49534]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Prime Minister today, Official Report, column 600.

Growth

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the level of economic growth in 1999. [49628]

Mrs. Liddell: The March 1998 Budget forecast showed economic growth of between $1\frac{1}{2}$ and $2\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. in 1999. Developments since then have been broadly in line with our expectations, both in terms of total output and also its composition.

Income Tax

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answers of 20 April 1998, Official Report, columns 400–02, and 5 June 1998, Official Report, columns 386–90, if he will provide comparable figures for two earner married couples where the income is split between them in the ratio of 60:40. [49187]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is contained in the table.

Two earner married couple with income split in the ratio 60:40—for the 1998/99 tax year

| | Gross income (£ per week) | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 150 | 200 | 250 | 300 | 400 |
| NICs | 3.88 | 9.76 | 14.76 | 19.76 | 31.76 |
| Income Tax | 0 | 2.38 | 12.25 | 22.75 | 49.05 |
| Tax and NICs as percentage of gross earnings | 2.6 | 6.1 | 10.8 | 14.2 | 20.2 |
| Net Income | 146.12 | 187.86 | 222.99 | 257.49 | 319.19 |
| Equivalised Net Income | 146.12 | 187.86 | 222.99 | 257.49 | 319.19 |

Notes:

1. The figures are calculated on the basis that all earnings are from employment and that there are no other sources of income.
2. The Married Couples Allowance has been allocated to the person earning 60% of the total.
3. The standard McClements scales have been used to determine equivalised income. This is the same process that is used in the DSS's Households Below Average Income publication.

Some of these families may also be entitled to housing benefit and council tax benefit. However, as this will depend upon the composition of the housing costs (between mortgage payments, council tax, and rent) housing benefit and council tax benefit have been left out of these figures.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48874]

Mrs. Liddell: Staff numbers[1] in HM Treasury are as follows:

| | 1 April 1997[2] | 1 January 1998[2] | Percentage change |
|---|---|---|---|
| Permanent | 888.0 | 897.5 | +1.06 |
| Casual | 26.0 | 26.0 | 0.00 |

[1] Figures are shown as whole time equivalents
[2] Data are not readily available for either 1 May 1997 or 31 January 1998 and would involve disproportionate cost to obtain

Note:

On 5 January 1998, 95 permanent staff were transferred to the Treasury from the Department of Trade and Industry's Insurance Directorate under a machinery of government change. The vast bulk of them will move again to the Financial Services Authority in due course.

Public Debt

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his reasons for defining a prudent level of public debt as being below 40 per cent. of GDP; and how this compares to the current level of public debt in each EU country. [47034]

Mr. Darling: The Government's policy on the level of public debt is explained in section 3.2.4 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report published last month.

A comparison of net public debt as a proportion of GDP is set out in the table. These are based on OECD figures where available, and otherwise on European Commission data for gross Government debt.

General Government net financial liabilities (per cent. of GDP)

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held on 6 July. [50215]

Mrs. Liddell: I attended the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 6 July. Given that this was the first Council of the Austrian Presidency, we discussed only one item of substantive business in formal session. The Council heard and then commented on the work programme of the Austrian Presidency for ECOFIN over the next six months. I and other Ministers welcomed the broad themes set out by Minister Edlinger, which largely take forward work from the previous six months, as anticipated in the Cardiff European Council Conclusions. During discussions, several Ministers paid tribute to the UK Presidency's handling over the past six months, and welcomed the progress made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she plans to make regarding the ability of hon. Members to ask questions of Ministers on matters that have been devolved to the National Assembly for Wales following the election of the Assembly. [49711]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have no immediate proposals for any change in the procedure for questions. I understand that the Procedure Committee will be conducting an inquiry into the implications for the House of devolution. Any suggestions from the hon. Member will be welcome. The Government will consider carefully any recommendations the Committee makes.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46686]

Mr. Fatchett: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Department consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, White Papers and discussion on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. There have been no major exercises since 1 May 1997 researching public reaction to Government policies or potential new policies; nor has the Department published any White Papers. We did however, commission a survey on attitudes to Europe in November 1997. A copy of the results has been placed in the Library.

Landmines

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the use of anti-personnel mines will be included in the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court. [49338]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our intention is get landmines universally banned.

The Statute of the International Criminal Court is still being negotiated. We support proposals for the Court to be able to try war crimes which are recognised under customary international law. Despite the signature of the Ottawa Convention, the use of anti-personnel landmines does not at present come into this category. But landmines, like any other weapon, might be used in a way that would contravene international law. Under the proposals which we support this could well lead to the user being prosecuted at the International Criminal Court.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts were made by Her Majesty's Government to amend Articles of the Ottawa Convention on Anti-Personnel Mines to permit British personnel to assist members of the armed forces of a state that is not a party to that convention to lay anti-personnel mines. [49671]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the indemnities relative to the Sierra Leone arms investigation will come into force. [50318]

Mr. Robin Cook: To assist Sir Thomas Legg to complete his report as soon as possible, the indemnities will come into force on 10 July.

Nigeria

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what indications have been received from the Nigerian Government regarding the timetable for (a) the release of political prisoners and (b) the restoration of democracy and human rights. [49698]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We still await an announcement by the Nigerian Government of the timetable for the release of detainees and the restoration of democracy and human rights.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) to Nigeria. [49663]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I visited Nigeria on 25–26 June representing both my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the EU Presidency. I had a constructive meeting with General Abubakar. He set out his ideas for the way ahead, stressing the need for all Nigerians, including those in exile, to be a part of the process. I stressed the importance of an inclusive political process leading to the early restoration of democratic civilian rule.

I was deeply saddened by the death of Chief Abiola on 7 July. He had been in detention since 1994 and we had repeatedly called for his release, most recently during my visit. It is particularly tragic that he died at a time when Nigeria had embarked on a process of reconciliation, and we believed his release to be imminent.

During my visit I also called for the release of all other detainees. It is essential that General Abubakar now does this and makes an early announcement about the restoration of civilian rule. I also encouraged General Abubakar to allow the UN Commission on Human Rights Special Rapporteur to visit Nigeria in accordance with his mandate.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Nigeria. [49664]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to visit Nigeria.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from UK companies about Nigeria. [49665]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am in correspondence with the West Africa Committee who represent the majority of British companies active in Nigeria.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49536]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49089]

The Attorney-General: Guidance for policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual departments. The only item of legislation for which my department has been directly responsible, the Law Officers Act 1997, did not by its nature, raise an issue of possible differential impact on women.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Employees (Health and Safety)

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that employers reduce to an acceptable level risks posed to the health and safety of employees using public roads while at work. [48748]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Road Traffic and related Acts provide the legal framework for driving on Britain's roads. All drivers, including those who drive as part of their employment, are obliged to obey these laws.

The safety of company car drivers (as distinct from people whose job is specifically driving related e.g. HGV and bus drivers) is of concern. We believe the best way forward is for employers to foster working practices which encourage responsible driving. We have supported the work of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents in producing its guidance document "Managing Occupational Road Risk" published earlier this year, to help organisations to develop an effective management approach. We will continue to encourage employers to adopt such an approach, which could have wider benefits in addition to road safety.

Local Authority Transport Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money in each of the past five years each eligible local authority has received from the European Regional Development Fund; and what (a) road and (b) other transport schemes have been supported under this scheme. [48917]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have placed a copy of the information requested in the Library.

Landfill Tax

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account will be taken of the increase in landfill tax levy from April 1999 when calculating local authorities' standard spending assessments for 1999–2000. [48911]

Mr. Raynsford: In calculating Total Standard Spending for 1999–2000, the Government will take into account spending pressures facing local authorities, including the increase in landfill tax, as well as the opportunities for local government to make savings.

Sewage Treatment

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will respond to the Second report of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee, Sewage Treatment and Disposal (HC 266-I). [48943]

Mr. Meacher: The Government aim to respond to the Report later this month.

Lorries

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answers of 18 May 1998, Official Report, column 219, and 15 June 1998, Official Report, column 39, if drivers of lorries engaged in international haulage are required to be in possession of a CMR, goods in transit insurance document; and what role this document will have in assisting the enforcement authorities to distinguish the origin and destination of journeys, if it is decided not to allow five axle lorries weighing 40 tonnes to operate in the domestic market. [48944]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Goods carried by road for hire or reward on international journeys to or from the UK, except between the UK and the Republic of Ireland, are covered by the Convention on the contract for the international carriage of goods by road (CMR) and are required to be accompanied by a CMR consignment note. This requirement does not apply to goods being carried by own-account operators.

As indicated in my answers of 18 May and 15 June, Official Report, columns 219 and 39 respectively, enforcement issues will be taken into account when considering whether or not to allow 40 tonne lorries for domestic as well as international movements in the UK. A decision will be announced in the forthcoming White paper on Integrated Transport.

Road Development Projects

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many properties have been purchased for road development projects in the Greater London area by his Department in each of the last three years; and at what cost. [49278]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The total number and value of properties acquired by the Highways Agency in the Greater London Area in the last three years are as follows. The summary relates to properties acquired in connection with trunk roads only.

| Financial year | Number acquired | Purchase price (£) |
|---|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 66 | 15,605,000 |
| 1996–97 | 22 | 1,647,050 |
| 1997–98 | 33 | 5,063,770 |

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the potential threat to the environment in the United Kingdom posed by nuclear installations which are not millennium compliant in former Warsaw Pact countries. [49259]

Angela Eagle: No specific assessment has been made of the potential threat to the UK environment posed by overseas nuclear installations which are not millennium compliant. However, the UK has been active in the International Atomic Energy Agency and via our own embassies in seeking to raise global awareness of the problem. We are continuing to encourage all countries to recognise the need to take immediate action in this matter. The UK has well developed National Response Plans—including continuous operation of the RIMNET system—for dealing with overseas nuclear incidents which might pose a threat to the UK environment.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the costs and benefits of the environmental protection works associated with phase two of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link, between Ebbsfleet and King's Cross. [49467]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Few CTRL works in phase two are concerned exclusively with environmental protection and decisions on extensive tunnelling were taken for engineering reasons as much as for environmental reasons. It is not practicable, therefore, to separate environmental protection costs from the total.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the terms of reference and timescale of his Department's review of the Orange Badge Scheme. [49553]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no plans for a formal review of the Orange Badge Scheme at this time.

The Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC)—our statutory advisers on the transport needs of disabled people—are currently drafting a paper on the Scheme, which they are proposing to put to Ministers shortly. We shall need to consider very carefully what DPTAC have to say before deciding what, if any, review of the Scheme might be appropriate.

Development Proposals (London)

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the development proposals within London which he has called in since 1 May 1997 on the ground of possible traffic generation, including for each (a) the total number of car parking spaces proposed and (b) the decision reached. [49366]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Four planning applications in London have been called in since 1 May 1997 where the Secretary of State has indicated that traffic generation is one of the issues of which he specifically wishes to be informed in reaching his decision.

| Site/application | Local authority | Number of parking spaces | Decision |
|---|---|---|---|
| Strayfield works, Strayfield Road—12 houses | LB Enfield | 48 | Awaiting public inquiry |
| Hackney Wick Greyhound Stadium—16 screen multiplex cinema | LB Hackney | 1,250 | Awaiting public inquiry |
| Wealdstone Town Centre—Superstore, retail and residential units | LB Harrow | 776 | Awaiting public inquiry |
| Key Site 1, Hounslow Town Centre—25 screen multiplex cinema, bingo hall, shops restaurant and town square | LB Hounslow | 1,296 | Awaiting public inquiry |

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the development proposals within London where more than 50 car parking spaces are planned and where a decision to grant planning permission has yet to be reached, including for each (a) the total number of parking spaces proposed and (b) the London borough in which it is proposed; [49367]

(2) what records are maintained by his Department on the extent of car parking provision associated with development proposals under consideration within the planning process in London. [49368]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department does not hold this information.

Waste Disposal Authorities

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to consult on proposals to institute the change to a tonnage based levy for statutory joint waste disposal authorities announced in March. [50128]

Angela Eagle: When announcing the change from a council tax to a tonnage based system for the apportionment of Joint Waste Disposal Authorities levies, I requested officials in my department to work out methods for such a system and to discuss them with the local authority associations. Proposals have now been developed on how to apportion authorities' contributions on the basis of the amount of waste they deliver for disposal in a preceding period. The aim is to reflect the service each authority draws from the JWDA and to provide encouragement for waste minimisation and other sustainable methods of waste management. The more successful authorities are in minimising waste and diverting it to other forms of sustainable waste management such as recycling and composting, the less they will deliver for disposal and the less they will pay. As I said in March, this will form one more element in our policy to encourage waste management options higher up the waste hierarchy.

A consultation document will therefore be issued today to local authority associations, the JWDAs and their constituent authorities. It remains our intention to have an efficient and effective default system in place in time for the 1999–2000 levy and I would very much welcome their responses to our proposals.

Correspondence

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Minister for Local Government and Housing plans to respond to the letter of 16 April 1998 from Mr. John Booth, on electoral registration. [48682]

Mr. George Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

This letter was transferred to the Home Office from another Government department on 30 April. My officials have now written to Mr. Booth in response to this and to his further letter of 30 May.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will arrange a meeting with the Director-General of the Health and Safety Executive and Chief Inspector of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in respect of the current safety status of the high-activity liquid radioactive waste tanks at Sellafield. [47878]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The UK's independent nuclear safety regulator, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), has made clear that it is satisfied that arrangements for the management by BNFL of liquid High Level Waste (HLW) are adequately safe. This Department is in regular contact with HSE and NII. Its views on liquid HLW storage at Sellafield were set out in a report published in December 1995 entitled 'Safety of the Storage of Liquid High Level Waste (HLW) at BNFL Sellafield', a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The UK's independent Nuclear Safety Advisory Committee (NuSAC) has also recently examined the safety of HLW storage at Sellafield. NuSAC concluded that there were no immediate problems and supported BNFL plans to vitrify liquid HLW as soon as practicable.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prohibition notices have been issued to BNFL at Sellafield under section 22 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, since it entered into force. [47874]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The independent Health and Safety Executive only keeps records on prohibition notices for ten years. Since 1988 there have been three prohibition notices issued to BNFL Sellafield under Section 22 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. These all related to non-nuclear aspects of safety: one relating to a drilling machine in an engineering workshop, and two relating to protection of people carrying out construction work at roof level.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49539]

Mr. Prescott: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration (Internet)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 April 1998, Official Report, columns 31–32, if he will place a copy of the instructions to the Immigration Service and his Department's staff on dealing with immigration cases on the Internet. [50228]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Further to my announcement of 6 April 1998, Official Report, columns 31–32, I am pleased to announce that a copy of the disclosable version of four of the six volumes of the Immigration Directorates' Instructions (IDIs) is being placed on the Internet. The material is subject to periodic review and revision.

The Government are committed to ensuring that these instructions are as widely available as possible and arrangements are also in hand to place a paper-based copy of the IDIs at various selected sites around the United Kingdom. This will provide an alternative means of access for those without direct access to the Internet. I will arrange for a copy of the list containing details of the selected sites to be placed in the Library and on the Internet.

Life Imprisonment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to make changes to the review procedures in cases of persons sentenced to life imprisonment. [50369]

Mr. Straw: Under the present arrangements announced by previous Home Secretaries, most recently on 7 December 1994, Official Report, columns 234–35, by the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), the first Parole Board review in the case of a life sentenced prisoner begins three years before the expiry of tariff. The purpose of this review is normally to enable the prisoner to be assessed for, and, where appropriate, transferred to, open conditions (category D) where he or she may be tested in conditions of lower security, fully assessed by staff and prepared for release. A further Parole Board review is then held to determine whether the level of risk is low enough to enable the prisoner to be safely released on life licence. Where the level of risk is considered to be acceptable, the objective is to release the prisoner on or very shortly after tariff expiry.

The need for two or more reviews and the average time of eight and a half months to complete each one make it very difficult for this objective to be achieved. Of the 109 life sentenced prisoners who were released on life licence between April 1997 and March 1998, only one was released on tariff expiry. A further 31, who could have been safely released at or close to tariff expiry, were released within 12 months. I have therefore decided to make some adjustments to the review timetabling arrangements to reduce delays by enabling prisoners whom it is safe to release but who are currently being released within 12 months of tariff expiry to be released on tariff or shortly afterwards.

In future, the first Parole Board review for mandatory and discretionary life sentenced prisoners will be brought forward by six months to start three and a half years before tariff expiry, but normally only where the prisoner has been in category C prison conditions for 12 months or more at that point. Cases falling just outside the 12 month criterion, and cases where exceptional circumstances exist, will be considered for early review on their merits.

In addition, reviews for all mandatory life sentenced prisoners who are in open conditions will commence 18 months after arrival rather than after two years as is now the practice. I am satisfied that this will still allow ample time (at least two years) in open prison for the prisoner to be fully tested, assessed and prepared for release. This change will bring the timetable for the review of mandatory life sentenced prisoners into line with that for discretionary cases in which there is a statutory entitlement to a further review on the second anniversary of the conclusion of the previous one. In order to avoid disrupting the scheduled offending behaviour programmes and pre-release preparatory work for those already in open conditions, this new arrangement will apply to those transferring to open conditions from 1 August.

The statement of 7 December 1994 also announced the abolition in discretionary life sentence cases of the ten year Ministerial review to consider whether there were any grounds for bringing forward the date of the first Parole Board review. The purpose of that review had been to identify any special circumstances or exceptional progress which might justify bringing forward the date of the first Parole Board review. I have decided that this review should also be abolished in mandatory life sentence cases. Those convicted of murder are now fully informed about the tariff-setting process and may make representations at any time about the length of their tariff. In addition, they may at any time make representations for their tariff to be reduced to take account of exceptional circumstances, including exceptional progress in prison. Those sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure have an annual review of tariff by officials and a Ministerial review at the halfway point. In these circumstances, the ten year review is now redundant.

Infanticide

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children under the age of 14 have been murdered by their parents in England and Wales in each of the last three years. [49477]

Mr. Michael: The table shows the number of offences recorded as homicide in England and Wales, as at 1 August 1997, where children under the age of 14 years were killed by their parents:

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1994 | 52 |
| 1995 | 46 |
| 1996 | 58 |

Figures for 1997 are not yet available.

Telephone Interceptions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone interceptions were authorised by his Department in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 to date; and if he will make a statement. [49696]

Mr. Straw: The annual reports of the Commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 list the number of interception warrants issued by the Home Secretary in the course of each year. In 1996, 1,073 telecommunications warrants were issued by the Home Secretary. In 1997, the number was 1,391. During the period 1 January to 30 June this year, 816 such warrants were issued by me.

Prison, Agecroft

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the PFI contract awarded to UK Detention Services to build and operate a new prison in Agecroft, Salford, will be accounted for in the Government's accounts. [49666]

Ms Quin: We have taken advice from Her Majesty's Treasury and the National Audit Office and we are satisfied that the underlying assets of the contract for the new prison to be built on the Agecroft site at Salford will be off balance sheet. This means that the capital expenditure incurred by the Prison Service as a result of the contract is amortised over the 25 year contract.

Diarmuid O'Neill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the Police Complaints Authority and staff have been assigned to investigate the shooting of Diarmuid O'Neill in each month since September 1996; and how many staff hours were expended each month. [48366]

Mr. Michael: One member of the Police Complaints Authority (PCA) and one caseworker have been assigned to this case since it was referred to the PCA for supervision of the investigation in September 1995. The PCA does not record its staff time expended on individual cases.

In accordance with standard practice, the investigation by the Metropolitan Police into the shooting of Mr. O'Neill was deferred until the completion in December last year of criminal proceedings against those arrested in the same operation.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Police Complaints Authority to complete its investigation into the shooting of Diarmuid O'Neill; and when he expects the family will be notified of the full circumstances of his death. [48367]

Mr. Michael: I understand that the Police Complaints Authority (PCA) expects the investigation to be completed by the end of August. The Crown Prosecution Service and the PCA will then consider whether any criminal or disciplinary proceedings should be brought against any of those involved in the case.

A police report on Mr. O'Neill's death will also be submitted to the coroner. The coroner's inquest will inquire into the cause of death and the circumstances in which it occurred, unless these have already been established by criminal proceedings following the PCA investigation.

Pregnant Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the impact of recommendations contained in the Department of Health White Paper "Changing Childbirth", on pregnant women in prison; what timetable for implementation of proposals in the White Paper was proposed by Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons; and what is the current timetable. [48368]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service is committed to implementing, in partnership with the NHS and within the constraints necessarily presented by the facts of custody, the recommendations of "Changing Childbirth".

The timetable proposed by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons was that these recommendations be implemented by December 1997, an earlier target date than that to which the NHS was committed. Progress is being made in line with developments in local NHS maternity services.

In the meantime, the Directorate for Health Care is developing a standard for women's health. The new standard, which is expected to be completed by March 1999, will incorporate objectives and outcomes drawn from "Changing Childbirth" and such further guidance from the Department on Health as becomes available in the course of its development.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the conclusions and recommendations of the review evaluated by his Department into strip searching procedures; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [48369]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service review of searches of the person, which has proved to be more complex and wide-ranging than originally envisaged, will be completed by late summer. A copy of the final report will be placed in the Library.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the first annual report of the Criminal Cases Review Commission; and if he will place it in the Library. [48370]

Mr. Michael: I have already received a proof copy of this Report, and hope to be able to lay it before each House on 20 July. Copies will also be placed in the Libraries.

Race Relations Forum

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference of the Race Relations Forum; how many staff of what grade are attached to it; what decisions were taken at its first meeting; and what is its postal address, telephone, fax number and E-mail address. [48371]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Race Relations Forum was established for the purpose of giving ethnic minority communities a voice at the heart of government. It is intended to complement the existing channels of communication. The first meeting took place on 23 June and was chaired by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. The Forum's terms of reference were discussed but not finalised. We will publish them once they have been agreed. As an advisory body, it is not the role of the Forum to take decisions. We are, however, considering the points members made.

The Secretariat to the Forum is provided by a Grade 7 civil servant, a Higher Executive Officer and an Executive Officer.

Its postal address is The Race Relations Forum Secretariat, Race Equality Unit, Room 1272, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1A 9AT. The secretary's telephone number is 0171 273 2792, fax number 0171 273 3771. There is no e-mail address.

Police Records

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the procedure in relation to the destruction of a suspect's police records (a) if the victim decides not to press charges and (b) if the Crown Prosecution Service decides not to prosecute. [49073]

Mr. Michael: Save in exceptional circumstances, details of cases which are discontinued are deleted from the Police National Computer and fingerprints and other samples taken from a suspect are destroyed within forty-two days of notification of the decision not to proceed. This does not apply in cases where the offender is cautioned.

The retention of local police records in these circumstances is an operational matter for the chief constable concerned.

Prisoners (Condoms)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans there are to improve prisoners' access to condoms; [48762]

(2) what plans there are to include condoms in the health pilot schemes currently providing disinfectant tablets to Class IV drug users in prisons. [48761]

Ms Quin: Prison doctors are able to prescribe condoms to individual prisoners, on application, where, in their clinical judgment, there is a known risk of HIV infection. We have no present plans to make condoms more freely available to prisoners, either as part of the pilot project for the reintroduction of disinfecting tablets or generally.

Prisoner Releases (Northern Ireland)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Government of the Irish Republic about the possible release of prisoners convicted of terrorist offences, repatriated to the Irish Republic following the Belfast Agreement. [48947]

Ms Quin: As part of the 10 April Belfast Agreement, both the British and the Irish Governments agreed to put in place mechanisms to provide for the accelerated release of prisoners. The release of prisoners within the Irish Republic, including those repatriated from England and Wales, is a matter for the Irish Government. However, discussions are taking place about the effect of the Republic's proposals for the accelerated release of prisoners on those prisoners repatriated from England and Wales.

Crime Statistics

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences were recorded per 1,000 population by (a) the Metropolitan Police and (b) police elsewhere in the country in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98, (1) in total, (2) of violence against the person, (3) sexual offences, (4) of robbery, burglary, theft and handling stolen goods, (5) of fraud, (6) of criminal damage and (7) of other notifiable offences. ## Prison Officers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the current qualification requirements and training for prison officers working with juveniles in young offender institutions or adult prisons. [49352]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service in partnership with the Trust for the Study of Adolescence (TSA), have developed a specialist training course on the "Nature of Adolescence: Working with Young People in Custody". The Prison Service is working towards national accreditation for this course, which it is intended will form part of basic training for all prison officers who are going to work in establishments holding juveniles from November 1998.

In addition, a course on "Understanding and Working with Young Women in Custody" has been developed with the TSA. It is intended that national accreditation will also be sought for this course. Trials in September this year will incorporate this training package into the basic training for prison officers going to Styal and Send women's prisons, which hold a proportion of juveniles.

There are no current plans to change the qualification requirement for prison officers working with juveniles.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average turnover of prison officers in each young offender institution in England over the last five years. [49351]

Ms Quin: These figures are not collated centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Closed Circuit Television (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial assistance he will provide in the current financial year to Gloucestershire district councils that wish to install CCTV cameras within their areas. [49246]

Mr. Michael: A total of £9m has been provided in 1998–99 through the Home Office Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) Challenge Competition to fund CCTV schemes in England and Wales, of which around £1.5m will be used to fund 32 schemes successful under round four of the competition. The remaining £7.5m will be used to honour existing schemes inherited from previous rounds of the competition, including £16,840 paid to Gloucester City Council for a CCTV scheme in Brunswick Square, Gloucester. In total, over £453,000 has been paid to nine schemes in Gloucestershire under the four Home Office CCTV challenge competitions. They are:

| | Location | Amount (£) |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | Cirencester town centre and integral parking, public transport and business area | 70,000 |
| 2 | Gloucester city centre | 10,000 |
| 3 | Coleford town centre | 80,000 |
| 4 | Cheltenham town centre | 29,000 |
| 5 | Cinderford, Lydney and Newent | 130,050 |
| 6 | Brunswick Square, Albion Street and Brunswick Road, Gloucester | 25,261 |
| 7 | Gloucester Docks | 14,639 |
| 8 | Stroud town centre | 62,199 |
| 9 | Dursley town centre | 31,996 |

No other payments are due from the Home Office CCTV Challenge Competition to partnerships in Gloucestershire.

Immigration Appeals

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications were made by his Department for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in non-asylum cases in the period 31 May 1997 to 1 June 1998; and how many were (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) withdrawn; [49319]

(2) how many applications were made by his Department for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in asylum cases in the period 31 May 1997 to 1 June 1998; and how many were (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) withdrawn; [49313]

(3) how many applications were made by individual appellants for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in asylum cases in the period 31 May 1997 to 1 June 1998; and how many were (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) withdrawn; [49314]

(4) how many applications were made by individual appellants for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in non-asylum cases in the period 31 May 1997 to 1 June 1998; and how many were (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) withdrawn. [49320]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is that, in the period 1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998, a total of 13,242 applications for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal were lodged, of which 9,536 related to asylum cases and 3,706 to non-asylum cases. In the same period, 12,616 applications for leave to appeal were decided by the Tribunal, 9,150 in asylum cases and 3,466 non-asylum cases.

Statistics of the breakdown of Immigration Appeal Tribunal applications in asylum cases are not available for the full period requested. However, between June and December 1997, it is estimated that of 5,824 applications for leave to appeal to the Tribunal, 99 per cent. were lodged by the appellant and just over 1 per cent. by the Home Office. In the same period, 5,319 applications were decided, of which approximately 18 per cent. were granted leave to appeal, 17 per cent. to the appellant and 1 per cent. to the Home Office.

I regret that the detailed breakdown requested for non-asylum cases, by appellant and type of decision, would be available only from the inspection of individual cases files and therefore at disproportionate cost.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional costs are incurred within London for policing; and what allowance he makes for this in funding the Metropolitan Police. [49416]

Mr. Michael: The additional costs incurred within London for policing fall into two broad categories: firstly, its capital city function—as permanent seat of government and primary location of the Royal Family—and, secondly, its national function (on behalf of the Government).

In 1998–99, £151 million was made available to the Metropolitan Police as a special payment in recognition of this capital city and national function. The special payment is paid as 100 per cent. Home Office grant.

Police (Compensation)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 222, how much was paid out by the Metropolitan Police in compensation cases in the last year for which figures are available. [49282]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner has provided me with the information set out in the table. During 1996–97, settlement of a number of actions was delayed while claimants awaited the outcome of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Thompson and Hsu v. the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis (1997) 2 All ER 762. Settlement of the delayed actions had inflated the number of cases settled in 1997–98.

Damages in respect of civil claims

| | Number of claims completed in 1997–98 | Cost (£000) in 1997–98 |
|---|---|---|
| Court awards | 39 | 530 |
| Out of court settlements | 278 | 2,431 |

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from whom the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis sought clearance to take up the positions of (a) a director of ACPO Ltd and (b) a member of the Executive Committee of ACPO; and what payments or reward in kind attach to the position. [49312]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner did not need to seek clearance to take up the position of a member of the Executive Committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO). Members of the Executive Committee of ACPO are regarded as Directors of the Association, which has the status of a private company limited by guarantee. The constitution of the Executive Committee is a matter for ACPO itself. No payments or rewards in kind are attached to the position of Director. I draw the attention of the hon. Member to my letters of 10 and 26 June and 8 July, offering to assist him with his concerns if he will outline or explain what has led to his interest in this topic.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49540]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

DEFENCE

Strategic Defence Review

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which front-line aircraft squadrons will be disbanded as a result of the Strategic Defence Review. [50396]

Mr. George Robertson: We considered this matter very carefully and decided the most effective way to meet the reductions in the Tornado F3 and Tornado GR forces was to disband two squadrons. In order to minimise disruption for Service personnel and optimise running cost savings, No 29(f) Tornado F3 Squadron at RAF Coningsby and No 17(F) Tornado GR Squadron at RAF Bruggen will be disbanded by 1 April 1999.

There will be no redundancies as a result of this decision. We wish to place on record our recognition of the distinguished role these squadrons have performed over many years.

Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation Defence Agency for 1998–99. [50370]

Dr. Reid: In respect of financial year 1998–99 (prior to the formation of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency) the Director General Aircraft (Navy), acting as Owner of the Agency on behalf of my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence under the terms of the Agency's framework document, has set the following key targets:

Quantity

Target—to achieve 98 per cent. of scheduled quantity of MoD sales orders in year.

Customer Quality Satisfaction

Target—to achieve no more than 56 customer complaints.

Timeliness

Target—to achieve 95 per cent. of the delivery dates agreed with the MoD customer.

Cost

Target—to achieve a full operating cost of £117.5M by 1 April 1999, assuming constant output. (Equivalent to a 9.5 per cent. reduction in real terms from the 1995–96 baseline).

Volume

Target—to utilise 100 per cent. of the available capacity by ensuring existing and, when required, additional customers furnish the programmes work against which resources have been allocated.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 June 1998, Official Report, columns 609–11, concerning military personnel serving in Indonesia, what is the period of their deployment; to which units they are attached; where they are deployed; and what their duties are. [49421]

Mr. George Robertson: In my answer to the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. M. Campbell) on 10 June 1998, Official Report, columns 609–11, four members of the UK armed forces were listed as serving in Indonesia. They included the Defence Attaché and a supporting Warrant Officer based at the UK Embassy in Jakarta, who are both on a three-year tour which ends in 2000. The other two were RAF Loan Service Personnel stationed at the Perkanbaru air base in Indonesia. They were assisting with the introduction into service of the Hawk aircraft, purchased under a contract signed in 1993, by providing pilot training to the Indonesian Air Force. Their task in Indonesia has since been completed and both officers have now left.

Challenger 2 Battle Tanks

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the production of the Challenger 2 battle tank. [49304]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Following the successful completion of production reliability growth trials, deliveries of Challenger 2 tanks resumed in January 1998. Deliveries to the first regiment were completed in June 1998, and deliveries of the second regiment are on course for completion by the end of December 1998. The programme remains on schedule for all 386 tanks to be delivered by February 2002, at which stage all our armoured regiments will be equipped with Challenger 2.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49537]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48844]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport is reviewing its contingency plans in the light of the possible disruption to computer systems due to the Year 2000 date change. The revised plans will reflect the compliance work currently under way and be informed by the state of readiness of those suppliers upon which the Department depends. The plans will be developed and tested over the coming 12 months to ensure that they are in place in good time for the critical dates involved in the Year 2000 date change.

Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to increase the popularity of the United Kingdom as a tourist destination. [48689]

Mr. Tom Clarke: We plan to publish a comprehensive strategy for tourism later this year. The strategy, which will draw on the recommendations of our Tourism Forum Working Groups and the findings of our Departmental Spending Review, will address the promotion of Britain as a tourism destination as well as many other issues.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49533]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

Broadcasting (Listed Events)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport at what intervals he plans to undertake future reviews of major events listed under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996. [48442]

Mr. Chris Smith: I shall review the list regularly in the future.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension Funds (Ethical Investment)

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she will take to ensure that members of pension schemes know the policies of their trustees on ethical investment; and if she will make a statement. [50367]

Mr. Denham: The Government are minded, subject to the normal consultation requirements, to introduce regulations which would require occupational pension fund trustees to set out in their Statement of Investment Principles to what extent, if any, ethical and social considerations are taken into account in their investment strategy.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it her policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49546]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister today.

Benefit Reviews

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in which month and year the fieldwork began on each of the main reviews of benefits carried out by BA Security; and in which month and year in each case the report on the methodology and findings of the benefit review was (a) presented to Ministers and (b) published. [48810]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

| Benefit review | Period of fieldwork | Results reported to Ministers | Results published |

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Brake: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how staff numbers in the Lords Chancellor's Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48873]

Mr. Hoon: The staff numbers in post on the dates requested are as follows:

Staff in post in the LCD as at 1 May 1997

| Agency | Permanent | Casual | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| LCD Headquarters | 855 | 52 | 907 |
| Court Service | 9,196 | 609 | 9,805 |
| Public Trust Office | 537 | 15 | 552 |
| Northern Ireland Court Service | 638 | 24 | 662 |
| Total | 11,226 | 700 | 11,926 |

Staff in post in the LCD as at 31 March 1998

| Agency | Permanent | Casual | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| LCD Headquarters | 835 | 28 | 863 |
| Court Service | 8,717 | 561 | 9,278 |
| Public Trust Office | 547 | 13 | 560 |
| Northern Ireland Court Service | 630 | 19 | 649 |
| Total | 10,729 | 621 | 11,350 |

Smuggling

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the consequences for small businesses in Wales of the crossborder smuggling of (a) alcohol and (b) petrol. [49563]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

I have no information about the consequences of alcohol smuggling relating to Wales in particular. However the Government are very much aware of the illegal trade in alcohol and tobacco goods and its effect on the legitimate trade. In his July Budget last year the Chancellor announced a review to examine the effects of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping, 2 July 1997, Official Report, columns 303-17. The Government will announce their proposals as part of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. I have no evidence to suggest the smuggling of petrol is a problem in Wales or anywhere else.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Prime Minister how staff numbers in his Office have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48923]

The Prime Minister: Staff numbers in my Office on 1 May 1997 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. For staff numbers at 1 April 1997 and 1 April 1998, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 23 April 1998, Official Report, column 675.

Government Aims and Objectives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he plans to publish the annual report on the achievement of the Government's aims and objectives before the summer adjournment. [49305]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 22 June 1998, Official Report, column 350.

EU Meetings

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to place (a) in the Library and (b) on the internet the agenda of every European Communities meeting at which representatives of Her Majesty's Government are in attendance. [49647]

The Prime Minister: The Government have taken extensive steps to ensure greater openness in the EU and enhanced parliamentary scrutiny of its activities. We already announce by written parliamentary question each month the subjects expected to be discussed at forthcoming meetings of the Council of Ministers. These are available on the House of Commons website. In addition, in agreement with the European Legislation Committee, arrangements for more detailed pre-Council scrutiny have recently been established on a trial basis.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) him and (ii) civil servants at No. 10 Downing Street and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49543]

The Prime Minister: The First Report of the Nolan Committee on Standards in Public Life expressly recommended against the establishment of a public register of lobbyists. There was no indication in the evidence to Nolan that there was impropriety in meetings between Ministers or officials and lobbying organisations. Ministers and civil servants receive deputations from many groups who are concerned to press their own interests or those of their clients, which Ministers and officials take due care to consider within the wider public interest and Government policy. In addition, some lobbyists may attend meetings with Ministers and civil servants but as part of a delegation led by an MP or outside interest group, and the information will not therefore be separately identifiable. It would not therefore be practicable to keep a register of such contacts.

Disability and Access

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Prime Minister from which organisations Government departments seek advice on access issues. [49554]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

The Government consult a wide range of organisations with an interest in disability and access questions.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance she will give to Malawi to deal with the effects of (a) climate change, (b) HIV and (c) malnutrition. [49258]

Clare Short: We are preparing a new Country Strategy Paper for our programme in Malawi, which will cover these among other issues. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make it her policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49544]

Mr. Foulkes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

SCOTLAND

Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers in each council area in Scotland in each academic year from 1993–94 to 1997–98 were employed (a) full-time and (b) part-time; and how many had (i) permanent contracts, (ii) non-permanent contracts for over 12 months, (iii) contracts for three to 12 months and (iv) contracts for less than three months. [48752]

Mr. Wilson: The information which is available is set out in the table.

Trout Fishing

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much financial support his Department or its agencies have given for (a) the current financial year and (b) 1997–98 to the trout fishing industry; and for what purposes. [49286]

Mr. Macdonald: Trout fishing rights are privately owned and those involved are responsible for funding. However, as part of its general activities my Department's Freshwater Fisheries Laboratory at Faskally undertakes research into various aspects of trout.

Dyslexic Children

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has taken to assist dyslexic children in Scotland. [49341]

Mr. Wilson: The Government are investing £56 million over 5 years in an Early Intervention Programme to improve basic literacy and numeracy skills in the early years in primary school. This includes £4 million for special educational needs staff training which may include training related to dyslexia. This is in addition to the continuation of the £1.5 million per annum In-Service Special Educational Needs Training Grant for staff at all levels of schooling which may also include training related to dyslexia.

In addition The Scottish Office is engaged in a £30,000 project, announced in December 1997, in partnership with the Scottish Dyslexia Trust which will provide specialist training for up to 165 early years primary teachers on dyslexia awareness and early identification.

Grant will be provided also to the Scottish Dyslexia Forum to run 4 regional seminars in 1998–99 on dyslexia issues for education authority staff in Scotland.

Prison Population

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the prison population in each of the last 10 years; what are his estimates for the prison population for the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [49344]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is provided in the table. Projections are available for the years 1998–99—2000–01 only: beyond three years their accuracy is less reliable and the further ahead a series is projected, the greater the scope for departure from the projection.

The prison population reflects the crime rate, the extent to which crimes are cleared-up, the use of custodial remand by the courts and the independent sentencing decisions of the Scottish courts.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make Tamoxifen available on prescription to women with breast cancer in Scotland. [49343]

Mr. Galbraith: Tamoxifen is available on prescription to women with breast cancer in Scotland.

Science Teachers

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many science teachers will be employed in schools in Scotland in 1999. [49342]

Mr. Wilson: This is a matter for local authorities. The latest available figures relate to 1994 and the table shows the number of full-time equivalent teachers in Scottish secondary schools by main teaching subject. The next data collection from teachers will be in September 1998.

| Subject | Number |
|---|---|
| General Science | 104 |
| Biology | 1,219 |
| Chemistry | 1,360 |

Cullen Inquiry

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the source of all the evidence which was submitted to the Cullen Inquiry which has not yet been published. [49263]

Mr. McLeish: A list of sources of submissions selected in evidence was published as Appendix 4 to Lord Cullen's report, "The Public Inquiry into the Shootings at Dunblane Primary School on 13 March 1996" (Cm 3386). There is at present no list of submissions and their sources that were sent to the Inquiry but were not used in evidence. The submissions themselves have been deposited in the Scottish Record Office on behalf of the Secretary of State for Scotland. Lists are being prepared by Scottish Record Office staff but are not yet available.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of (i) all evidence submitted to the Cullen Inquiry, (ii) all evidence which is yet to be published and (iii) all evidence or submissions on which a restriction as to future publication has been placed. [49264]

Mr. McLeish: (i) and (ii) A list of submissions selected in evidence was published as Appendix 4 to Lord Cullen's report, "The Public Inquiry into the Shootings at Dunblane Primary School on 13 March 1996" (Cm 3386). A full list of submissions, both selected and not selected to form part of the written evidence before the Inquiry, is being prepared by the Scottish Record Office and will be placed in the Library as soon as it becomes available. Very little of the evidence before the Inquiry has been formally published.

(iii) There is no restriction on future publication of any formal submission of evidence whether used or not used at the Inquiry.

Government Expenditure and Revenue

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to produce an updated Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland report, last published in November 1997. [50368]

Mr. Wilson: The next edition of the Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland report, covering the period 1996–97, will be published in mid-November 1998.

Interception of Telecommunications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many telephone interceptions were authorised by his Department in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 to date; and if he will make a statement. [49697]

Mr. McLeish: The annual reports of the Commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, which are presented to Parliament, list the number of interception warrants issued by the Secretary of State for Scotland in the course of each year. In 1996, 228 telecommunications warrants were issued by the Secretary of State. In 1997 the number was 256. During the period 1 January to 30 June this year, 138 such warrants were issued by the Secretary of State.

In his most recent report (Cm. 3678), the Commissioner notes that the number of warrants has increased, and says

"The extent of this increase in interception would be a matter for grave concern if it indicated any relaxation of the strict criteria laid down by the Act for the issue and renewal of warrants. I am satisfied that no such relaxation has occurred . . . The value of interception in the protection of national security and the prevention of serious crime can hardly be overstated".

University Students

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for undergraduate degree courses there have been in the current year to each university in Scotland from pupils attending schools (a) in England, (b) in Wales, (c) in Northern Ireland (d) outside the UK but within the EU and (e) outside the EU. [49710]

Mr. Wilson: The Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) does not release applications data on an institutional basis. The table shows total applicants through UCAS to Scottish higher education by domicile of students. Data on institutions which do not use UCAS are not held centrally.

Mr. Wilson: Information on students who spent part of their secondary education at a particular school is not available. ## Petrol Stations

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take in order to provide assistance for petrol stations in rural Scotland. [49705]

Mr. Macdonald: In addition to the schemes to provide rate relief to rural retail outlets, including petrol stations, and the derogation obtained from the Petrol Vapour Recovery Directive, petrol stations will benefit from the Rural Transport Funding Package announced as part of the Budget. Four hundred thousand pounds a year for three years is being targeted at assisting qualifying petrol stations with capital costs arising from complying with regulations.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many petrol stations are eligible for rates relief under the terms of the Local Government and Rating Act 1997; [49701]

(2) if he will estimate the cost in terms of lost business rate revenue of granting all petrol stations in rural Scottish communities with a population of 3,000 or less 100 per cent. business rate relief; [49702]

(3) how many petrol stations have (a) applied for and (b) received rates relief under the terms of the Local Government and Rating Act 1997; [49703]

(4) if he will estimate (a) the average rates bill paid by petrol stations in rural communities in Scotland with a population of 3,000 or less and (b) this figure as a percentage of their total operating costs. [49704]

Mr. Macdonald: It is estimated that there are 350 rural petrol filling stations in settlements of less than 3,000 population which may be eligible for rates relief under the provisions of the Local Government and Rating Act 1997. The total estimated cost of providing 100 per cent. rate relief to these filling stations, based on an estimated average rates bill of £1,255, would be £0.44 million. The rate relief provisions which came into effect from 1 April 1998 are administered by the local authorities, and details of the numbers of filling stations applying for and being awarded rate relief are not held centrally. The Government do not hold detailed figures for the total operating costs of rural petrol stations.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49531]

Mr. Dewar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

HEALTH

Trusts and Health Authorities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the requirement for NHS trusts and health authorities to eliminate, by 31 March 1999, their aggregate net deficits brought forward at 31 March 1998, has the overall effect of eliminating the 2.2 per cent. real increase in spending planned for the English NHS as between 1997–98 and 1998–99; [46270]

(2) if the English NHS trusts and health authorities are required, by 31 March 1999, to eliminate their aggregate net deficits brought forward at 31 March 1998. [46268]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 16 June 1998]: Health authorities and National Health Service trusts are expected to balance income and expenditure within the financial year. Not all reported in-year deficits are indicative of underlying financial problems. Some are described as "technical" and may be caused by the application of Generally Accepted Accounting Practice.

Aggregate deficits are the sum of in-year deficits. Many of these will be caused by the summation of technical in-year deficits, or, in the case of health authorities, inherited on their formation from former district health authorities and family health services authorities.

Health authorities and NHS trusts are not expected to eliminate their aggregate net deficits where these are technical and/or inherited from former health bodies. The real increase in planned spending between 1997–98 and 1998–99 will not be materially affected by the current level of aggregate net deficits.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the aggregate net deficit of English NHS trusts and health authorities carried forward at 31 March 1997; and what further net deficits were incurred in the year to 31 March 1998. [46269]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 16 June 1998]: The aggregate net deficit of English National Health Service trusts and health authorities carried forward at 31 March 1997, as reported in their 1996/97 audited accounts, was £484 million.

Information from the 1997/98 financial year is not yet available.

Health Spending

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much health spending would increase in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03 if the real annual rate of increase were the same as the average rate of increase over the period 1978–79 to 1997–98. [46433]

Mr. Milburn: The real terms growth in National Health Service total expenditure for the period 1978–79 and 1997–98 was 2.9 per cent. net and 3.0 per cent. gross. On that basis, the increases in expenditure would be as set out in the table.

Projected increases in NHS expenditure

| Years | Net increase | Gross increase |
|---|---|---|
| 1999–2000 | 2,035 | 2,169 |
| 2000–2001 | 2,110 | 2,251 |
| 2001–2002 | 2,224 | 2,376 |
| 2002–2003 | 2,347 | 2,508 |

Note:

The gross domestic product deflators published on 17 March 1998 have been used for the years 1999–2000 and 2000–01. A deflator of 2.5 per cent. has been used for later years, in line with that for 2000–01

Diabetes

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a national screening programme for diabetes for those over 40 years of age, who are overweight and have a family history of diabetes; and if he will make a statement. [49280]

Ms Jowell: The National Screening Committee, which offers health Ministers advice about the case for introducing or changing individual screening programmes, has not yet considered the case for a national screening programme for diabetes. However, the Committee will be considering the emerging evidence as part of its future programme of work. Any decision on the introduction of a national programme will be made in the light of that consideration.

Bedblocking

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) of 11 November 1997, Official Report, column 538, concerning bedblocking, when his Department plans to issue revised guidance on hospital discharge procedures. [49571]

Mr. Milburn: Departmental officials are reviewing the existing hospital discharge guidance to see whether it needs to be updated, new guidance needs to be issued or other action taken.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 July 1997, Official Report, column 586, if he will implement the recommendations contained in the report, "No Accounting for Health", from the Alzheimer's Disease Society. [49570]

Mr. Boateng: The Alzheimer's Disease Society plays a valuable role in providing support, information and advice and commissioning research into Alzheimer's Disease and other forms of dementia. The Society's report, "No Accounting for Health", published in 1997, made a number of thoughtful recommendations on the development of policy.

Although not directly in response to "No Accounting for Health" we are undertaking a number of initiatives which will address the Society's concerns. For example, the National Health Service Executive's priorities and planning guidance for 1998–99 includes the development of a range of recovery and rehabilitation services for older people and the development of a national framework for multi-disciplinary assessment of older people in acute and community health care settings. In addition, the significant role carers play is being recognised and taken into account by the Government in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's recent announcement of the carer's strategy.

The Royal Commission on Long-Term Care for the Elderly, announced on 4 December 1997, Official Report, columns 489–99, is examining the short and long term options for a sustainable system of funding of long-term care for elderly people in the United Kingdom, both in their own homes and in other settings. It is expected to recommend by the end of the year how, and in what circumstances, the cost of such care should be apportioned between public funds and individuals.

Winter Funding Initiative

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 651, concerning the Winter Funding Initiative, what estimate he has made of the amount transferred to social services departments. [49572]

Mr. Boateng: Of the £159 million allocated to health authorities in England, over one fifth (some £35 million) was transferred to social services departments.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Ms Stuart), of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 197, concerning additional winter support, what is his Department's estimate of the number of initiatives funded by winter pressures money; and how many of these initiatives continued after 31 March. [49573]

Mr. Milburn: The £159 million allocated to health authorities in England last autumn funded some 1,500 initiatives. Where appropriate, schemes have continued after 31 March 1998 funded from health authorities' general allocations. Information on this funding is not available centrally.

Access Committee for England

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led to the decision to cease funding the Access Committee for England. [49555]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) on 6 April 1998, Official Report, columns 126–27.

CJD

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action his Department is taking to discover methods of treatment for people who may be infected with new-variant CJD; [49658]

(2) what reports he has received regarding chemicals which can prevent the transmission of spongiform encephalopathies, with particular reference to (a) potentially new-variant CJD from blood transfusion and (b) CJD from growth hormone; what action his Department is taking to investigate the use of these chemicals; and if he will make a statement. [49657]

Ms Jowell: In November 1996 the Department published its "Strategy for Research and Development Relating to the Human Health Aspects of Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies (TSEs)". One of the aims of this strategy is the development of curative treatments for patients with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease. A project for the design and synthesis of potential chemotherapeutic agents for the treatment of TSEs is being funded over a three year period beginning in July 1997 by the Medical Research Council, which also organised a meeting last year between industry and researchers on possible strategies to develop therapies.

We are aware of research findings on the apparent inactivation of the scrapie agent in animal models which indicate that treatment with certain chemicals might have an inhibiting effect on the transmission of TSEs. Before any such chemicals could be licensed for use as an intervention in humans it would need to be proved safe and efficacious. Following discussions between officials and external scientists we are expecting, as a first step, specific research proposals to explore the efficacy of these chemicals.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49545]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave today, Official Report, column 600.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Braille

Dr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to make Braille copies of Acts of Parliament available. [49104]

Dr. David Clark: We have no current plans to make Braille copies of Acts of Parliament available. Previous discussions have taken place with the Royal National Institute for the Blind as a result of which it was concluded that there was unlikely to be sufficient demand to make it a viable proposition. The RNIB has, however, a no-charge licence to reproduce Acts of Parliament in Braille, Moon, audio tape and Braille-coded floppy disk formats and will supply an Act in one of these formats in response to requests which they receive. Officials from my Department are currently exploring with RNIB whether their production arrangements can be assisted by delivery of the text of Acts in electronic formats.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49542]

Dr. David Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teacher Shortages

13. Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current level of teacher shortages in secondary education; and what proportion of secondary school teachers are on temporary or supply contracts. [48100]

Ms Estelle Morris: In January 1998 there were 968 vacant teaching posts in secondary schools in England. Data on the proportion of secondary school teachers on temporary or supply contracts are not collected. I can however tell my hon. Friend that, in January 1998, 12 per cent. of the contracts of teachers in regular service in the LEA maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England were temporary; and that some 3,900 supply teachers were used on 15 January, the date of this year's Schools Census. (Some of the supply teachers will also be holders of temporary contracts.)

Schools (Worship)

17. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the law requiring collective worship in schools. [48104]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government remain committed to the current statutory requirements; the School Standards and Framework Bill is applying these requirements to the new school framework with minimal adjustments.

Unemployment

18. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received on the level of unemployment in Essex. [48105]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have received no recent representations.

New Deal

19. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress is being made with regard to the implementation of the new deal for over-25s. [48106]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for long term unemployed adults aged 25 and over started across the country on 29 June.

23. Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support exists through the new deal for unemployed people who want to start their own businesses. [48110]

33. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision is made under the new deal for an unemployed person to start their own business. [48121]

Mr. Andrew Smith: If a young person aged 18–24 years who is in the New Deal Gateway expresses an interest in starting their own business, they will be referred to a training provider who will conduct a basic awareness and information session which lasts up to a day. They will then be referred to a short course, or one to one counselling, depending on their needs, learn about self employment and put together their business plan.

Some young people will leave New Deal after this stage to become independently self-employed or take a Job. Others may enter the Employment Option and set up and run a small business. For up to 26 weeks they will receive training and support and an allowance. Any profits from the business are put into an escrow account.

The young person will continue to receive support from a mentor, appointed by their training provider, for up to 2 years after leaving the option and while they continue to trade.

25. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the nature of help offered to unemployed people over 25-year-olds in the pilots announced in the Budget. [48113]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The November pilots will make available 90,000 places for people reaching 12 or 18 months unemployment, with a range of innovative help, tailored to the needs of each individual, including gateway advice, helping with jobs, and entitlement to a mandatory period of work experience and training.

39. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the new deal in Birmingham. [48127]

Mr. Andrew Smith: New Deal for 18–24 year olds was launched in Birmingham on 6 April 1998. As at 3 July, 1,799 young people have started on the New Deal Gateway; 1,310 clients have been referred to specialist agencies for additional help. 397 companies have signed employer agreements.

A business coalition including members from leading Birmingham firms is advising on implementation and marketing of the programme.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people in the Christchurch constituency have joined the New Deal initiative since it was launched; how many have been placed into jobs; how many have been placed on to options; and how many employer agreements have been signed. [48816]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On the 25 June I made public the latest statistical data for New Deal for the period 5 January to 29 May 1998. This information has now been placed in the Library along with the statistical information on each of the New Deal Units of Delivery. Christchurch constituency falls within the Dorset Unit of Delivery. It is, of course, early days for this ambitious undertaking, but I am encouraged by the progress of New Deal so far.

The Employment Service District Manager in Bournemouth and Poole, Letty Scott, is always on hand to discuss New Deal in the hon. Member's local area.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have found employment under the New Deal scheme in (a) the north-west and (b) Chorley. [48449]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On 25 June I made public the latest statistical data for New Deal for the period 5 January to 29 May 1998. This information has now been placed in the Library along with the statistical information on each of the New Deal Units of Delivery. Chorley constituency falls within the Central Lancashire Unit of Delivery. It is, of course, early days for this ambitious undertaking, but I am encouraged by the progress of New Deal so far.

The Employment Service District Manager in Preston and Fylde, Jackie Mason, is always on hand to discuss New Deal in my hon. Friend's local area.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the jobs created through the New Deal scheme have been full-time jobs in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the North West and (c) Chorley. [48450]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal is not intended to be a job creation scheme; rather it is a central part of the Government's strategy to promote long term stability and sustainable growth. By improving the employability of the most disadvantaged we will improve the efficiency of the economy.

However, the number of vacancies that have been advertised to New Deal participants up to 5 June 1998 is over 19,300 nationally; over 2,400 in the North West Region and; over 100 in the Central Lancashire Unit of Delivery which incorporates the Chorley constituency. At this stage it is not possible to give a breakdown of how many of these vacancies are full time and part time.

Child Care

20. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has evaluated on the effect of affordable child care on rates of participation in the economy. [48107]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have evaluated a range of research and are commissioning further work to inform the development of the National Childcare Strategy. We know, for example, that more than 40 per cent. of main carers enjoyed an improvement in their labour market position when their children attended schemes set up under the Out of School Childcare Initiative.

29. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he proposes for delivery of the national child care strategy at local level. [48117]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, South (Alan Begg), Official Report, column 1237.

36. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the training and qualifications of child care workers. [48124]

Mr. Alan Howarth: A skilled and competent workforce is a key factor in ensuring good quality childcare. The Green Paper, "Meeting the Childcare Challenge", sets out our proposals for improving training and qualifications for people who work with children.

We will establish a clear and comprehensive framework of training and qualifications for the early years and playwork sectors. We have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to work with the National Training Organisations and others to take this work forward.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many childminders are registered with each local authority in England; how many children aged (a) under five and (b) five to 11 years are cared for by registered childminders in each authority; and what was the average charge for each full-time place in each local authority area. [48982]

Ms Estelle Morris: The latest available information on numbers of registered childminders and available places for children aged under five and five to seven in each local authority area in England is shown in the Department of Health Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1997 publication, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Information on charges levied by childminders is not available centrally.

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for providing appropriate information services as part of the National Childcare Strategy. [48111]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We are consulting through our National Childcare Strategy Green paper, Meeting the Childcare Challenge, on how to ensure good quality information services in all areas which meet parents' needs. We want all information services to meet minimum standards specified at national level, and we plan to support a national childcare helpline.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that the new Further Education Funding Council funding for childcare-inclusive learning and basic skills summer schools are available to all FEFC-funded learners. [48974]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The FEFC intends to make the new funding for childcare provision available to both colleges and sponsored external institutions. The Council has already allocated the funds available for the basic skills summer schools and, in doing so, encouraged colleges to develop local partnerships involving external institutions and other organisations. Colleges will also be encouraged to involve external institutions and independent specialist colleges in the development and delivery of training for the second stage of the Inclusive Learning quality initiative.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance has been issued to local authorities in respect of the child care requirement arising from the implementation of the New Deal for Lone Parents. [48980]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The New Deal for Lone Parents includes help for lone parents to obtain information on childcare and some funding for necessary childcare when they attend interviews or take part in training or Employment Service programmes.

At national level, officials from my Department, the Department of Social Security and Employment Service have been discussing the provision of childcare with a range of interested bodies. At local level, the Employment Service is networking with childcare providers to be able to guide lone parents to childcare provision. At both levels local authorities and their representative bodies have been involved.

Special Educational Needs

21. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to be able to report on the results of the consultation exercise on special educational needs. [48108]

Ms Estelle Morris: There have been many thoughtful comments on our Green Paper on Special Educational Needs. Taking account of these, and of advice from the National Advisory Group on Special Educational Needs, we expect to publish an action programme in the early autumn.

22. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to help children with behavioural problems who have special educational needs. [48109]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our guidance to local education authorities on behaviour support plans underlines the links to be made with their Special Educational Need policies; more detailed guidance later this year will set out good practice on discipline and on emotional and behavioural difficulties. We shall announce further practical support in an action programme following up our Green Paper on Special Educational Needs.

University Campus, Cornwall

24. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will assess the advantages of establishing a university campus in Cornwall. [48112]

Dr. Howells: I welcome the initiative taken by the three higher education institutions in Cornwall to form a new partnership to develop plans for improving the quality and range of higher education opportunities in Cornwall in conjunction with other interested bodies in the region. The first stage will be an assessment of the likely level of future demand for higher education opportunities in Cornwall.

National Reading Year

26. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on plans for the national year of reading. [48114]

Mr. Byers: We are planning to launch the National Year of Reading on 16 September. It will be supported by large numbers of private and public sector organisations, and will be linked to a major media campaign to encourage reading. Detailed information can be found at the National Year of Reading website on www.yearofreading.org.uk.

A-levels

27. Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reform the A-level system. [48115]

Dr. Howells: The Government announced on 3 April their response to the Qualification and Curriculum Authority's advice, in the light of the recent Qualifying for Success consultation on post-16 qualifications, on how best to implement our commitment to support broader A levels and upgraded vocational qualifications, underpinned by rigorous standards and Key Skills. Revised GCE A level syllabuses, a new one year AS qualification and modifications to the Advanced GNVQ are due to be introduced from September 2000.

Schools (Funding)

28. Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has further to increase funding for schools; and if he will make a statement. [48116]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce in due course future funding plans for education in light of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Grant-maintained Schools

30. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice is given to grant-maintained schools about consulting parents on school hours. [48118]

Mr. Byers: Governing bodies of grant-maintained schools decide when sessions should begin and end on each school day. Guidance was provided in the Department's Circular 7/90. This states that, before making changes, the governing bodies of GM schools should take account of the views of those primarily affected, including parents.

Grammar Schools

31. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from grammar school governors about his policies on grammar schools. [48119]

Mr. Byers: The Department received some 180 responses last autumn from grammar schools in response to the consultation letter about future admissions arrangements for grammar schools. This figure includes responses from chairs of governors and also from grammar school headteachers. We are currently consulting on the draft grammar school ballot regulations. Responses have been requested by 31 July.

Class Sizes

32. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from school heads regarding the relationship between lowering class sizes and parental choice. [48120]

Mr. Byers: We are currently analysing responses to the consultation on the draft class size regulations and guidance. We will place a copy of the analysis in the Library of the House once we have completed it. Other than any responses which may have been made to the consultation, we are aware of no representations from headteachers concerning the relationship between lowering class sizes and parental choice.

School Phobics

34. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision he is making for children who are school phobics. [48122]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local Educational Authorities must make arrangements for the provision of suitable education for children who are "school phobics". The Department supports the work of Local Educational Authorities in this area through its standards fund grants.

Further Education Colleges

35. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding off-site collaboration between further education colleges and industry and commerce. [48123]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations on this issue from a number of hon. Members and Further Education college principals, from the Confederation of British Industry and the Engineering Employers' Federation.

Education Action Zones

37. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria he has set for defining income for the education action zones recently announced; and if he will make a statement. [48125]

Mr. Byers: The Government will provide a direct grant of up to £750,000 per zone per annum. Additionally, each zone will raise £250,000 a year from independent sources. Contributions towards this can be in cash or kind.

Temporary Classrooms

38. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many temporary classrooms were in use in local education authority schools in England in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [48126]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of minimum wage legislation on the costs of education authorities. [48103]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is for individual Local Education Authorities to assess the impact of the New Minimum Wage, and to take the management action necessary to ensure fair pay for their employees.

Local Authorities (Pilot Schemes)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the pilot schemes announced since 1 May by his Department that involve local authorities in a lead or partnership capacity; if he will list each of the local authorities involved in each case; and what revenue and capital funding each local authority will receive through the pilot in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000 and (iv) 2000–01. [45333]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 11 June 1998]: The Department has announced a number of pilot schemes which involve local authorities. They are shown in a list, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Access Committee for England

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the findings and conclusions of the review undertaken by his Department of the Access Committee for England. [49556]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 2 July 1998, Official Report, column 267.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the real rates of increase in each teachers' pay award since 1990. [46938]

Mr. Byers: The following figures show the real increase in teachers' pay, as measured by the GDP deflator, in each financial year in comparison with the previous financial year.

| Year | Percentage |
|---|---|
| 1990–91 | −0.1 |
| 1991–92 | 6.3 |
| 1992–93 | 3.6 |
| 1993–94 | −1.4 |
| 1994–95 | 1.4 |
| 1995–96 | −0.1 |
| 1996–97 | 0.1 |
| 1997–98 | 0.4 |
| 1998–99 | 0.6 |

Mansfield High School

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons technology college status has been removed from Mansfield High School. [48166]

Ms Estelle Morris: [holding answer 30 June 1998]: Mansfield High School's Technology College designation has been withdrawn from 31 August 1998 because of irregularities in its application which have been discovered and brought to the Department's attention. Had these been discovered at the time, the school's Technology College application would not have been successful.

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the public registers which his Department has responsibility for. [47356]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The DfEE does not have responsibility for any public registers.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47023]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Women on 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 557.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49541]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today by the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49532]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

Quarantine

Mr. Collins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the publication of the Kennedy report on quarantine regulations has been delayed; and if he will make a statement. [49633]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Group on Quarantine has a large volume of evidence to assess, and its Chairman has advised us this has taken longer than expected. It is essential that this be done thoroughly, so that the Group's report will be sound. After the Group's report is received, it will be published, and a full public consultation held.

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Advisory Group on Quarantine is expected to report. [48984]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 251.

British Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many, and what proportion of the total, of the explanatory leaflets issued by his Department's British Cattle Movement Service to livestock farmers were wrongly addressed; what representations he has made to the EU Standing Veterinary Committee on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [49681]

Mr. Rooker: We issued approximately 109,000 leaflets on the Cattle Tracing System last week; we estimate that around 50 per cent. had the wrong name matched to the address. The problem arose from a software programme error which has now been resolved. The error concerned the production of address labels only and does not affect the integrity of the Cattle Tracing System database which the BCMS will run. While deeply regrettable, this provided an unexpected early and successful test of the BCMS helpline which the leaflet promoted. A letter of apology has been sent to livestock farmers which again gives the BCMS Helpline details in case they missed this last week. The Standing Veterinary Committee has no locus in this matter.

Antibiotics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply by the Government to the Fourth report from the Agriculture Committee on Food Safety (HC 331), what steps he proposes to discourage the use of new antibiotics as a prophylactic in animal husbandry. [49453]

Mr. Rooker: No veterinary medicinal product is authorised for use unless it satisfies statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. The Government are advised on this by the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee (VPC). In considering any new application for the authorisation of an antibiotic veterinary medicinal product, the VPC has consistently discouraged prophylactic use.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to encourage a reduction in the use in livestock farming of antibiotics (a) for routine prophylactic purposes and (b) as growth promoters; and if he will make a statement. [49454]

Mr. Rooker: No veterinary medicinal product is authorised for use unless it satisfies statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. The Government are advised on this by the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee (VPC). In considering any new application for the authorisation of an antibiotic veterinary medicinal product, the VPC has consistently discouraged prophylactic use.

The use of additives in animal feedingstuffs, including growth promoters, is subject to controls under Directive 70/524/EEC. The recent reports from the Agriculture Committee and the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology have been referred to the Veterinary Products Committee. The Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food is also expected to report later this year. We will act on this independent scientific advice.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the species of (a) farm animals and (b) birds that routinely receive antibiotic growth promoters in their feed. [49076]

Mr. Rooker: Additives to animal feedingstuffs are authorised for use in the European Union in accordance with the provisions of Council Directive 70/524/EEC as amended. The Annexes to that Directive list eight authorised antibiotic growth promoters, which may variously be added to the feed of food-producing animals under the conditions laid down in the Annexes. I will write to my hon. Friend with a set of the Annexes, and I will make them available in the Library of the House shortly.

Cattle Tag Identification Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to amend the EU directive on cattle tag identification systems to allow the use of a lighter nylon cartridge tag. [49252]

Mr. Rooker: The relevant EU legislation would need to be amended by the European Commission, not the Department, in order to allow the use of the tag concerned as the primary identification tag for cattle.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the welfare implications of using a lighter, nylon cartridge tag were investigated by his Department during the consultation period prior to the EU decision on cattle tag identification systems. [49251]

Mr. Rooker: Eartags approved for use under earlier EU legislation were re-examined by MAFF prior to being approved for use under the 1997 legislation. This re-examination included consideration of the welfare implications of using all previously approved eartags including the nylon cartridge eartag.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what systems of tagging were considered by his Department during the consultation period prior to the EU decision on cattle tag identification systems. [49250]

Mr. Rooker: The Department undertook full consideration with interested parties on the 1997 EU legislation, which includes specifications for cattle eartags, prior to the adoption of this legislation by the EU.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what veterinary advice his Department has received about the number of cattle which will be vulnerable to infection and potential life-threatening complications following removal of existing tags and re-tagging to comply with the EU directive on cattle tag identification systems. [49249]

Mr. Rooker: I shall take veterinary advice into account when considering whether cattle tagged with Cooper Marketing tags should be re-tagged.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of cattle in the United Kingdom which will need to be re-tagged with plastic tags following the EU directive on cattle tag identification systems. [49248]

Mr. Rooker: The EU legislation agreed in 1997 does not require general re-tagging of cattle. A specific and limited problem has arisen recently following the failure in some cases of one eartag company, Cooper Marketing Ltd., to provide tags which meet EU and UK requirements. Cooper Marketing Ltd. has been excluded from supplying Ministry approved cattle eartags, and the Department is currently considering whether any re-tagging will be necessary.

European Union Enlargement

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement as to the impact of European Union enlargement on the British farming industry. [49277]

Mr. Rooker: The enlargement of the European Union is one of the key challenges facing the EU. Its impact on the British farming industry will depend on the terms of accession of each acceding country.

Pig Exports

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pigs were exported for breeding purposes in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994, (d) 1995 and (e) 1996. [48025]

Mr. Rooker: Information on the numbers of pigs exported, or certified for export, specifically for breeding purposes from 1992 to 1996 inclusive is not available. However, information recorded in the official Overseas Trade Statistics shows the total number of pigs exported from the UK.

| Year | Number of pigs |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 411,239 |
| 1993 | 165,663 |
| 1994 | 190,383 |
| 1995 | 234,997 |
| 1996 | 347,442 |

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pigs were exported to Spain for (a) slaughter, (b) further fattening and (c) breeding in (i) 1992, (ii) 1993, (iii) 1994, (iv) 1995 and (v) 1996. [48026]

Mr. Rooker: Information on the numbers of pigs exported, or certified for export, to Spain for (a) slaughter (b) further fattening and (c) breeding purposes from 1992 to 1996 inclusive is not available. However, information recorded in the official Overseas Trade Statistics shows the total number of pigs exported from the UK to Spain.

| Year | Number of pigs |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 11,173 |
| 1993 | 2,529 |
| 1994 | 3,770 |
| 1995 | 17,392 |
| 1996 | 20,293 |

Farm Subsidies (Payment in Euros)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the proposed EU agrimonetary system operational from 1 January 1999 will permit member states not joining the euro zone to pay their farmers EU farm subsidy payments in euros, if so requested. [48617]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Commission's proposals on the future of the agrimonetary system suggest that Member States not participating in the Single Currency from 1 January 1999 will be able to offer Euro payments after that date under certain circumstances. Member States' plans for making such payments would need prior approval by the Commission.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those organisations which have requested him to consider allowing UK farmers to receive EU farm subsidy payments in euros. [48618]

Dr. John Cunningham: We are currently in the process of consulting interested organisations on the future of the EU agrimonetary regime. The question of making CAP payments in Euro is one aspect of that consultation, which is not yet complete.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if it is his intention to enable farmers to receive EU subsidy payments in euros as from 1 January 1999, if they so request; [48615]

(2) if he will make a statement on the preparations his Department is making to enable farmers to receive their EU farm subsidy payments in euros, if they so request, from 1 January 1999. [48620]

Dr. John Cunningham: We are currently examining the possibility of offering operators the option of receiving CAP subsidies in Euro after 1 January 1999. We would need to be sure, before offering such an option, that any changes to the system could be achieved without jeopardising standards of service offered to recipients of CAP subsidies.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages to UK farmers of receiving their EU farm subsidies in euros, from 1 January 1999, if they so request. [48616]

Dr. John Cunningham: No overall assessment has been made of the advantages and disadvantages of farmers receiving CAP payments in Euro: the value of such a mechanism would vary depending on the circumstances of individual farmers.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors underlie his decision to prevent UK farmers from receiving EU farm subsidy paid in euros, from 1 January 1999. [48619]

Dr. John Cunningham: No decision has yet been made on whether UK farmers will be able to receive CAP subsidies paid in Euro after 1 January 1999.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the other EU states not joining the single currency on 1 January 1999, which will be allowing their farmers to receive EC subsidy scheme payments in euros. [48609]

Dr. John Cunningham: The other Member States not joining the Single Currency on 1 January 1999 have not yet indicated their intentions with regard to the payment of CAP subsidies in Euro.

Rural England White Paper

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations attended consultation meetings with Ministers held in connection with its production of the Rural England White Paper, Command 3016. [48608]

Dr. John Cunningham: As the right hon. Member will no doubt recall, a number of seminars and other meetings took place in 1995 prior to the publication of the previous administration's White Paper "Rural England" (Cmnd 3016). They were attended by a range of organisations representing rural interests.

Beef Labelling Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which other EU member states farmers will be required to pay for registration in connection with entry to a beef labelling scheme; and in each case how much is to be charged. [48610]

Dr. John Cunningham: In the majority of member states, including the United Kingdom, no fee is charged for approvals under the Beef Labelling Scheme. We understand that in Germany, however, approval fees are charged. The fees vary between DM 800 and DM 2900 depending on the complexity of the application. Because the Scheme applies to operators between abattoir and retail level, farmers as such do not need approvals unless they are also engaged in retail or wholesale activities.

"Commitment to Service"

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department has made in meeting the service delivery targets set out in "Commitment to Service". [50319]

Dr. John Cunningham: The table sets out the performance achieved by Regional Service Centres during 1997/98 against the targets published in the Charter document "Commitment to Service", second edition.

RSC Performance data (%) for financial year 1997/98—(unless otherwise specified)

| Wildlife and Countryside Act | Licence applications | 98 |
| Correspondence | Answered within 10 working days | 98 |
| Complaints | Numbers receiving response within 10 working days | 89 |

Notes:

1. The Five Year Set Aside Scheme closed for new applications on 30 September 1996. Performance data are therefore not included in the table. Similarly the Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme (1989) Non-Plan Claims has also been omitted: this scheme closed on 19 February 1996
2. Ten complaints were referred to the MAFF Adjudicator during the year. 3 of these were upheld, 6 were not upheld. One case is outstanding, pending the conclusion of legal action by the complainant
3. The relatively high failure rate for ESA Applications and ESA Conservation Plan Applications is due mainly to problems associated with IACS reconciliation. In the case of F&CGS 1991 Plan Claims, it is due to small numbers of claims giving rise to a disproportionate number of complex problems
4. The relatively high failure rate for the FWPS Claims and the Pilot NSA Claims are due to the diversion of staff resources to higher priority work
5. The total percentage has been calculated by setting the entire number of applications or claims cleared within the target time, against the total number received. Applications and claims not cleared due to reasons beyond our control (incorrect information supplied by applicant, etc.) are not included as failures to meet target
6. The Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme (1991) Plan applications, the Farm Diversification Grant Scheme (Capital Items) Claims, the Farm Diversification Grant Scheme (Feasibility and Marketing) Claims, and the Agricultural Improvement Scheme Plan Claims have all been omitted from the table, as the numbers involved are de-minimis

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49087]

Mr. Ron Davies: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. The Welsh Office has had its own internal guidance in place since July 1994 on ensuring that equal opportunities are properly taken into account in framing policy and legislation.

I hold regular meetings with my hon. Friends the Members for Cardiff, North (Ms Morgan), for Conwy (Mrs. Williams), for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Ms Lawrence) and for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) to discuss a range of issues affecting women. I have also met representatives of the Equal Opportunities Commission Wales, the Wales Assembly of Women, the National Federation of Women's Institutes and Mewn Cymru. I took the views of equality organisations into account in framing the Government of Wales Bill, which includes specific provisions on equality of opportunity.

My Department is currently reviewing the mechanisms available to take forward mainstreaming of Departmental policies to provide a firm basis from which the National Assembly will work and is maintaining contact with the Equal Opportunities Commission Wales on this subject.

Disabled Voters

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning access for disabled people to polling stations during Welsh Assembly elections. [49324]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have received one letter. The provision of polling stations is the responsibility of the acting returning officer who must provide a sufficient number of polling stations and allot electors to the polling stations in such a manner as he thinks most convenient. The returning officer is required, so far as is reasonable and practicable, to select as polling stations only those buildings which are accessible to voters who are disabled.

My officials are having regular discussions with representatives of the elections administrators about arrangements for the Assembly elections. This matter will be raised with them.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49530]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make it her policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49535]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today, Official Report, column 600.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many loans under the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme have been written off in each of the last 10 years; and for what amounts. [49310]

Mrs. Roche: The number and value of payments made against the guarantee for loans issued under the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme in each of the last ten years was:

| | Payments made | Gross cost (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| 1988–89 | [1]500 | 8.9 |
| 1989–90 | 608 | 10.1 |
| 1990–91 | 1,161 | 21.7 |
| 1991–92 | 1,777 | 31.6 |
| 1992–93 | 1,720 | 22.4 |
| 1993–94 | 1,216 | 16.3 |
| 1994–95 | 1,163 | 22.1 |
| 1995–96 | 1,556 | 34.6 |
| 1996–97 | 1,885 | 43.4 |
| 1997–98 | 2,246 | 50.1 |

[1] Estimate

Nuclear Reprocessing Industry

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the implications for the nuclear reprocessing industry in the United Kingdom of the decision by the German Government to ban the transport of spent fuel. [48074]

Mr. Battle: The German ban on the transport of spent fuel arose from contamination found on French flasks. I understand that the UK nuclear reprocessing industry is co-operating with the German authorities to help ensure a timely resumption of spent fuel transports from Germany, in accordance with the appropriate national and international regulations. In the interim, BNFL have postponed the next planned shipment of flasks from Europe.

Price Maintenance (Medicines)

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate her Department has made of the cost to public funds of the legal proceedings in the Restrictive Practices Court to be brought by the Office of Fair Trading in its attempt to end resale price maintenance on over-the-counter medicines. [48241]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Referrals to the Restrictive Practices Court are a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I am asking him to write to my hon. Friend.

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the reviews her Department, or its predecessors, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48522]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 6 July 1998]: This question cannot be answered without incurring disproportionate cost.

Information Technology

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library a copy of the Government's response to the EU Commission communication dated 14 March 1998, relating to proposed changes in the rules and procedures for public procurement of IT equipment, software and services. [49447]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Commission's Communication 'Public Procurement in the European Union' set out the Commission's thoughts on the way forward in the light of responses to its 1996 Green Paper. The Communication went wider than the procurement of IT equipment, software, and services, in particular in encouraging the development of electronic procurement, and promised a number of specific proposals for clarifying the legal framework and bringing it up to date. The Government welcomed these developments and the United Kingdom Presidency was able to secure Community-wide support for them in the Internal Market Council on 18 May. In the circumstances, a written response was unnecessary and much will now depend on the detailed proposals which the Commission will make over the coming months.

Export Licence Applications

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications were refused by the Export Control Organisation during each of the four-week periods used by her Department from 6 March to date. [48225]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and numbers of applications for Standard Individual Export Licences and Open Individual Export Licences refused in full for each period are as follows:

| Period | Standard individual export licences | Open individual export licences |
|---|---|---|
| 7 March 1998 to 3 April 1998 | 4 | 1 |
| 4 April 1998 to 1 May 1998 | 8 | 0 |
| 2 May 1998 to 29 May 1998 | 8 | 0 |

This information should be considered in light of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the average times taken to process export licence applications in the periods (a) 1 May 1996 to 1 May 1997 and (b) 1 May 1997 to 1 May 1998. [48226]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 103.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the total number of export licence applications processed by the Export Control Organisation in each of the four-week periods used by her Department from 6 March to date broken down into (a) those circulated to other Government departments and (b) those not circulated. [48224]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The information, beginning with the four-week period nearest to the date specified, is as follows:

| Period | Applications circulated to other departments according to their policy requirements and completed during the period | Applications not circulated to other departments and completed during the period |
|---|---|---|
| 7 March 1998 to 3 April 1998 | 1,039 | 111 |
| 4 April 1998 to 1 May 1998 | 704 | 145 |
| 2 May 1998 to 29 May 1998 | 710 | 94 |

This information was taken from the Export Control Organisation's management data which are compiled in order to monitor performance at processing applications for Standard Individual Export Licences. The performance measures do not apply to applications for Open Individual Export Licences (due to the very wide variations between goods and country coverage of such licences) or licences covering Iran or Iraq or exports which are subject to control solely because of United Nations Sanctions.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications waited more than 20 days for a decision in each of the periods (a) 1 May 1996 to 1 May 1997 and (b) 1 May 1997 to 1 May 1998. [48230]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The Export Control Organisation (ECO) measures its performance against two aims:

to provide a substantive response to an application within 20 working days of receipt for applications that need to be circulated to other Government Departments according to their policy requirements ("circulated cases"), and to provide such a response within 10 working days of receipt for applications dealt with by DTI itself ("non-circulated" cases).

The ECO's management data on the processing of licence applications are compiled on the basis of four-week periods. For the period 1 May 1996 to 2 May 1997, 3,661 applications which were circulated to other Government Departments according to their policy requirements did not meet the performance target.

For the period 3 May 1997 to 1 May 1998, 5,174 applications which were circulated to other Departments did not meet the performance target.

Records are not kept in such a way as to be able to identify non-circulated cases which took more than 20 working days to complete.

Plutonium

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the United Kingdom's civil stockpile of plutonium, with particular reference to the risk of nuclear proliferation. [48931]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to similar questions asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies) on 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 415, my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 163–64, and my hon. Friend the Member for Kirkcaldy, (Mr. Moonie) on 2 June 1998, Official Report, column 162.

In particular, I would refer the hon. Member to the conclusion of the Statement referred to in the answer given to the hon. Member for Croydon, Central, which is available in the Library of the House.

Medicines

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what costs have been incurred by the Office of Fair Trading in preparation for legal proceedings in the Restrictive Practices Court to end resale price maintenance on over-the-counter medicines. [48239]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The preparation for legal proceedings in the Restrictive Practices Court is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I am asking him to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has evaluated into the comparative price of over-the-counter medicines in the United Kingdom relative to other EU countries; and if she will make a statement. [48232]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The DTI has not carried out such research, since the Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring the market where there are competition problems and for any studies of which result from this.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the loss of resale price maintenance on over the counter medicines on small businesses, with particular reference to pharmacies. [48213]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The Director General of Fair Trading has published details in his January 1998 report "Material Changes in the Medicaments Markets since 1970", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Energy Review

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when she plans to complete her review of electricity pool pricing; [48592]

(2) if her pool price review will require some coal-fired power stations to switch to base load and gas stations to peak load. [48593]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: I expect to receive the advice of the Director General of Electricity Supply on the Review of Electricity Trading Arrangements this month. I will announce my decision after considering that advice.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her forecast of electricity prices to domestic consumers for the next three years (a) on the basis of inherited policies and (b) taking into account her statement on her review of energy sources for power generation of 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169-72. [48590]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: The precise path of electricity prices will depend on market developments. We inherited an electricity market containing basic flaws which have tended to act to the disadvantage of coal and customers alike.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which specific proposals in her Energy Statement of 25 June 1998 will act to reduce consumer prices of electricity. [48589]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the consultation document on the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation published on 25 June 1998 and, in particular, to paragraph 13 of Chapter 4 and paragraph 17 of Chapter 5.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has had from the gas industry concerning her electricity review. [48588]

Mrs. Beckett: [holding answer 2 July 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to Annex 2 of the consultation document on the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation, published on 25 June 1998.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what forecast she has made of the effects on employment levels in (a) the construction and (b) the gas industry arising from her policy on new gas-fired power stations. [48586]

Mrs. Beckett: [holding answer 2 July 1998]: The proposals announced for consultation on 25 June 1998 were about energy policy, not employment in particular sectors. Our proposals would bring lower electricity prices, more effective competition, and secure and diverse energy supplies. This will be good for jobs across the economy.

Business Innovation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on trends in expenditure on business innovation over the last year. [48338]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: The annual R&D Scoreboard provides an important international benchmark of the funds UK companies invest in R&D as part of the innovation process. The 1998 Scoreboard, published on 25 June, lists the reported R&D expenditure over the last financial year of over 500 UK companies. This shows an overall increase of 6.2 per cent. in R&D expenditure to £10.5 billion, with several business sectors (including engineering, media, support services, and telecommunications) showing sizeable increases in R&D expenditure. In addition, the pharmaceuticals sector now leads the world on R&D investment as a proportion of sales, while the increase in R&D shown by the healthcare sector was three times the international average. Although there can be no room for complacency, as the 1998 CBI Innovation Trends Survey shows, it is clear that many UK businesses are investing in innovation and R&D on a par with the best in the world.

Post Office

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when in the autumn she will announce her policy for the Post Office. [48557]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: I will present the Government's proposals on the Post Office's future organisation, structure, and financing as soon as I am ready to do so.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how businesses will be expected to account for the value of accommodation when complying with the minimum wage; [48857]

(2) how the value of accommodation will be assessed when setting the minimum wage. [48858]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 July 1998]: The government are considering the detailed implementation of the Low Pay Commission's recommendation on taking accommodation into account as an offset towards payment of the minimum wage, and will make their approach clear in the draft regulations on which we have made a commitment to consult.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48667]

Mrs. Beckett: Information on the average time taken by my Department to respond to correspondence from members of the public could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. One of the six service standards for central Government requires Departments to set a target for responding to letters from the public. All management units in my Department are required to have systems to monitor performance against this standard. I understand that a report on the performance of the main Departments against the six standards in 1997–98 is being prepared for the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and will be made available to the House shortly.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what dispersion modelling her Department has evaluated in respect of a breach of containment accident at the Sellafield high-activity liquid waste storage tanks, arising from (a) an earthquake, (b) a tank explosion and (c) a malicious attack. [47877]

Mr. Battle: It is not for the Department of Trade and Industry to evaluate the consequences of possible accidents at nuclear installations. The independent Health and Safety Executive (HSE), which is responsible for regulating safety at UK nuclear sites, has looked at all credible risks to safety associated with the storage of liquid High Level Waste (HLW) at the Sellafield site. HSE's views on this, including an assessment of the risks from earthquake and aircraft crash, as well as fire and explosion hazards, were set out in a report published in December 1995 entitled "Safety of the Storage of Liquid High Level Waste (HLW) at BNFL Sellafield", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Strict security arrangements are in place at Sellafield to protect the site against malicious attack. These arrangements are kept under regular review.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) of 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 500, if she will make a statement on the specific work being conducted on safety at Sellafield by the Nuclear Safety Advisory Committee; and what is Government policy on the public disclosure of papers or other documentary materials provided to NUSAC by nuclear operators. [48908]

Mr. Battle: The Nuclear Safety Advisory Committee (NuSAC) advises the President of the Board of Trade and the Health and Safety Commission. Its current programme of work includes several items related to the management of safety at Sellafield, specifically the storage of spent fuel, fuel production facilities, and the decommissioning of silos and ponds.

The public disclosure of NuSAC papers and other material passed to NuSAC is governed by statutory requirements. Release of environmental information is governed by the Environmental Information Regulations 1992. Any information supplied to NuSAC which was obtained through the exercise of regulatory powers conferred under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, is covered by the restrictions on disclosure provided for in Section 28 of that Act. Section 28 places restrictions on the disclosure of regulatory information, but also provides for exceptions to these restrictions. For example, HSE has the power to make regulatory information public at any time if it believes that this is necessary to discharge its statutory functions to protect the health and safety of workers and the public. NuSAC publishes a biennial report and regularly reports on specific areas of its work.

Serial Publications

Ms Squire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which British companies have made applications to the European Commission DGXIII in respect of funding to create union lists of serials &c.; what advice the UK National Focal Point gave in respect of each application; which projects it supported; and if she will list the reasons for the advice and support in each case. [48453]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 3 July 1998]: It is not the practice of the European Commission to publish details of applicants in answers to calls for proposals, but full details of all participants in successful projects are published widely, including on the Commission web site at http://www2.echo.lu/.

UK National Focal Points, or similar advisory bodies, provide advice on request direct to potential applicants for European Union funds under certain programmes rather than to the Department of Trade and Industry. Advice or support provided is a matter between the advisory bodies and the recipient.

Ms Squire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment (a) her Department and (b) the UK National Focal Point have made of the application from the Scientific Documentation Centre Ltd. to INFO 2000 for a European resource of serials. [48452]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 3 July 1998]: Scientific Documentation Ltd.'s application to the INFO 2000 programme was in response to the Call for Proposals (Official Journal No. C381 of 16.12.67) to stimulate the development and use of multimedia information content, directed at the exploitation of content resources in the public sector. Decisions on proposals under this call are a matter for the European Commission, as advised by an independent panel of evaluators and taking into account opinions given by Member States. The Commission plans to tell applicants its decisions on the call in the near future.

There is no National Focal Point for INFO 2000. However, advisory support is provided through MIDAS-NET which, in Scotland, is based on Scottish Enterprise, who discussed the application with Scientific Documentation Ltd. Neither Scottish Enterprise nor the Department of Trade and Industry made an assessment of the proposal. This is the function of the evaluators appointed by the European Commission.

Euro Compliance

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what meetings she has had with financial institutions on the issue of reprogramming computers to make them euro compliant at the same time as having to make them year 2000 compliant; [47042]

(2) what research her Department has evaluated on the problems of making computer systems euro compliant at the same time as making them year 2000 compliant; [47050]

(3) what assessment she has made of the technical implications of the introduction of the euro, with particular regard to computer systems; [47005]

(4) what research her Department has undertaken to assess the cost to the United Kingdom economy of reprogramming computers to make them euro compliant. [47045]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The UK will not be joining the single currency on 1 January 1999. Therefore, while the launch of the euro and the Millennium both have IT consequences, they have very different implications with regard to resources and timing. For the majority of firms in the UK, the IT implications of the launch of the euro will be secondary to strategic considerations.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy to (a) record each contact by a lobbying organisation with (i) Ministers and (ii) civil servants and (b) publish details of such contacts. [49538]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 600.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much inward investment came to the United Kingdom in (a) the latest quarter for which figures are available and (b) the same quarter in the previous year. [49194]

Mr. Ian McCartney: During the first quarter of 1998 overseas direct investment in the United Kingdom was worth £10.2 billion, compared with £8.9 billion a year earlier.

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the ICL Pathway Project to be implemented in all Post Office outlets. [49506]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 July 1998]: Current plans provide for all post offices to be automated by the end of 2000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in how many Post Offices the ICL Pathway Project is being trialled at present. [49507]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 July 1998]: At present 204 post offices in the North-East and South-East of England have been automated and are paying Child Benefit by Payment Card as part of a limited trial.

PRIME MINISTER

Council of the Isles

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that the Council of the Isles includes representation from all the English regions. [49750]

The Prime Minister: The Good Friday Agreement provides for the establishment of a British-Irish Council which reflects an earlier proposal for a Council of the Isles.

The Agreement specifies that membership of the British-Irish Council will comprise representatives of the British and Irish Governments, devolved institutions in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales, when established, and, if appropriate, elsewhere in the United Kingdom, together with representatives of the Isle of Man and Channel Islands.

The Government are currently working to establish the Council later in the year, in transitional form, as the Agreement requires, and will be consulting interested parties as and when appropriate.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to vary the number of Welsh Office Ministers, and the remuneration of these Ministers, to reflect their reduced responsibilities when the Welsh Assembly is established. [50000]

The Prime Minister: This will be a matter for further consideration once the National Assembly has been established.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49768]

The Prime Minister: Any individual or group may suggest names for appointment to a non-departmental public body (NDPB), review body or task force. The Public Appointments Unit maintains a central list to which nominations can also be made.

Appointments to NDPBs are made in line with the principles established by the Committee on Standards in Public Life. These require selection on merit and an independent element in the selection process. The Government have recently announced the extension of the remit of the Commissioner for Public Appointments to cover all advisory NDPBs as well as executive NDPBs.

Ministers appoint to review bodies and task forces individuals—whether Members of Parliament, civil servants or others—on the basis of their expertise and the contribution they will make to the particular review or task. In making appointments, Ministers' decisions are not improperly influenced by the views of any outside organisations. No systematic record is kept of the origin of nominations since it is usually not relevant to such decisions.

Derek Draper

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions his Press Secretary has briefed Mr. Derek Draper on the Government's position on matters of current concern. [49961]

The Prime Minister: The role of Press Officers at No. 10 is to answer all calls from journalists and to explain Government policy to them in accordance with the rules that apply to the GICS. Mr. Draper has had no briefing from any Press Officer that was not available to any journalist calling the Press Office. No systematic record is kept of the details of the thousands of calls received each week, but any call from Mr. Draper would be dealt with routinely by a Press Officer, rather than the Chief Press Secretary.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Office Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the President of the Council how staff numbers in her Office have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48881]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The number of permanent staff in the Privy Council Office on both dates was 34.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Official Report

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what plans there are to publish the daily parts of the Official Report in formats amenable to people with sensory impairments. [50033]

Mrs. Roe: There are no plans to publish the Official Report in the way in which the hon. Gentleman has described. The Official Report is published free on the Internet and this service can be used by refreshable braille display or through speech synthesis, in order to provide access to visually impaired people.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Taxis (London)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce incentives to London taxi drivers to convert their vehicles to use natural gas or LPG as fuel. [48688]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government recognise the important air quality advantages of cleaner taxis, such as those using road fuel gases. We already provide an incentive for drivers to use gas fuel because the tax on LPG and natural gas is already much lower than the tax on diesel. The Energy Saving Trust Powershift Programme provides grants to support the purchases of alternatively fuelled vehicles. One such grant under consideration could include gas fuelled London taxis. The Public Carriage Office are working with manufacturers to encourage the development of alternative "greener" engines and fuels.

Local Authority Transport Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total amount of money made available in each of the past five years to local authorities under the Transport Policies and Programmes system. [48913]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is as follows:

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 1,047 |
| 1994–95 | 894 |
| 1995–96 | 960 |
| 1996–97 | 830 |
| 1997–98 | 746 |

Figures in all years include grant under the Industrial Development Act 1982. Figures for the latter four years include credit approvals available to match European Regional Development Fund grant.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the proportion of total TPP money made available to local authorities in each year for the past five years that was spent on on-going road building schemes; and if he will list the schemes. [48915]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have placed this information in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been allocated in each of the past five years to (a) road schemes and (b) other transport schemes under the Single Regeneration Budget; and which schemes have benefited. [48918]

Angela Eagle: The Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund offers support to Partnerships to help them to carry out comprehensive regeneration of their local areas. Partnerships decide local priorities and road and other transport projects may be an element of their schemes. Funding is normally provided for a package of activities and is not allocated by individual elements. Funding commenced on 1 April 1995 and is available for the lifetime of schemes (up to seven years).

I have placed in the Library a list of the names of the schemes and the total lifetime Challenge Fund grant allocated which includes grant for road and other transport related activities.

Flood Defences (Brentwood)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list for each of the financial years since 1983–84 (a) the expenditure submitted by Brentwood Borough Council under the heading flood defences, for use in the Department's settlement SSA indicator data, (b) the increase in the SSA due to the inclusion of the flood defences estimates in these calculations, (c) the amount of additional Government grant received in that year by the Council solely as a result of the inclusion of the flood defences figures, if any, and (d) the increase in capping limits in each year solely as a result of the inclusion of the flood defence estimates in the calculations; [49012]

(2) if he will calculate the effect on (a) the standard spending assessment, (b) the amount of Government grant and (c) the capping limit for Brentwood Borough Council for 1998–99 if the flood defence estimates had been nil for each year since 1983–84. [49013]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table shows (a) the expenditure submitted by Brentwood Borough Council for use in the calculation of the Flood Defence element of standard spending assessments (SSAs) for each year since 1990–91; and (b) the resulting increase in the SSA for Brentwood Borough Council:

| Year for which expenditure was budgeted[1] | Year for which budgeted expenditure was used in the SSA calculation | Budgeted expenditure (£000)[2] | Increase in SSA due to use of budgeted flood defence expenditure in the calculation (£000)[3] |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 1991–92 | 27 | 30 |
| 1991–92 | 1992–93 | 84 | 94 |
| 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 29 | 30 |
| 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 923 | 944 |
| 1994–95 | 1995–96 | 911 | 915 |
| 1995–96 | 1996–97 | 933 | 975 |
| 1996–97 | 1997–98 | 957 | 1,014 |
| 1997–98 | 1998–99 | 955 | 1,004 |

[1] Figures submitted and used in earlier years are not readily available
[2] Budgeted net current expenditure on flood defence
[3] The figures given are for the Flood Defence SSA element for Brentwood Borough Council in each year. The overall increase in SSA due to the inclusion of figures for flood defence expenditure would have been slightly greater than the amounts quoted due to a consequent small decrease in the size of the reduction for interest receipts. The figures quoted do not take account of any indirect effect of changes in spending patterns which may have taken place as a result of not budgeting for expenditure on flood defence.
Note:
The reported budgeted expenditure for 1998–99 is £961,000.

(c) The amount of additional Government grant received in each year by the Council solely as a result of the inclusion of the flood defence figures is approximately equal to the increase in SSA quoted in the table.

(d) It is impossible to calculate the increase in capping limits for Brentwood Borough Council in each year solely as a result of the inclusion of the flood defence estimates in the calculations because they are likely to have been affected by any changes in budgeting decisions as a result of not budgeting to spend on flood defence.

If the flood defence estimates for Brentwood Borough Council had been nil for each year since 1983–84, the SSA and the amount of Government grant received by the Council for 1998–99 would have been reduced by approximately the size of the increases indicated previously. It is impossible to know what the Council's capping limit in 1998–99 would have been, since it would depend upon the budget it would have set in 1997–98 and earlier years.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49086]

Angela Eagle: Guidance on policy appraisal has been available since 1992. DETR relaunched the initiative in May 1998.

Within this Department we are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy on women.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision has been made in respect of payment of debts owed by Midland Expressway Ltd. in relation to the construction of the BNRR in the event that the company becomes bankrupt. [49349]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No financial provision has been made by the Government, since we do not consider it likely that the company will become bankrupt or that if it did liabilities would pass to the Government.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the report by Transport Planning Associates commissioned by his Department into the bids to construct the Birmingham Northern Relief Road submitted by BNRR Ltd., MEL and MPC. [49348]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None, since the document appears to be part of the material that previous ministers used in reaching their decision to award the BNRR concession. I understand MEL developed their traffic modelling very substantially during and after the bidding process so as to provide a sound basis for putting their scheme to the public inquiry.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total projected yearly cost of the operation and maintenance of the widened section of the M42 included in the Birmingham Northern Relief Road scheme which would be paid for by the Government if the scheme went ahead. [49287]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Reliable maintenance estimates will not be available until, following the resolution of the current High Court challenges, MEL have undertaken the detailed design of the carriageway. The reconstruction of the M42 to provide an entirely new carriageway should mean that, for the foreseeable future, maintenance costs should be very much lower than for the existing carriageway.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what percentage of the operation and maintenance cost of the section of the M42 included in the BNRR scheme would be paid for by the Government to MEL if the scheme went ahead; [49289]

(2) what percentage of the construction cost of widening the section of the M42 included in the BNRR scheme is to be paid for by the Government if the MEL scheme goes ahead. [49288]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Forty per cent.

Empty Government Properties

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a regional breakdown of the number of empty residential properties owned by Her Majesty's Government, indicating where those properties are located. [49244]

Mr. Raynsford: As requested, the following table shows the location of empty residential properties owned by those Departments from which my Department collects figures, using their own regional definitions. Figures for other Government Departments are not collected centrally.

| Location | Number of properties |
|---|---|
| Highways Agency: | |
| Northumberland, Cumbria, Durham, Tyne & Wear, Cleveland, North Yorkshire, North Humberside, Lancashire, Greater Manchester, Merseyside and Cheshire | 112 |

| London | 215 |
| Home Office: | |
| North Region | 59 |
| Midland Region | 50 |
| South East/West and Wales | 145 |
| Ministry of Defence: | |

| London/Aldershot | 1,507 |
| Eastern | 3,023 |
| Western | 1,466 |
| Scotland | 1,252 |
| Northern Ireland | 302 |

Second Homes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 204, how many second homes are owned and rented in Gloucestershire by households having their main residence in England, excluding second homes which are the main residence of another household and those which the owners are intending to sell. [49247]

Mr. Raynsford: The information is not available at the county level.

Rented Housing

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the average weekly rent during 1997 in (a) council, (b) housing association and (c) private rented housing. [49436]

Mr. Raynsford: Figures for England are set out in the table. The latest average weekly rents available for the private rented sector cover 1996–97 and therefore rents used for the council and housing association sectors are for as close to that date as possible.

|---|---|
| Council | 40.17 |
| Housing association[1] | 46.74 |
| Privately rented | 76 |

Source:
Council: DETR Housing Subsidy Claim Forms
Housing association: annual Housing Corporation HAR10/1 return
Privately rented: DETR Survey of English Housing

House Prices

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what data his Department collates on average house prices for (a) London and (b) other regions. [49415]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department produces two sets of statistics on regional house prices: a regional house price index and average house prices by region. The statistics are available for Government Office Regions and Standard Statistical Regions.

Average house prices by region and the regional house price index are published in the annual volume of Housing and Construction Statistics. In addition, part 1 of the quarterly Housing and Construction Statistics contains regional average house prices and Economic Trends features the regional house price index. All are published by The Stationery Office and are available in the Library.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1998, Official Report, column 46, what contractual penalties will apply in the event of LCR failing to build the entire railway from the Channel Tunnel to St. Pancras. [49345]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The existing Development Agreement between the Government and London and Continental Railways (LCR), which will be updated to reflect the deal outlined by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70, is legally binding on LCR. It requires LCR to build all of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) as detailed in the CTRL Act 1996. Should LCR fail to fulfil its obligation to provide the link in accordance with the Act, it would be in breach of that contract. This would allow the Secretary of State to terminate the Development Agreement.

Moreover, under the revised arrangements, the bulk of the £1.8 billion (NPV) Public Sector Support will be reserved for Phase 2 and would start to be paid only when the majority of the construction costs of that phase had already been incurred.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the time scale of phase two of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link between Ebbsfleet and King's Cross to assess ways in which it might be advanced. [49468]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A review would serve no useful purpose. As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister made clear on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70, the revised arrangements are specifically designed to incentivise Railtrack to commit to acquire Section 2 as early as possible. Railtrack will have a lesser financial return on Section 1 than for Sections 1 and 2 combined. The sooner Railtrack commits to the second phase, the sooner it can expect to earn the higher return.

Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what savings are forecast from the proposed reduction in the number of administrative units for valuation tribunals. [49470]

Mr. Raynsford: We estimate that over a three to five year period the move to the new administrative structure should give net savings on current complements of around £1.3 million per annum or 12 per cent. of the VT budget for a one-off cost (spread over several years and financed out of savings) of around £2 million.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what savings were (a) projected and (b) achieved from the previous amalgamation of the administration of neighbouring valuation tribunals. [49471]

Mr. Raynsford: Four office mergers have taken place in recent years (as well as a collocation of two administrations earlier this year). Full savings can take a few years to come through because of initial one-off accommodation and staffing costs.

It is difficult to quantify precisely savings due solely to rationalisation, because of changes in other circumstances. However, a comparison of the changes in costs of merged and non-merged offices between 1995–96 and 1997–98 indicate savings of over £240,000 (or 17 per cent.) per annum. This compares with projected savings of £220,000.

Gipsies

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the response by local authorities to the guidance given in Department of the Environment Circular 1/94 requiring local planning authorities to assess the need for gipsy accommodation in their areas; and if he will make a statement. [49469]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department part funded research by the Advisory Council for the Education of Romany and other Travellers (ACERT) which examined local authority development plans to assess the adequacy of Gipsy policies. Their report, A directory of planning for Gypsy site provisions in England, revealed some gaps in local authorities' compliance with Circular 1/94. My officials have written to all chief planning officers, on 27 May, reminding local planning authorities of the advice in Circular 1/94. Their attention was particularly drawn to the requirement to assess the need for Gipsy accommodation in their areas and to ensure that adequate Gipsy site provision was made in their development plans. A copy of the letter will be placed in the House Library.

Lobbyists

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what occasions (a) he, (b) ministers in his Department and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at these meetings. [49550]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, and their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety; for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49771]

Mr. Prescott: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today, Official Report, columns 641-42.

Vehicle Number Plates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will carry out a compliance cost assessment in respect of the proposed change in the format of vehicle number plates; and if he will make a statement. [49960]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The proposed change to the vehicle registration format is not due to be implemented until 2001. Interested parties, including industry, will be consulted on the draft regulation to effect the change before it is laid before Parliament nearer that time. It is Government policy that all such changes are accompanied by a Regulatory Impact Assessment.

Building Regulations

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 10 June 1998, Official Report, column 575, regarding building regulations, what measures his Department has taken to identify building control notices which may have been obtained to circumvent the new requirements for access and facilities for disabled people. [49762]

Mr. Raynsford: Officials are in contact with the NHBC, which is the only approved inspector currently able to give Building Act initial notices for new housing, to identify any cases similar to those in the hon. Member's constituency and to ensure that NHBC have measures in place to avoid any more such cases. I am considering what additional steps are needed to ensure an effective transfer to the new Building Regulation requirements, and I will make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Water and Fire Services

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the status of the code of practice produced by the National Liaison Group to improve water industry and Fire Service co-operation; and by whom it will be enforced. [50109]

Angela Eagle: The Code will provide guidance to water companies and Fire Authorities on issues relating to water for firefighting. It will not have direct enforcement provisions, but water companies and Fire Authorities will be expected to comply with its provisions. Its implementation will be monitored by my Department.

National Stadium

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what community use is planned for the National Stadium at Wembley; and if he will make a statement. [49652]

Mr. Banks: I have been asked to reply.

There is an agreement in principle that the stadium will be used for community use. The precise arrangements will be required by the English Sports Council, and will be considered as the design brief is prepared and finished.

WALES

Lobbyists

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions (i) he, (ii) his special adviser and (iii) his Ministers have held with representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [49699]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special Advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and task forces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49781]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Integrated Transport Policy

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Government's proposals relating to an integrated transport policy in Wales will be published. [49788]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Transport Policy Statement is expected to be published later this month.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many innovation and technology counsellors there are in Wales offering free guidance to firms on the Year 2000 problem; and how they may be contacted. [49789]

Mr. Hain: There are currently 8 Innovation and Technology Counsellors employed across Wales who are addressing the year 2000 problem as part of their portfolio of providing wide-ranging advice and guidance to Welsh businesses.

A recruitment exercise is, however, currently being undertaken to appoint a further 8 counsellors who will have specific responsibility for addressing the "Year 2000" issue.

Existing ITCs can be contacted via Business Connect Wales on 0345 96 97 98.

Exports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the value of (a) all exports and (b) manufactured goods exported from Wales to the rest of the EU in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 1998. [49795]

Mr. Hain: Export statistics are collected only on a UK basis and cannot be disaggregated.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people he estimates were employed in manufacturing in Wales in each year since 1992. [49794]

Mr. Hain: The latest estimates of the number of employee jobs in manufacturing in each year since 1992 are given in the table.

Number of employee jobs in manufacturing[1]

| Year | Thousand |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 200 |
| 1993 | 199 |
| 1994 | 207 |
| 1995 | 212 |
| 1996 | 209 |
| 1997 | 208 |
| 1998 | 214 |

[1] Excludes the self employed, but data from the Labour Force Survey indicate that, on average since 1992, there have been around 10,000 self employed people in the manufacturing sector in Wales

Strikes

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many days were lost through strikes in Wales in each year since 1992. [49790]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of working days lost due to labour disputes, Wales 1992–1997[1]

| Year | Working days lost |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 10,000 |
| 1993 | 20,100 |
| 1994 | 13,300 |
| 1995 | 14,700 |
| 1996 | 60,400 |
| 1997 | 3,200 |

[1] Labour disputes statistics cover all stoppages of work connected with terms and conditions of employment, except those involving fewer than ten workers or lasting less than one working day. These are excluded unless the total number of working days lost in the dispute is greater than 100

Inland Investment

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new jobs he estimates were created by inward investment to Wales in 1997–98. [49793]

Mr. Hain: In 1997–98, the Welsh Development Agency recorded inward investment projects which promise the creation of a total of 8,961 new jobs. Not all of the jobs will have been created last year; the majority of the projects will need time gradually to build up to full operating capacity.

New Deal

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently on the New Deal in Wales, by travel-to-work area. [49787]

Mr. Hain: The figures are not available by travel-to-work area. However, over 5,000 young people in Wales have already joined the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds and are receiving the support, training and experience they need to secure lasting employment.

"Pathway to Prosperity"

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost to public funds of the publication of "Pathway to Prosperity". [49796]

Mr. Hain: The charge to the Department for designing, printing, and distributing the document and related materials is expected to be in the region of £16,000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her latest estimate of likely ECGD losses on its portfolio in (a) Indonesia, (b) Thailand, (c) South Korea and (d) Malaysia. [49193]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 6 July 1998]: ECGD does not expect to make any losses on sovereign risk business in these markets. Payment delays have occurred in relation to a small element of commercial risk debts in Thailand and Indonesia, but it is too early to say how much loss (if any) these might lead to.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent assessment she has made of Indonesian risk under ECGD. [49197]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 6 July 1998]: ECGD completed its last formal market review of Indonesia in January 1998. The changing circumstances in the region have meant that ECGD has monitored the situation closely since then. A further formal review will commence shortly.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the country risks reviewed by ECGD in the last six months, along with the changes of terms which resulted. [49196]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Since January 1998 ECGD has reviewed the risks on the following countries:

| Month/country | Change of terms |
|---|---|
| January | |
| Bangladesh | Cover increased. Premium reduced |

Structural Funds

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the moneys that have been made available to each of the regions of the United Kingdom from each of the European Union's structural funds in each of the last three years. [49482]

Mrs. Roche: Structural Funds allocations under Objectives 1, 2 and 5b (excluding the Community Initiatives) are given in the table. Allocations for the Community Initiatives (which represent approximately 9 per cent of the UK's overall Objectives 1, 2 and 5b allocations) and under Objectives 3, 4 and 5a have not been given, since not all of these are regionally allocated. The decline in allocations under Objective 2 between 1996 and 1997 will be fully offset by higher allocations in 1998 and 1999.

Lobbyists

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions (a) Ministers and (b) special advisers in her Department have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who their representatives were; and what were the topics of discussions. [49659]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and task forces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49773]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today, Official Report, columns 641-42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Hawk Jet Contract (Indonesia)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the likelihood of full payments being made by the customer for Hawk jets supplied to Indonesia. [49195]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 6 July 1998]: No specific assessment has been made in relation to the Hawk contracts. It is not usual practice to re-assess risk on individual contracts once the ECGD guarantee has been issued. Payments under the loans guaranteed by ECGD are up to date.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the cost of the audit for millennium compliance purposes of the computer systems used in container ships, and at container ports and freight depots. [49449]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is very concerned about the issue of millennium compliance and has brought it to the attention of the UK shipping and ports industries through their respective trade associations.

I am aware that the Chamber of Shipping has issued advice to its members, and that the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) has also published guidance on the need to identify and test critical equipment and systems. Operators are also being advised to develop operational arrangements to mitigate the effect of any system failure.

Of course, any audit of computer systems for millennium compliance purposes would be a matter for individual companies. We therefore do not have any information on the likely costs of such an exercise.

DEFENCE

Nerve Agent Pre-treatment Sets

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 164–65, on nerve agent pre-treatment sets, how many of the tablets manufactured by Roche Products Ltd were used during Operation Granby. [48332]

Dr. Reid: The Ministry of Defence has no information on the quantity, if any, of Nerve Agent Pre-treatment Set (NAPS) tablets manufactured by Roche Products Ltd. which were used by UK forces during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict. However, as my written answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 164–65, explained, MOD let a contract to Duphar BV in July 1988 to replace MOD's holding of Roche tablets; the Duphar tablets were delivered to MOD in February 1989 and distributed to units by August 1989. We therefore believe that the NAPS tablets used during the Gulf conflict were drawn principally, possibly exclusively, from stocks of the Duphar tablets.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 164–65, on nerve agent pre-treatment sets, if samples of the tablets manufactured by (a) Roche Products Ltd. and (b) Duphar BV, were tested again to determine suitability for use between 1990 and 1995. [48331]

Dr. Reid: Samples from the batch of Nerve Agent Pre-treatment Sets (NAPS) tablets manufactured by Duphar BV in January 1989 were analysed at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) (now known as the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency) at Porton Down in September 1994 and October 1995. In addition, samples from the batch of tablets produced by Duphar BV in February 1991 were tested by CBDE in December 1992. All of these tests found the tablets' mean Pyridostigmine Bromide content to be within the limits set by the United States and British Pharmacopoeiae (USP and BP).

Other than the tests conducted by CBD (then the Chemical Defence Establishment (CDE)) in October 1990, to which I referred in my written answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 164–65, the Ministry of Defence is not aware of any other occasion on which the tablets produced by Roche in 1982 and 1983 were tested.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, columns 7–8, (1) how many staff are currently signed off work for sickness at Porton Down; how many have been signed off for more than a month; and how these figures compare to the average for the last 15 years; [49142]

(2) what health monitoring of staff has taken place at Porton Down in the last 15 years; and what are the results of the monitoring; [49138]

(3) how many staff have left employment at Porton Down for health reasons in the last 15 years; [49140]

(4) how many staff at Porton Down have received inoculations and vaccinations as part of their normal safety regime in the last 15 years; what were the inoculations and vaccinations; and for what specific purpose; [49141]

(5) how many people have retired on health grounds from employment at Porton Down in the last 15 years; [49139]

(6) how many people have been employed at Porton Down in each of the last 15 years; and of these how many were employed on work which required such vaccination. [49143]

Mr. Spellar: These are matters for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 10 July 1998:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Defence to reply to your questions about the health monitoring and vaccination programmes of staff employed in the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) based at Porton Down. The following paragraphs address the areas raised in your six questions.

CBD has an occupational health service on site which routinely monitors the health of its staff. The results of such monitoring are "Restricted—Medical in Confidence".

A proportion of staff, because of the nature of their research work, receive inoculations and vaccinations in accordance with the guidelines recommended by the Advisory Committee for Dangerous Pathogens. Members of staff at CBD only receive such vaccinations if they are working or are intending to work with a pathogenic organism, or to meet recommendations/requirements for overseas travel in connection with their work.

Last year, 130 members of staff received such vaccinations. The research at CBD includes the development of protective measures for the UK Armed Forces against potential biological warfare agents, and I will not disclose full details of the vaccinations under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. However, I can confirm that these vaccinations include those against plague and anthrax. Details of the numbers of staff who have received vaccinations and the numbers employed on work which has required vaccinations in each of the last fifteen years could only be obtained by examining the individual medical records of all members of staff for that period and would involve disproportionate effort.

Members of the occupational health team are vaccinated in accordance with Department of Health guidelines.

You also asked about staff on sick leave and those who have retired or left for health reasons. There are currently some 600 staff in CBD Sector at Porton Down. On Monday 29 June 1998 eleven staff were on sick leave and, of those, six have been "signed off" for more than one month. Records show that twenty seven members of staff have retired from or left employment at CBD on health grounds over the last ten years. The format of our records is such that I am unable to readily provide the information as requested.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Bilderberg Meeting, Turnberry

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what mode of transport he used to attend the recent Bilderberg meeting at Turnberry; and what was the cost to public funds. [46988]

Mr. George Robertson: I flew to Scotland on Friday 14 May in an aircraft of the RAF Communications Fleet, accompanied by the Secretary General of NATO, Snr. Solana. I left the following day in an Army helicopter for a further official engagement. The estimated value of the use of Departmental assets for these flights is £3,840.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. ## CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

One-estate Election

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he will implement to safeguard the interests of those who maintain historic houses open to the public against the effect of the withdrawal of one-estate election. [47225]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce any specific measures in respect of those privately owned historic houses that may be subject to the withdrawal of One-Estate Election (OEE) in April 2001. Treasury Ministers are aware of the concerns about the repeal of OEE. Such matters of taxation policy are for Treasury Ministers.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Paymaster General concerning the ending of one-estate election; and if he will make a statement. [47202]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has exchanged views on One-Estate Election with the Paymaster General and the Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

Lobbyists

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when (i) he, (ii) his Ministers and (iii) his special advisers have met representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at these meetings. [49661]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, the Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. ### UK Sports Institute

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans have been developed to date for the provision of services for disabled sportsmen and women within the UK Sports Institute; and what representations he has received from disability organisations on the UK Sports Institute. [49207]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 8 July 1998]: The UK Sports Institute will provide first class facilities for a range of Olympic and other non-commercial sports for our best disabled sportsmen and women, alongside those for the able bodies.

A briefing meeting was recently held with the British Paralympic Association (BPA) to discuss their requirements for facilities and services at the Institute. The BPA Technical Director, and a seconded UK Sports Council project officer for disability sport, are members of the technical services team with responsibility for taking these issues forward.

Lyric Theatre

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what support was provided to Sir Richard Eyre by his Department for the preparation of his report on lyric theatre in London; [49528]

(2) how many officials from his Department worked on Sir Richard Eyre's report on lyric theatre in London; and what assistance they gave. [49529]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Sir Richard Eyre and his working group were provided with secretariat support by three officials from my Department. In addition, one official and my special adviser were members of the working group. My Department also made arrangements for the report to be published and launched. The contents of the report were entirely Sir Richard's.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions have taken place between representatives of the Sports Council and the British Athletics Federation about the need for an athletics track as part of the new English National Stadium at Wembley. [49801]

Mr. Banks: The British Athletics Federation were fully involved in the selection process for the National Stadium and in defining the requirements for the project. Further discussions with the athletics governing body will take place as the design brief is prepared to discuss proposals for athletics facilities.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the Adjournment debate of 29 June 1998, Official Report, columns 126–30, on Wembley Stadium, when he plans to respond to the questions raised by the hon. Members for Brent, North and Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe). [49800]

Mr. Banks: I am pleased to confirm that I wrote to my hon. Friends the Members for Brent, North and for Bradford, South on 9 July.

Copies of my replies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Sporting Achievement

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support he will give to outstanding sportsmen and sportswomen from the Eastern Region. [49634]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 9 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 16 December 1997, Official Report, column 77, that Sheffield was the successful consortium chosen to run and manage the United Kingdom Sports Institute Headquarters. Alongside the HQ there will be a regional network which will provide first class facilities for a range of Olympic and other non-commercial sports for our very best sportsmen and women.

The Home Country Sports Councils have been tasked by Ministers to identify prospective regional centres. The English Sports Council (ESC) have looked very carefully at the siting of the Centres in England and have taken into account many factors including existing facilities, population and transport. They are aware that there are a couple of areas where the location of the Regional Centre is not so obvious or easy; however, that does not mean that the question of a Centre in that area is to be shelved. The ESC have therefore concentrated on finding a solution so that all our elite athletes, wherever they live, will have access to the best training and support services.

I have received the ESC's recommendations, but they will need careful consideration and discussion before any decision and announcement are made.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum and Immigration Appeals

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results of the review of asylum and immigration appeals. [50528]

Mr. Straw: I will publish a consultation paper on the review of asylum and immigration appeals at 10.00 am on Monday 13 July. A copy of the consultation paper will be placed in the Library.

Police (Entry and Seizure Powers)

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has given to the Metropolitan Police Commissioner on the exercise in London of the powers available under Section 61 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. [49495]

Mr. Michael: The decision whether or not to use the powers available under section 61 is an operational one for the Commissioner.

No guidance has been given specifically to the Commissioner. However, Home Office Circular 45/1994, was issued to all Chief Officers. This draws their attention to an undertaking made, by the then Government, during the passage of the Bill through Parliament:

"The decision whether or not to issue a direction to leave is an operational one for the police alone to take in the light of all the circumstances of the particular case. But in making his decision, the senior officer at the scene may wish to take account of the personal circumstances of the trespassers; for example, the presence of elderly persons, invalids, pregnant women, children and other persons whose well-being may be jeopardised by a precipitate move".

The Metropolitan Police issued guidance to their officers in a written notice on 11 August 1995 which contains the following points:

"The powers under section 61 are discretionary.

The type of land. It may be more appropriate to use the powers where trespassers "invade" a person's front garden than if they are camping on derelict land.

The length of time that the trespassers have been on the land. It will be much less appropriate to use the powers if the trespassers have been on the land for several weeks than if they have just arrived.

Policing problems which arise from the presence of the trespassers on the land, namely public disorder, crime or obstruction of the highway (bearing in mind that the offence does not relate to the highway). Good policing reasons for moving the trespassers may well be valid.

It should be borne in mind that the use of the power under the Act may have the effect only of moving the problem to a different site. Indeed it could make matters worse.

The police should not usurp the functions of the civil course. The use of the powers under section 61 are not appropriate where there may be a genuine dispute as to the right to the possession of the land. In such a case, the matter should be left to the civil courts to determine in the normal way.

The officers should certainly consider the effect of a direction to leave land. If the trespassers comply with the direction, the use of it may well be successful. However, if they do not comply the officer should consider what steps it is proposed to take.

It may not be practical to arrest all the trespassers, there may well be children or animals involved. Arresting adults may mean that provision will have to be made for the care of children or animals. Furthermore, arresting large numbers could lead to major disorder with the resulting problems that that would cause.

If it is decided to arrest some or a large number of the trespassers, consideration should be given as to what will happen to vehicles and other property. It must be remembered that some of these vehicles will be used as homes by the trespassers.

Even though section 62 provides a power to remove the vehicles they have to be put somewhere. It would seem undesirable that police stations yards or car pounds should be turned into encampments for travellers or gipsies".

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49770]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and task forces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49783]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today, Official Report, columns 641-42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings or other contacts (i) he, (ii) his Ministers and (iii) his special advisers and officials have had with representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; and what were the dates of such meetings or contacts, the names of the people involved and the subject matter of such exchanges. [49735]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to reduce the chances of cross-pollination between genetically modified crops and organic crops. [49434]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 July 1998]: There are no specific requirements under the current legislation controlling the release of genetically modified organisms to consider organic farming when field testing genetically modified crops. However, where needed, release consents have specific measures attached that are designed to limit the cross-pollination of neighbouring crops whether they are organic or not.

I am aware of the concerns raised by organic farmers in connection with the planting of GM crops and I have asked my officials to explore with DETR, the farming community and organic standards representatives how these can be addressed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lobbyists

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when (i) she, (ii) her Ministers and (iii) her special advisers met representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at these meetings. [49662]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed; one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

"Partnership for Equality"

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has come to a decision on any of the proposals in the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" on which views were invited. [50527]

Mr. Worthington: When the White Paper was published, written comments were invited by 12 June on issues where the Government had not yet made a final decision, or where there were detailed matters to be decided, consequent on a decision in principle. The Government have given urgent consideration to two of these issues—a proposal to create a statutory obligation on the public sector to promote equality of opportunity and the proposal to create a unified Equality Commission. In response to comments received on the proposed statutory equality obligation, it is proposed to set out the requirements on public bodies in more detail in forthcoming legislation, particularly in terms of consultation with outside bodies and the provision of information. The Government have also considered carefully the concerns expressed by a number of respondents on the proposal to bring together the existing statutory equality bodies in a unified Commission. They have decided to proceed with this proposal, while taking steps to ensure that the ethos of the current bodies and the advances which they have made are protected within the new framework, and that all dimensions of equality are given due attention in the new Commission's work. Discussions will take place with the existing statutory equality bodies on the structures of a new Commission. A briefing document, giving further details of changes made to the original proposals, has been placed in the Parliamentary Libraries.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and task forces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49767]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what dates (i) she,(ii) her Ministers and (iii) her special advisers have met representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at these meetings. [49569]

Clare Short: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. ## SCOTLAND

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49082]

Mr. McLeish: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. Guidelines were last issued to Scottish Office staff in January 1997. The implementation of the guidelines is monitored by Departmental Management Boards.

The Scottish Office is making full use of consultation and research projects to identify the impact of policies on women. In October 1997 I published a consultation document entitled "Reaching Women in Scotland" which I followed up with a conference on 24 April 1998 to which all responding organisations were invited. The outcome of the consultation is the establishment of the Women in Scotland Consultative Forum which will meet with me at least twice a year. The first meeting will take place on 20 November.

I have also spoken individually to a number of women's organisations and groups and intend to continue to do so.

The Scottish Office appointed a Women's Issues Research Consultant in April 1998. Her remit is to prepare a database of women's organisations and to advise on the best ways of keeping women informed and enabling them to express their views about the development of policy in Scotland. She will also advise on policy priorities and identify opportunities for further research.

Lobbyists

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings (i) he and (ii) his Ministers have held since 1 May 1997 with representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations; and if he will make a statement. [49700]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. ### Inward Investment

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new jobs he estimates were created by inward investment into Scotland in 1997–98. [49791]

Mr. Wilson: Many of the inward investment projects attracted to Scotland in 1997–98 will be implemented over a period of years and the creation of the new jobs associated with them will be phased accordingly. Figures published in the Locate in Scotland Annual Review for 1997–98 show that during that year Locate in Scotland and The Scottish Office helped to attract to Scotland 87 inward investment projects which, if fully implemented, will lead to the creation of 14,524 new jobs and the safeguarding of 3,423 existing jobs. Additionally, we are aware of a further 18 projects involving the planned creation of 850 jobs but in which neither Locate in Scotland nor The Scottish Office had any direct involvement.

The figures are based on the employment forecasts made by companies at the time of the decision to invest. Some projects may subsequently be reduced in scale as a result of changes in the commercial environment. Equally, however, some projects may lead to more investment and more jobs than originally anticipated; and the figures take no account of the substantial number of new jobs created indirectly in supplier companies. Experience over a number of years indicates that, on average, around two-thirds of planned direct jobs are created.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49777]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what occasions (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn or (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at the meetings. ### Inflation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the current sterling exchange rate on inflation in the United Kingdom. [49615]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor of the Exchequer agrees with comments made by the Monetary Policy Committee in its May Inflation Report that

"the lagged effect of sterling's rise on import prices is exerting downward pressure on UK inflation".

Interest Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect of the increase in short-term interest rates since May 1997 on (a) the RPI, (b) wages and salary negotiations and (c) house prices. [49626]

Mrs. Liddell: Increases in short-term interest rates since May 1997 will return underlying retail price inflation towards target. Rising interest rates will temporarily boost headline RPI inflation because the headline measure includes mortgage interest payments, but this effect unwinds after a year.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49095]

Mrs. Liddell: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual Departments.

Within the Treasury use has been made of consultation and micro-simulation modelling in order to identify the impact of policy upon women. Officials had a number of meetings with members of the Women's Budget Group in the run-up to the March 1998 Budget.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contingency plans her Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when she expects them to be in place, and tested; and if she will make a statement. [48838]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All compliance activity on Departmental systems has been phased to ensure that they are dealt with in priority order relative to their importance to the Department's business.

The major systems (which are key to the payment of benefits and pensions) are designed to hold dates in a format unaffected by the turn of the century. The Department is on target against its published plans to achieve year 2000 compliance of these systems, and expects all will be confirmed as compliant before the end of 1998. The first part of our contingency is that this allows for a full year's running before 2000.

The Department expects to complete the programme of work to upgrade or replace business critical desktop computer systems by the end of March 1999. This target allows adequate contingency before the dates these systems might otherwise fail.

We have a range of plans to support the continuity of Social Security operations and are working closely with the Central IT Unit, other departments and Action 2000 to identify and if necessary deal with specific Year 2000 related threats. It is anticipated that all work on business continuity will be complete by March 1999. However, even beyond this date, we will continue to assess the potential impact of residual risks arising from external factors, over which we have no direct control e.g. electricity supply: for Year 2000 we will continue to update plans and if necessary to take action as more and better intelligence becomes available.

Elderly People

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of retired households in Gloucestershire, by district, rely on social security for 50 per cent. or more of their income. [49256]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available as neither the Family Expenditure Survey nor the Family Resources Survey provides specific information for the geographical area requested.

Lobbyists

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what occasions (a) she, (b) her Ministers and (c) her Department's special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed. [49674]

Mr. Field [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. [49765]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from the Prime Minister today, Official Report, columns 641–42.

Correspondence

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she proposes to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside of 10 April originally sent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and transferred to her on 1 May. [49764]

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to reply to the letter of 9 June from the hon. Member for Totnes, providing further information about Malcolm Boyd of Thornhill, Ashburton, South Devon, with regard to his eligibility for jobseeker's allowance. [49799]

Mr. Field: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend and to the hon. Member on Thursday 9 July 1998.

Ministerial Engagements

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list her engagements and those of the Under-Secretary of State for Women for 29 June. [50003]

Ms Harman: I was undertaking Departmental business in Richmond House.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women had Departmental engagements in Bristol and Taunton all day.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures she is taking to discourage car use on departmental business by his Department's employees. [50045]

Mr. Denham: Departmental instructions permit the use of cars only when all other forms of transport have been considered and they deliver the best value for money solution.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current annual energy consumption of her Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans she has to include energy efficiency performance figures in her Department's annual report. [50029]

Mr. Denham: The energy consumption for the Department in 1996–97 was 574 million kWh. Figures for 1997–98 will be finalised in September.

Following the PRIME initiative, which transferred the ownership of the Department's estate on 1 April 1998, all building related services are now provided to the Department by the private sector consortium PPM. These services include energy management.

PPM have appointed a National Utilities Efficiency Manager. They are working with the Department to devise initiatives, and to implement innovative techniques, to optimise energy consumption and are acting on our behalf to procure energy supplies cost effectively. PPM are expected to invest in spend to save projects and are currently re-tendering electricity contracts to maximise the opportunities available from the expanded and deregulated utilities market. Consumption targets are to be agreed with the Department and both sides will be incentivised to make savings by reducing energy usage. All energy consumption will be monitored and site specific monthly, quarterly and annual reports will help to identify trends and good practice.

The Social Security Departmental Report 1998–99, Cm 3913, includes a section on Environmental Issues, which details the Department's contribution to the programme to reduce government impact on the environment. The section includes the results of a six-month pilot to introduce an in-line fuel catalyst to the Department's fleet of 3,500 vehicles. The results showed improvements of more than 60 per cent. overall in toxic emissions and a 7 per cent. increase in miles per gallon due to the more efficient combustion.

We will consider including further details of energy efficiency initiatives and performance in future Reports.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) disabled people and (b) people whose main disabling condition is deafness were awarded disability living allowance (i) between 1 June 1996 and 31 May 1997 and (ii) since June 1997 (1) on their initial application, (2) at review and (3) at appeal. [49797]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Awards of Disability Living Allowance

| Awards | 1 June 1996 to 31 May 1997 | | 1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998 | |

HEALTH

Avon Health Authority

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 June 1998, Official Report, column 139, if he will set out the conclusions of his officials' examination of Avon Health Authority's policy on beta interferon; and if he will make a statement on the action which follows from that examination. [49273]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Health authorities determine their priorities in the light of evidence about the clinical and cost-effectiveness of treatments, but there must be flexibility for them to consider individual exceptional cases on their merits. The Government want to see fairer access to quality services.

Avon Health Authority most recently considered the issue of beta interferon at its meeting on 30 April 1998. The authority decided, after reviewing relevant evidence, that it would not provide specific funding for the drug on the ground that there is insufficient evidence to support such a decision. Clinicians and trusts are however free to prescribe the drug within existing resources. The decision was widely publicised and the authority indicated its intention to review the position on receipt of further evidence.

Officials are following up the matter with Avon Health Authority to ensure that their most recent decision conforms with Government policy.

Health Authorities (Legal Direction)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 386, if he will give the date prior to 1998 on which a Secretary of State for Health last issued a legal direction to a health authority to withdraw a public consultation document. [50044]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally.

Salford and Trafford Health Authority

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received from Trafford CHC relating to his decision to direct the Salford and Trafford Health Authority to withdraw its consultation on children's services; [50007]

(2) what plans he has to provide additional funding to safeguard the future of the children's ward at Trafford General Hospital. [50006]

Mr. Milburn: Salford and Trafford Health Authority is already funding the children's services at Trafford General Hospital and will continue to do so. We have received no such representations from Trafford Community Health Council.

Infertility Services

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue guidelines on infertility services. [50071]

Ms Jowell: Clinical guidelines on infertility are currently being revised by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. The first two sets of clinical guidelines, which deal with primary care and local specialist services, should be available in August. The final set, which deals with the most specialised tertiary-level infertility services, will be available in early 1999.

Correspondence

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside of 27 March and 22 May. [49763]

Ms Jowell: I regret there is no trace of these letters having been received in the Department. If my hon. Friend will arrange for copies to be sent to me I shall ensure they receive urgent attention.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49766]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today, Official Report, columns 641–42.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what occasions (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at these meetings. [49761]

Ms Jowell: Ministers, their special advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of special advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety; for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what responses have been received to the consultation paper, Unification of the Stipendiary Bench, published on 1 April. [50428]

Mr. Hoon: 54 responses have been received. I have today placed a summary of the responses in the Libraries of both Houses.

Official Residence

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many nights the Lord Chancellor has spent in his official residence since the refurbishments were completed. [49786]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor and Lady Irvine moved into the Official Residence on 27 April 1998. They usually stay in the Residence on weekday evenings, returning to their home in London for weekends.

Asylum Appeals

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of full-time and part-time special adjudicators employed by the Immigration Appellate Authority to hear and determine asylum appeals (a) currently, (b) on 1 January 1997, (c) on 1 January 1995 and (d) at the time the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 came into force. [49165]

Mr. Hoon: The number of special adjudicators are as follows:

(a) currently there are 37 full-time and 118 part-time adjudicators, (b) on 1 January 1997 there were 32 full-time and 85 part-time adjudicators, (c) on 1 January 1995 there were 21 full-time and 23 part-time adjudicators and (d) at the time the Act came into force there were 9 full-time and 6 part-time adjudicators.

Bar Pupillages

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps his Department is planning to ensure that there is an increase in the number of pupillages available at the private bar. [49074]

Mr. Hoon: Barristers are part of an independent and self-regulating profession. The number of pupillages available at the private Bar is a matter for the profession itself.

Contact Orders

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women were sent to prison in each of the last three years for refusing to allow an estranged partner access to their children under a contact order. [48941]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not held centrally. Although there is provision for either party to be committed for non compliance with a contact order, no historical data are kept. Each individual case record would need to be searched and the information could, therefore, be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of applications for contact orders from estranged fathers were (a) turned down and (b) turned down on grounds of a history of physical or sexual abuse in the last year for which figures are available. [48942]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not held centrally. Although details of the number of refused contact applications can be obtained, the information is not broken down. Each individual case record would need to be searched and the information could, therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what sanctions the courts may impose on (a) a parent with care and (b) an estranged parent who breaks the terms of a contact order. [48940]

Mr. Hoon: In cases where a parent with care or an estranged parent breaks the terms of a contact order, the court may enforce the order by an injunction. Where an undertaking by a party is incorporated in an order of the court that may also be enforced in the same way. Ultimately, the failure to comply with a defined contact order can amount to contempt of court, for which the penalty can be a fine or committal to prison. Imprisonment is a last resort, although in some cases the threat of it can be as effective.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what training is available for judges and magistrates to assist them in their understanding of cases involving (a) domestic violence and (b) contact orders. [48971]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB) which is a non-departmental government body. The JSB also sets the syllabuses for and monitors and evaluates the training of lay magistrates.

In 1997 all District Judges attended a seminar on their new powers in relation to domestic violence under Part IV of the Family Law Act 1996. Domestic violence is included in JSB Continuation Seminars for Circuit Judges, Recorders and Assistant Recorders, private Family Law Induction and Continuation seminars attended by judiciary nominated to hear private family law cases and District Judges Continuation seminars. Domestic violence is covered in the training for lay magistrates who sit in family panels. It is also included in the Equal Treatment Training Pack recently produced by the JSB.

Contact orders are addressed at JSB Private Family Law Induction and Continuation seminars, and at Public Law Continuation Seminars attended by Circuit Judges nominated for private and public family law proceedings, Deputy High Court Judges, District Judges of the Principal Registry of the Family Division and District Judges nominated for Public Family Law Proceedings. Lay magistrates on family panels also receive training on contact orders.

Lobbyists

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the meetings (a) Ministers and (b) special advisers in his Department have had with lobbying companies since 1 May 1997. [49667]

Mr. Hoon: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of government to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and task forces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49780]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49097]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department has not had any major policy legislation in the current session. More generally, guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. Within this Department we are increasingly using consultation and research to identify the impact of our policies generally, and are working to secure more disaggregated statistics as our information systems are developed further.

Nuclear Industry (Commercial Confidentiality)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the impact of the proposals contained in his Freedom of Information White Paper on commercial confidentiality within the nuclear industry. [48973]

Dr. David Clark: The Freedom of Information White Paper, Your Right to Know, set out our approach to freedom of information across a wide range of public authorities, including nationalised industries, public corporations and non-departmental public bodies. The White Paper also made it clear that commercial confidentiality is one of the proposed specified interests to which the substantial harm test will be applied in determining whether information should be disclosed. I intend to publish a draft FOI Bill by the end of September which will make clearer the exact coverage of the regime and its operation. However, at this stage it is not possible to predict the effect that the proposals will have on one of the specified interests within a particular industry.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49772]

Dr. David Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

CABINET OFFICE

Lobbyists

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister without Portfolio on what dates since 1 May 1997 he has met representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations; and if he will make a statement. [49675]

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) when (i) he and (ii) his special advisers have met representatives of (a) GPC Market Access, (b) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (c) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at these meetings; [49660]

(2) what discussions he had with representatives of Lawson, Lucas Mendelsohn in respect of Tesco's involvement in the Millennium Dome. [49962]

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what dealings, in pursuance of his ministerial responsibilities, he has had with lobbying organisations over the last 6 months; and if he will make a statement. [49878]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. Mr. Mandelson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Derek Draper

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister without Portfolio on how many occasions he has received draft articles written by Mr. Derek Draper for scrutiny prior to their publication in the press since 1 May 1997. [50070]

Mr. Mandelson: None.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when, in pursuance of his ministerial responsibilities, he last met Mr. Derek Draper. [49879]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today, Official Report, columns 641–42, to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin).

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Lobbyists

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what occasions (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who attended such meetings; and what was discussed at them. [49632]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside of Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. ### Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the timetable for the review of the exemption of small employers under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [50026]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Section 7 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 requires that a review of the effects of the small employer exemption threshold must be completed within 9 months. I announced such a review on 3 December 1997, Official Report, column 243. We have been analysing the responses to the public consultation exercise which ended on 2 March 1998 and hope to announce a decision shortly. Any change to the threshold has to be made within one year of the review commencing.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list by Government department the timetables for the auditing activity undertaken in connection with Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; [50027]

(2) if he will publish the areas covered by disability access audits of Government department buildings. [50028]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Discrimination Act does not place a specific duty on service providers to conduct disability access audits of their premises. Access audits are, however, in many cases highly effective means of helping service providers to ensure that their premises comply with the requirements of the Act. Government departments have been made aware of the benefits of conducting audits and future guidance to them on implementing the remaining provisions of Part III of the Act will re-emphasise this advice.

The specific information requested is not held centrally and, since Government departments and agencies occupy many tens of thousands of premises, could be collected only at disproportionate cost. However, as I described in my reply to the hon. Member on 6 July 1998, Official Report, columns 391–99, departments are well aware of their duties under the legislation and are pressing ahead, in a variety of ways reflecting their particular circumstances, to ensure that they meet the provisions of the Act including those on premises.

School Records

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow parents to appeal in respect of information held on their child's record by a school. [49798]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Education (School Records) Regulations 1989 provide for parents to appeal to the governing body if a teacher refuses to amend any part of the child's record which the parent regards as inaccurate.

Schools (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which schools in Essex are to be funded as beacon schools. [49957]

Mr. Byers: Subject to the agreement of contracts with DfEE, the following schools in Essex will be funded as beacon schools from September 1998:

Davenant Foundation School, Loughton;

Parkland Junior School, Romford; and William Ford C. of E. School, Dagenham.

Education Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what (a) percentage and (b) amount was allocated to education through the standard spending assessment for area cost adjustment, in each of those authorities that received it in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1995–96. [49113]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information is not available in the form in which it has been requested.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the current percentage of education standing spending assessment allocated to additional educational needs; [49114]

(2) what sum would be released if the additional educational needs expenditure was reduced by 4.7 per cent. for those authorities coming above the national county average per pupil allocation under standing spending assessment; [49115]

(3) what would be the impact on each local education authority if the additional educational needs expenditure was reduced by 4.7 per cent. for all those authorities above the national county average for per pupil allocation under standard spending assessment, and redistributed to those below the national county average, on the basis of a per pupil funding; [49116]

(4) by what percentage the additional educational needs expenditure would have to be reduced for authorities above the present average if those authorities below were to be brought up to the existing average for pupil allocations. [49117]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Table 1 sets out the percentage of each of the five education SSA sub-blocks which is allocated on the basis of additional educational needs (AEN). The other information is not available in the form in which it has been requested.

Table 1

| SSA sub-block | AEN cash (£ billion) | AEN (per cent.) |
|---|---|---|
| Primary | 1.291 | 15.7 |
| Secondary | 1.277 | 15.7 |
| Post-16 | 0.188 | 16.5 |
| Under fives | 0.427 | 36.4 |
| Other | 0.417 | 58.3 |
| Total | 3.601 | 18.6 |

Schools (Parents' Meetings)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) grant maintained and (b) local education authority secondary schools have held (i) compulsory annual parents' meetings and (ii) parents' evenings during OFSTED inspections at which the attendance was (1) zero, (2) zero to five, (3) five to 10, (4) 11 to 20, (5) 21 to 50 and (6) 51 and over. [49687]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is not held centrally.

Teachers (Status)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to improve the status of teachers. [48165]

Ms Estelle Morris: The support of well-motivated and talented teachers is central to our drive to raise standards in schools. We must, and do, take every opportunity to acknowledge the professionalism of good teachers and the contribution they make to schools.

The measures we set out in our January response to the Select Committee report on teacher supply will raise the status of teachers: the General Teaching Council will provide a unified voice for the profession; and new curricula for initial teacher training courses, national professional standards, a mandatory induction year, and a new grade of Advanced Skills Teachers will enhance professionalism.

The Teacher Training Agency's campaign, No-one Forgets a Good Teacher, aims to raise public awareness of the vital contribution that teachers make to the continued prosperity and success of the nation. Since the launch of the campaign, the TTA's inquiry line has received some 76,000 calls, an average of 2,066 a week.

The National Teaching Awards, which were launched last month under the Chairmanship of The Lord Puttnam, will also help raise the status of teaching.

Schools (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money local education authority schools in Gloucestershire have held in reserves (a) as a total amount and (b) as a percentage of the total available to be spent on schools, for the most recent five years for which records are available. [50067]

Mr. Byers: The table shows the amount held as balances by LEA schools in Gloucestershire for each of the financial years 1993–94, 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 both in cash terms and as a percentage of the General Schools Budget. Information on the position at the end of the financial year 1997–98 will not be available centrally until local education authorities publish their outturn statements in the Autumn. I will write to the hon. Member when those figures are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Gloucestershire LEA—net school balances

| | Balances (£000) | GSB (£000) | Balances as percentage of GSB |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 6,240 | 117,285 | 5.32 |
| 1994–95 | 6,743 | 117,023 | 5.76 |
| 1995–96 | 4,990 | 111,503 | 4.48 |
| 1996–97 | 4,626 | 115,309 | 4.01 |

Foreign Language Teaching

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the proportion of primary schools that offer foreign language teaching. [49276]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not collect this information, but a survey conducted in 1995 by the Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research suggested that about 20 per cent. of primary schools offered foreign language teaching. The Centre intends to conduct a further survey later this year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomats

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list diplomatic posts abroad together with the number of his Department's staff in each on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) 24 June 1998. [48203]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The following is the list of FCO Posts overseas giving the number of UK-based staff on the FCO establishment for the dates requested. FCO staff in the Department Territories are listed separately.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in this session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49096]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The FCO has introduced three pieces of legislation in the current session: to implement the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, the Treaty of Amsterdam and the Ottawa Convention on Landmines. These implement internationally negotiated treaties in the United Kingdom.

Women's groups were not consulted in the preparation of the UK legislation.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had, and with whom, on the negotiations for Cyprus's accession to the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [49489]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is in regular contact with our EU partners, the Government of Cyprus and the European Commission on the negotiations for Cyprus's accession to the European Union.

Nuclear Industry

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, following the recent Indian and Pakistan nuclear tests, there has been a change of policy on nuclear-related exports to India and Pakistan, and on contacts between British nuclear industry officials and their Indian and Pakistani counterparts. [50568]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK already has in place strict controls on the export of nuclear-related goods to India and Pakistan, and we do not believe there is a loophole in the existing controls. The UK also exercises caution over contacts between personnel from the British nuclear industry and their Indian and Pakistani counterparts. However, following the recent Indian and Pakistani nuclear tests we have decided that it is appropriate to introduce some additional measures.

All export licence applications (ELAs) for items listed on the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) Dual-Use List will be denied to nuclear and nuclear-related end-users in India and Pakistan, as will all other goods to these end-users which could contribute to the Indian and Pakistani nuclear programmes. This will mean that some amendments will be required to existing open general export licences, which will be made in due course.

All contacts by British nuclear scientists or nuclear industry personnel with Indian and Pakistani counterparts will be discouraged, and all visits by Indians or Pakistanis to UK nuclear facilities will be prevented.

As the recent actions by both countries have demonstrated a lack of commitment to the principles of non-proliferation, and have adversely affected regional stability, we will consider all export licence applications concerning either country with particular vigilance.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those individuals who are not hon. Members or civil servants currently serving on review bodies and taskforces set up since May 1997 whose appointment was promoted or canvassed for by (a) GPC Market Access, (b) LLM, (c) GJW and (d) other professional lobbying organisations. [49775]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today, Official Report, columns 641–42, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed. [49672]

Mr. Fatchett: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 315

SESSION 1997–98

29th June—10th July 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
